This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. ¶ 1. Infancy is a personal privilege of which none but the infant can take advantage while he lives.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 58 Mich. 238.

¶ 2. The infancy of the vendee in a land contract may be a reason for refusing specific performance sought by his assignee against the vendor.—Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

¶ 3. An infant's voidable contract is valid as to third parties who do not claim under either party, and wrongdoers cannot set up the infant's incapacity as a defense.—Holmes v. Rice, 45 Mich. 142.

¶ 4. An infant's license to remove timber is void and is no defense to an action of trespass for doing it.—Richey v. Brown, 58 Mich. 435.

§ 2. Capacity to appoint agents or attorneys or ratify their acts.

Agency agreements, see post § 24.
Power of parent to engage attorney for infant son, see also post ¶ 55.

¶ 5. An infant cannot appoint an agent or attorney, or empower either to act for him.—Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124.

¶ 6. An infant cannot affirm what another has assumed to do in his name as an agent or attorney; he cannot ratify what he could not authorize.—Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124.

§ 3. Capacity to be estopped.

Estoppel to ratify or disaffirm, see post § 14.

¶ 7. Estoppels do not apply to infants.—Ryder v. Flanders, 30 Mich. 336; Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384; Rundle v. Spencer, 67 Mich. 189.

II. CUSTODY, PROTECTION AND SUPPORT.

Care and custody of infant children during pendency of suit for divorce of parents, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11426.

¶ 8. The protection of infancy is a substantial one and is not to be overcome by indirection.—Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124.

¶ 10. An infant will not be taken from the custody of persons with whom it was placed by a county agent upon being abandoned by its mother, and given into the custody of its guardian on his petition, where, notwithstanding the fact that the mother of the child had been declared an unfit person to have its custody, the guardian has left in her control an infant brother of the child, over whom he has the same rights of guardianship, and where there are other indications that he does not make the petition in good faith, but for the purpose of securing to himself the exclusive care, control, and education of the child.—In re Clancy, 108 Mich. 427.

§ 5. Allowance for support out of infant's estate.

¶ 12. Chancery has power on a proper original application to allow advancements from an accumulating fund when needed for the support of infant beneficiaries.—Knorr v. Millard, 52 Mich. 542; Knorr v. Millard, 57 Mich. 265.

III. PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCES.

A. IN GENERAL.

Transfers of personalty, see post § 7.
Ratification and avoidance of conveyances, see post §§ 9, 10.
Judicial supervision and sale, see post III, B.
Property rights between parent and child, see Parent and Child, IV.
Rights of minor children in homesteads, see Homesteads, VII.
Powers, duties and liabilities of guardians respecting infant ward's property, see Guardianship, III, A.
Jurisdiction of probate court to require representative to support infant distributees from trust funds, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 47.

¶ 13. A mortgage given by an infant feme covert, to secure the debt of her husband, is absolutely void, and not merely voidable.—Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217.

¶ 14. A mortgage on a homestead, executed by both husband and wife, is void where the wife is a minor.—Blanchard v. Mott, How. N. P. 126.

§ 7. ——Transfers of personalty.

¶ 15. An infant cannot be bound by a transfer of his property which cannot possibly be for his benefit—e. g., where he joined in a bill of sale executed by his father, conveying to defendant property owned by his father and himself to prevent seizure by the father's creditors—and an action may be brought at once by his next friend to recover the property from the unauthorized holder.—Bloomingdale v. Chittenden, 74 Mich. 698.

See also post ¶ 22.
Persons entitled to affirm or avoid, see post § 11.
Ratification of guardian's purchase or redemption, see post § 13.
What constitutes ratification or avoidance of contracts, see post §§ 29-31.
Effect of avoidance of deed to extinguish relation between infant grantor and grantee, see also Estoppel ¶ 47.

¶ 16. A minor's deed must be held affirmed by him unless he makes some claim to the conveyed premises within the period of forty years after he comes of age.—King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194.

¶ 17. A minor's deed is disaffirmed by his conveyance after majority to a third person.—Corbett v. Spencer, 63 Mich. 731.

¶ 18. A minor's deed is disaffirmed by his conveyance after majority to a third person, and entry by the grantee thereunder.—Prout v. Wiley, 28 Mich. 164.

¶ 19. Where one who had conveyed land during infancy deeded it to another on reaching majority, the later grantee can maintain ejectment against an occupant deriving title from the former grantee; the execution and record of the later deed are sufficient without making re-entry.—Haynes v. Bennett, 53 Mich. 15.

¶ 20. Infant's purchase-money mortgage may be ratified by silence and acquiescence for more than one year after reaching her majority.—Langdon v. Clayson, 75 Mich. 204.

¶ 21. Where land is conveyed and a mortgage taken back for the purchase money, the deed and mortgage together constitute but one transaction, and the title only passes by the deed subject to the mortgage. And where the grantee in such case is an infant, he may disaffirm the deed on coming of age, but by retaining the land he affirms the mortgage.—Young v. McKee, 13 Mich. 552.

¶ 22. An infant cannot ratify the purchase of land, after arriving at full age, by dealing with the title thus acquired as owner, without ratifying a mortgage given during his minority to secure a loan with which to pay off liens on the land which he had agreed to pay as a part of the purchase-price.—Langdon v. Clayson, 75 Mich. 204.

§ 10. ——Restitution or reimbursement of grantee for improvements.

Restitution of consideration as condition precedent to ratification of contract, see post § 28.

Conditions upon rescission generally, see Rescission, III.

¶ 23. The improvers of land by building on it after taking a deed from an infant's grantee are equitably entitled, on disaffirmance by the infant, to the cost of all improvements made by themselves and their grantors, and also of those made by their immediate grantees of the infant, if he should also disaffirm a purchase-money mortgage made by him covering such previous improvements.—Rundle v. Spencer, 67 Mich. 189.

§ 11. Persons entitled to affirm or avoid.

Ratification of contract of infant by his assignee, see also post ¶ 85.

¶ 24. A deed to a homestead by an administrator of a deceased husband passed no right to disaffirm mortgages given severally by the husband and his minor wife, as such right of disaffirmance rested in such minor.—Shreeves v. Caldwell, 135 Mich. 323.

¶ 25. A quit claim deed executed after the arrival of a minor at majority was not of itself an assertion of an intention to disaffirm mortgages executed by such infant during her minority; the deed having contained neither mention of the mortgages nor any express disaffirmance.—Shreeves v. Caldwell, 135 Mich. 323.

¶ 26. A conveyance by the guardian of a minor during her minority did not amount to a disaffirmance of the minor's mortgages in question, as such disaffirmance must have taken place after the attainment of majority.—Shreeves v. Caldwell, 135 Mich. 323.

¶ 26a. The recording law supplies the place of feoffment with livery of seizin, so that the making and recording of a deed by one who has come of age revokes a deed made during infancy, and renders unnecessary an entry before giving deed of avoidance (How. St., ch. 216, §§ 5652, 5657).—Haynes v. Bennett, 53 Mich. 15.

¶ 27. A minor seeking to take the benefit of the act of a guardian whose appointment was fraudulently secured, and who had redeemed the minor's lands from mortgage foreclosure, does not thereby ratify his appointment and acts as guardian.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

§ 14. Estoppel to ratify or disaffirm.

Capacity of infant to be estopped, see ante § 3.

Laches and limitation on actions to avoid conveyances, see post § 45.

Delay or acquiescence not amounting to estoppel, see also post ¶¶ 80, 81.

Acquiescence or delay constituting ratification or avoidance of contracts, see also post § 30.

Notice of facts preventing estoppel to avoid conveyance on ground of infancy, see also Estoppel ¶ 109.

Operation of minor's quit claim deed to estop grantee to get in tax titles, see Estoppel ¶ 20.

¶ 28. Plaintiffs, infant heirs, having, in 1883, joined with other heirs in a quitclaim, the purchaser under a foreclosure of the grantee's subsequent mortgage held possession nearly eight years, but no improvements were made, and plaintiffs, who reached their majority in 1884 and 1885, did nothing to affirm their deed. Held, that they were not estopped from bringing ejectment in 1893.—Donovan v. Ward, 100 Mich. 601.

¶ 29. An infant who had conveyed certain premises, and who knew or might have known that subsequent grantees were making improvements thereon, was not estopped from disaffirming his deed within six months after his majority though they had made them relying on his assurance that he was of age when he conveyed.—Rundle v. Spencer, 67 Mich. 189.

¶ 30. Where the title of certain plaintiffs in ejectment as heirs was sold at guardian's sale during their minority, they were held, in an action of ejectment, not estopped from setting it up against the purchaser by having accepted the proceeds of the sale, after coming of age, and with full knowledge of all the facts.—Ryder v. Flanders, 30 Mich. 336.

¶ 31. A ward on reaching his majority cannot ask to have a deed reformed when he has repudiated the transaction wherein his guardian took the deed in his behalf.—Rowley v. Towsley, 53 Mich. 329.

See also post ¶ 98.

Evidence in actions by and against infants, generally, see post § 47.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Evidence and presumptions as to election and waiver, see Election and Waiver § 18.

¶ 32. In an action for the recovery of lands sold by a guardian, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that he has commenced his action within the time allowed him by the statute after attaining his majority.—Stewart v. Ashley, 34 Mich. 188.

¶ 33. Where an infant had assigned a land contract made to him during minority his retention of the consideration for the assignment, and his quiescence for five months after coming of age, would not raise an inference of ratification, especially if he had been out of the state during most of the five months.—Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

B. JUDICIAL SUPERVISION AND SALE.

Rights of minor heirs in proceedings for the assignment of dower, see Dower § 40, ¶¶ 106, 107.
Representative's accounts involving rights of infants, see Estates of Decedents § 338.
Chancery proceedings for sale and conveyance of infants' lands, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 39 et seq; Comp. L. 1915, § 12693 et seq.
Proceedings relating to conveyance of lands of infants, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 39-54; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12693-12708.
Conveyance of lands held by way of mortgage or in trust, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 39, 40; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12693, 12694.
Proceedings for sale of infant's land, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 41-54; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12695-12708.
Accumulation of rents and profits for benefit of infants, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11557.
Partition proceedings on behalf of infants, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXI, §§ 13-15; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13270-13272.

¶ 34. If a court of chancery has acquired jurisdiction to sell an infant's land it will retain it to protect the infant's rights until the matter is finally disposed of, and may compel the purchaser to pay the amount agreed in cash, except so far as the court may have ordered otherwise.—In re Axtell Petition, 95 Mich. 244.

IV. CONTRACTS.

§ 17. In general; validity and effect.

Contracts for infant's services, see post §§ 19, 20.
Contracts of guardian, parent or relative for infant, see post § 21.
Contracts and settlements with guardians or parents, see post § 22.
Compromise and releases, see post § 23.
Partnership and agency agreements, see post § 24.
Promises of marriage, see post § 25.
Right to ratify or avoid, see post §§ 26-28.
What constitutes ratification or avoidance, see post §§ 29-32.
Effect of affirmance or avoidance, see post § 33.
Liability for breach of contract, see post § 34.
Enforcement or repudiation by courts during minority, see post § 35.

Contract rights between parent and child, see Parent and Child, IV.
Apprenticeship of infants, see Apprentices.
Father of infant son as real party to contract, see Contracts § 11.
Invalidity of mortgage given by infant feme covert, see Husband and Wife ¶ 458.
Validity of contract by infant for life, health or accident insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, Part III, chap. II, § 27.

¶ 35. Adults who contract with infants do so at their own risk, as they are bound by their contracts while infants are not.—Widrig v. Taggart, 51 Mich. 108.

¶ 36. The contract of a minor is voidable merely and not void.—Barr v. Packard Motor Car Co., 182 Mich. 612.

¶ 38. A contract to secure another's debt is not beneficial to an infant and is absolutely void.—Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217.

¶ 40. An infant's assignment for the benefit of creditors is not void but only voidable, and that only by the infant or some one in his right.—Soper v. Fry, 37 Mich. 236.

¶ 41. Minor heirs cannot become jointly liable with the administrator in an action of assumpsit for services rendered the estate by an attorney.—Rogers v. Heath, 48 Mich. 588.

¶ 42. A contract with and for the benefit of an infant, such as a contract for insurance, is not void but only voidable, and that at the infant's election.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 288.

§ 18. Contracts for necessaries, support or medical attendance.

Jury question as to what are "necessaries," see post ¶ 101.

¶ 43. A minor may bind himself by contract for necessaries, and such a contract, if reasonable, cannot when executed be repudiated by him.—Squier v. Hydliff, 9 Mich. 274.

¶ 44. An agreement with a minor to give him board, clothing and schooling in payment for his labor, if reasonable under all the circumstances, or not so unreasonable as to be evidence of fraud or undue advantage, cannot be repudiated by the minor after it has been executed.—Squier v. Hydliff, 9 Mich. 274.

¶ 45. A father owes a child the duty of providing medical attendance and care, but where he refuses or is unable to furnish it, a child may be liable for necessaries furnished it.—Harris v. Crawley, 161 Mich. 383.

¶ 46. An infant who was sued for the price of a horse sold to him showed that his sole business was to carry on his mother-in-law's farm for one-third of the produce, and that she was to furnish all the teams, tools and implements. Held, that this showed that the horse was not a "necessary" for which he was liable. And it was error to give the jury to understand that it was the necessity of the horse to the farming business, instead of to his part in it, that fixed his liability.—Wood v. Losey, 50 Mich. 475.

¶ 47. Whether a watch and chain is a necessity to an infant of the age of eighteen years, so as to bind him by an executed contract for their purchase at the price of $20, was submitted to the jury in this case, who found in the negative.—Welch v. Olmstead, 90 Mich. 492.

Implication of promise, see post § 20.
Statutory provisions regulating hours and conditions of infant's employment, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 5330-5332, 5592-5599.

¶ 48. When a minor has rendered services on an agreement or understanding that they are to be paid for, the person for whom they are done is under legal obligation to pay for them.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 49. An infant cannot repudiate an executed contract for his services, even though not exclusively for necessaries, if it was apparently fair and reasonable and the other party did not know of his infancy. But he can abandon the service when he pleases, or ask for new terms, and he is bound only so far as he executes the contract without dissent.—Spicer v. Earl, 41 Mich. 191.

¶ 50. A minor's written agreement to work another's land on shares does not make him a tenant of the land owner, but constitutes both tenants in common of the crops.—Loomis v. O'Neal, 73 Mich. 582.

General law of implied contract, see Implied Contracts.
Implication from services rendered by child for parent, see Implied Contracts § 11.

¶ 51. An infant adopted into a family can claim no compensation for services except by express agreement.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 52. Where an infant is taken into a family it is presumed that neither his support nor his services are to be paid for, except as the one recompenses the other.—Thorp v. Bateman, 37 Mich. 68.

§ 21. Contracts of guardian, parent or relative for infant.

Contract rights between parent and child, see Parent and Child, IV.
General law of guardianship, see Guardianship.
Contract powers of guardian in dealing for infant ward's estate, see Guardianship § 32.
Contract powers of guardian for infant ward, see Guardianship § 32.
Power or authority of next friend to bind infant by accord and satisfaction pursuant to which slander suit is dismissed, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 39.

¶ 53. An infant cannot be personally liable on a mortgage bond made by another as guardian.—Wood v. Truax, 39 Mich. 628.

¶ 54. A contract made by a father in his infant son's name, and without the knowledge of the son, is of no binding force upon the son until he has in some way assented to it, and does not therefore of itself confer upon him any rights.—Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124.

¶ 55. Without express authority legal counsel cannot be engaged by a father for his son lately a minor.—Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

¶ 56. An infant is not bound by a contract for necessaries made for him by his brother, unless he acts under it.—Squier v. Hydliff, 9 Mich. 274.

Contract and property rights between parent and child, see Parent and Child, IV.
Rights and dealing between guardian and infant ward, see Guardianship, VI.

¶ 57. A settlement with a ward of 20, she being old enough to give evidence, may be given weight as evidence, though it is not binding as a contract upon her.—Alexander v. Hillebrand, 140 Mich. 490.

Waiver of infant's rights in tort, see post § 39.
General law of releases, see Releases.

¶ 58. An infant cannot disaffirm a voidable compromise and settlement of a claim for personal injuries during his infancy.—Lansing v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 126 Mich. 663.

¶ 59. A compromise and settlement of a claim for personal injuries made between an infant and a railroad company is not void but voidable on behalf of the infant.—Lansing v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 126 Mich. 663.

§ 24. Partnership and agency agreements.
Capacity to appoint agents or attorneys or ratify their acts, see ante § 2.
General law of agency, see Agency.
General law of partnership, see Partnership.

¶ 60. An infant's partnership agreement is not void but only voidable.—Dunton v. Brown, 31 Mich. 182; Osburn v. Farr, 42 Mich. 134.

¶ 61. Articles of partnership purporting to be between the complainant on one part and defendant and a minor brother on the other, which were executed only by the two, held, not to have made the minor brother a partner.—McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 Mich. 476.

¶ 62. Whether an infant's partnership that has terminated before his majority does not come within the rule that protects executed contracts, quære.—Dunton v. Brown, 31 Mich. 182.

Capacity for marriage, see Marriage, § 7.
Promise of marriage by minor, see Breach of Promise to Marry § 1.

¶ 63. An infant, though of the age competent to contract marriage, cannot make a valid executory contract of marriage, for breach of which action may be brought.—Frost v. Vought, 37 Mich. 65.

§ 26. Right to ratify or avoid.
Before attaining majority, see post § 27.
Restitution of consideration, see post § 28.

¶ 64. One who purchases an automobile while a minor may, at majority, rescind the contract, return the vehicle and recover the purchase money.—Reynolds v. Garber-Buick Co., 183 Mich. 157.

¶ 67. Neither an infant nor his guardian has authority, while the infancy continues, to determine whether a voidable contract of the infant shall be affirmed or annulled. This is for the infant to decide when he reaches maturity.—Dunton v. Brown, 31 Mich. 182.

¶ 68. An infant may rescind a sale for breach of warranty before attaining his majority.—Stoll v. Hawks, 179 Mich. 571.

¶ 69. An infant may during minority rescind a contract of purchase because of fraudulent representations, and recover the consideration paid by him.—Patterson v. Kasper, 182 Mich. 281.

¶ 70. An infant cannot, while an infant, repudiate his partnership agreement and recover on an implied assumpsit for his labor done in pursuance of its provisions.—Dunton v. Brown, 31 Mich. 182.

§ 28. ——Restitution of consideration.
Restitution or reimbursement of grantee for improvements on avoidance of conveyance, see ante § 10.

¶ 71. If on coming to the age of discretion the settlement of a personal injury claim is repudiated by a minor, it will be set aside without requiring a return of consideration if the minor has parted with the money and cannot make restitution.—Barr v. Packard Motor Car Co., 172 Mich. 299.

¶ 72. Where an infant brought replevin to recover possession of chattels taken from her by virtue of a chattel mortgage that she had given to secure a loan to her, a ruling that she could not disaffirm the contract made by the mortgage, without first restoring the consideration, was erroneous. It treated the mortgage as an executed contract.—Corey v. Burton, 32 Mich. 30.

Acquiescence or delay in asserting or denying, see post § 30.
New promise or contract, see post § 31.
Acts of third persons, see post § 32.
Ratification or avoidance of conveyances, see ante §§ 8-10.
Mode and sufficiency of ratification or disaffirmance of infant's conveyance, see ante § 12.

¶ 73. The voidable contract of an infant is ratified where, on coming of age, he makes a distinct acknowledgment of it, and indicates an intention to be bound by it; but mere silence is not enough, where the doctrine of estoppel is not applicable.—Lynch v. Johnson, 109 Mich. 640.

¶ 74. A suit, after reaching majority, to enforce an agreement made by complainant during his minority, affirms such agreement. —Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

¶ 75. To confirm an infant's executed contract all that is necessary is to show any distinct acknowledgment or act indicating an intention to be bound by the contract; and if the infant continues after full age to occupy a position which is only explicable upon the supposition that he intends to stand by his contract, it will be considered a ratification. —Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471.

¶ 77. An infant who, by means of a voidable contract, obtains possession of property and spends it, and after becoming of age does not return the value of it, and otherwise retains the benefit of his contract, thereby affirms it; it is his conduct after reaching the age of discretion that precludes his relying on the infant's privilege; what he may have done previously can bind him neither by way of contract nor estoppel.—Corey v. Burton, 32 Mich. 30.

¶ 78. If an infant continues under a contract of service after he becomes of age without demanding increased wages, it is evidence of his affirmance of the contract.— Spicer v. Earl, 41 Mich. 191.

¶ 79. An infant legatee's acceptance of the executor's note will not extend the time for payment of the legacy unless the act is somehow ratified after becoming of age; and if by that time the note is past due its mere retention will not extend the time or give it the character of payment.—Durfee v. Abbott, 50 Mich. 479.

§ 30. ——Acquiescence or delay in asserting or denying.

Estoppel to ratify or disaffirm conveyance, see ante § 14.

Loss of right to disaffirm deed by delay in asserting, see ante ¶ 16.

¶ 80. Delay, or acquiescence, without any act either indicating an intention to affirm or tending to mislead the grantee into a belief of such intention, or any circumstances of equitable estoppel, such as quietly seeing improvements made, or money expended, or the sale of the property to another, or failure to assert one's claim, etc., will not operate as an affirmance or confirmation of a deed executed during minority, nor prevent a minor from disaffirming it and reclaiming the lands at any time within the period allowed by the statute of limitations for bringing an action. —Prout v. Wiley, 28 Mich. 164.

¶ 81. Where no express ratification is shown, and no act done in reliance upon or in affirmance of an infant's contract, mere delay in proceeding to enforce his claim against the sureties cannot be construed into a ratification where there are no elements of estoppel that intervene; especially where the infant has not received any new consideration or retained any consideration arising out of the original transaction.—Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471.

¶ 82. Where an infant has a right to repudiate a transaction in which he has not been defrauded, and where he has received and obtained the benefit thereof, he must act with reasonable promptness after reaching his majority or he will be deemed to have ratified the act by acquiescence.—Langdon v. Clayson, 75 Mich. 204.

¶ 83. An express or implied agreement of a party to terms which may create a conditional or restricted liability for or on account of a contract made during the minority of such party is not a ratification of such contract. It may, if the condition be performed, become a new contract, and as such become binding from its date.—Minock v. Shortridge, 21 Mich. 304.

¶ 84. Where an infant assignor of an agreement made by him had been made party defendant by the assignee to a suit for specific performance, and an answer purporting to be on his behalf had been filed, admitting all the material facts of the bill, disclaiming all interest, and solemnly declaring his ratification of the original agreement, and of the assignment, said answer not being signed by him personally but by a solicitor in his name, therein acting without authority from him, it was held that the answer could not be made the basis for decreeing that he had ratified the original agreement.—Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

¶ 85. A suit by a party claiming to be an assignee of an infant's contract under an assignment, made during minority, does not affirm the infant's agreement.—Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

§ 33. Effect of affirmance or avoidance.

the time it was made.—Minock v. Shortridge, 21 Mich. 304.

¶ 87. A mercantile firm, of which one of the members was a minor, having purchased goods during such minority, will be liable for the value, not exceeding the contract price of the goods on hand at the time the minor becomes of age, and afterwards sold by the former.—Minock v. Shortridge, 21 Mich. 304.

§ 35. Enforcement or repudiation by courts during minority.

Supervisory jurisdiction and protection by courts in actions concerning infants, see also post § 42.

Infancy of vendee in land contract as reason for refusing specific performance sought by his assignee against vendor, see ante ¶ 2.

¶ 89. A court of equity will enforce or repudiate an infant's contract upon equitable grounds.—Barr v. Packard Motor Car Co., 182 Mich. 612.

¶ 90. An infant's chattel mortgage, whether void or voidable, cannot be enforced against him during his minority.—Barney v. Rutledge, 104 Mich. 289.

¶ 91. One who has lent money to an infant and has taken a chattel mortgage as security cannot enforce the mortgage by seizing the property covered by it while the mortgagor is still under age. Otherwise the privilege of infancy, making the executory contracts of infants voidable when they come of age, would not avail them.—Corey v. Burton, 32 Mich. 30.

¶ 92. One who declares a land contract with a minor purchaser void for nonpayment is liable for the amount paid in by the minor less the value of the use of the land, in an action by the minor before becoming of age. —Vanatter v. Marquardt, 134 Mich. 99.

See also ante ¶ 57.

¶ 93. In an action for the purchase price of goods within the class known as "necessaries," furnished to defendant while an infant, and while he was living apart from his parents, the burden of proof is upon him to show that they were not in fact necessaries, and that he was supplied with all such necessaries by his parents.—Lynch v. Johnson, 109 Mich. 640.

¶ 94. In an action upon a note executed by a minor, plaintiff has the burden of showing a ratification after majority, and this cannot be presumed from the mere silence of the maker for two years after he became of age.—Tyler v. Gallop's Estate, 68 Mich. 185.

¶ 96. In an action by a minor to recover the part payment made upon a motorcycle, in which plaintiff claimed that upon returning the motorcycle for repairs, the seller did not make such repairs, and refused to give the motorcycle back, or the money, upon demand, and in which defendant sought to recover under a counterclaim for depreciation in the value of the motorcycle during the period that it was in possession of plaintiff, evidence held sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff.—Jackson v. Haverford Cycle Co., 194 Mich. 286.

¶ 97. There can be no presumption that a gift to an infant of a contract for the purchase of land at the price of $13,000, and upon which only $400 has been paid, is for the benefit of the infant; even if he were an adult, it could not be presumed that he had accepted a contract binding him to the payment of a large sum of money without express evidence to establish it.—Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124.

¶ 98. It seems that more solemn and decisive acts are requisite to prove ratification of a conveyance than of a purchase.—Carrell v. Potter, 28 Mich. 377.

¶ 100. A minor sued to recover compensation for labor. The defendant offered to prove that the labor was performed under and with knowledge of an agreement between defendant and an older brother of the minor (whose parents were dead), in pursuance of which and in payment for the labor the minor had been sent to school, clothed, his washing and mending done, etc. Held, that the proposed evidence was competent, as the jury might have found from it that the minor had given his assent to the agreement, and was therefore bound by it when executed.—Squier v. Hydliff, 9 Mich. 274.

§ 37. Questions of law and fact.
See also ante ¶ 47.

¶ 101. Clothes furnished to an infant are within the class known as "necessaries"; but whether they were in fact necessary in the particular case is a question for the jury.—Lynch v. Johnson, 109 Mich. 640.

¶ 102. Where an infant seeks to repudiate an executed contract for services, the question for the jury is whether an unfair advantage was taken of him rather than the question of his subsequent affirmance.—Spicer v. Earl, 41 Mich. 191.

¶ 103. Where, in an action for the purchase price of goods sold to defendant while an infant, it appears that, after attaining his majority, he recognized the debt, and promised to pay it in full if he could get an extension of time, and that he did not plead infancy when the account was presented to him, or on the return day of the summons by which the suit was commenced, the question whether the contract was ratified by him is for the jury.—Lynch v. Johnson, 109 Mich. 640.

¶ 110. Where the principal defendant is a firm, a verdict discharging one of the partners because he is an infant does not release a garnishee; the infant could not, individually, sue him for firm property.—Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

¶ 111. Instructions which make one's right to recover from the estate of a deceased person for services rendered during minority depend on his right to sustain a suit for them on coming of age are erroneous where such services have been merged in an agreement to pay at the death of the person for whom they were performed, for in that case there could be no recovery until such person died, when the estate would be liable.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

Enforcement or repudiation by courts of infant's contracts during minority, see ante § 35.
General supervision by chancery, see also Equity ¶ 88.

¶ 112. Chancery has general jurisdiction over the persons and estates of infants; and when any part of an infant's estate is in litigation in chancery it is under the immediate guardianship and protection of the court; and neither the general guardian nor the guardian ad litem has any right to receive it.—Westbrook v. Comstock, W. 314.

¶ 113. A court is bound to guard the interests of infant litigants whether protected by their guardian or not; as to control of funds of such litigants, see Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

§ 43. Person in whose name to sue or defend.

Necessity for appointment of next friend or guardian ad litem for infant parties, see Guardian ad Litem § 2.

¶ 114. The usual and proper course is to entitle a cause in which an infant is the real plaintiff in the name of the infant by his next friend, naming him, but it does not necessarily follow that a strict compliance with this rule is indispensable to the validity of the proceeding.—Kees v. Maxim, 99 Mich. 493.

¶ 115. An action of replevin brought by a father in his own name cannot proceed on the theory that he is suing in his child's behalf as guardian or next friend.—Ash v. Mathes, 52 Mich. 615.

¶ 116. In a suit on a joint contract made by an infant and an adult as joint parties, and under which money has been earned, the infant's father cannot sue with the other contractor in his own name as the infant's substitute.—Osburn v. Farr, 42 Mich. 134.

¶ 117. In a suit under an infant's partnership contract upon a completed cause of action for his benefit, the infant should be a plaintiff in his own name and not through another.—Osburn v. Farr, 42 Mich. 134.

¶ 118. Where infants are joined as plaintiffs with an adult there must be some one to represent their interests on the record, unless in the case of joint executors some of whom are under age, in which case, as their authority is joint, the adult represents all. But if the suit is against the executors, the infants must appear by guardian.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

¶ 119. An infant partner cannot individually sue to recover a debt or property due the firm.—Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

¶ 120. An infant may authorize an agent to enforce his log labor lien under Comp. L. 1897, § 10762, without violating Comp. L. 1897, § 756, since "no process has been issued, suit brought, or issue joined" in the name of the infant.—Craig v. Brown, 171 Mich. 256.

¶ 121. Minor children are not necessary parties to an action of ejectment brought by a widow, their mother, to recover the homestead, though it is proper to join them.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 122. In a suit by an assignee of a land contract against the vendor for specific performance, the assignor and vendee, who was an infant when he bought and assigned, is a necessary party.—Carrell v. Potter, 23 Mich. 377.

Capacity to be estopped, see ante § 3.

Estoppel to disaffirm conveyance based on delay and laches, see ante § 14, ¶ 28.

Loss of right to disaffirm deed by delay in asserting, see ante ¶ 16.

Application to infants of limitation of time within which to present claim or demand against municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations, XIV.

Limitation of actions, see Limitation of Actions, III, B.

Immunity from laches in general, see Equity § 53.

¶ 123. Laches is not imputable to a minor. Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217; Dragoo v. Dragoo, 50 Mich. 573; Putnam v. Tinkler, 83 Mich. 628.

¶ 125. The decree sought to be set aside was obtained some seven months before complainant arrived at majority. He was aware of the decree and its effect, and of all the material facts in the case, when he attained his majority, but delayed for six years and a half before filing his bill. In the meantime the principal party charged with the fraud, and the guardian charged with collusion, as well as the principal witness, who, from the nature of the case, must have been best acquainted with the facts, had all died. The bill was dismissed as not brought in a reasonable time.—Campau v. Van Dyke, 15 Mich. 371.

¶ 126. An infant gave a mortgage which was foreclosed sometime after she became of age, and, though personally served, she allowed the bill to be taken as confessed, apparently without any disposition to contest it. Held, that she had no equity entitling her to set up the defense of infancy to defeat a subsequent bill brought by an assignee of the foreclosure decree to enforce it against her.—Terry v. McClintock, 41 Mich. 492.

¶ 127. An infant's failure to file a bill to enforce the specific performance of a parol contract for the conveyance of land to her father fully performed by him in his lifetime does not prevent her doing so after coming of age.—Putnam v. Tinkler, 83 Mich. 628.

Burden of proving infancy in breach of promise to marry, see Breach of Promise to Marry § 3.

¶ 128. One who relies upon infancy as a defense has the burden of proving the fact.—Lynch v. Johnson, 109 Mich. 640.

¶ 131. One who sues soon after coming of age for an injury inflicted upon him when twelve years old cannot be treated as at fault for the delay, since he could not have sued earlier himself; nor is such delay a circumstance tending to show that no serious injury was ever done to him; but he has the burden of proof, and must take it with all the additional weight that the passage of time throws upon him.—Thurstin v. Luce, 61 Mich. 292.

¶ 132. An infant sued for the price of goods does not have the burden of showing that they were not necessaries, and the plaintiff cannot make out his case without showing that they were, whether defendant assumes such burden or not.—Wood v. Losey, 50 Mich. 475.

§ 47. Evidence, issues and jury questions.

Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to contracts, see also ante § 36.
Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence respecting property and conveyances, see ante § 15.
Admissibility of foreign judgment record as evidence of infancy, see Foreign Judgments ¶ 2.

¶ 133. An Indian child six years of age at the date of a treaty claimed land under it. A witness was called to prove that for seven years after the treaty he heard no claim made by the band to which the child belonged that any reservations were made for Indians of full blood. Held, that the evidence was not competent, since neither the neglect of others to make the claim nor of the child herself, at that age, could affect her claim.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

¶ 134. Where the contract sued on was made while the plaintiff was a minor, and he never sought to repudiate it, but did seek to enforce it both before and after coming of age, the inquiry by defendant whether he ever attempted to vitiate the contract on the ground of infancy was irrelevant.—Austin v. Burroughs, 62 Mich. 181.

¶ 136. Evidence suffices to show that grantor was of age when a deed was made; where his parents, witnesses to it, stated at the time of execution in 1882 that he was 22 years old, corroborated by an aunt's testimony that he was living when another died (in 1858), against which is the baptismal certificate of one by the same surname in 1862, but of a different Christian name and not certainly proved to have been the same person, and though the witnesses to his age are so illiterate and ignorant that their testimony is much weakened thereby.—Moran v. Lebot, 97 Mich. 472.

¶ 137. In an action for personal injuries a finding of the jury that plaintiff was under 21 years of age held to be against the overwhelming weight of evidence, she having herself contradicted it, and her parents not being called.—Lansing v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 143 Mich. 48.

On consent, confession, stipulation or admission, see post § 49.
Judgments in general, see Judgments.
Immunity from costs, see Costs § 11.
Exoneration from costs on appeal, see Costs § 133.
Youthfulness of parties as mitigating or enhancing damages for seduction, see Damages § 177.

§ 138. A decree made during infancy upon the basis of an infant defendant's unauthorized contract is void.—Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217.

¶ 139. A decree of foreclosure and sale rendered during the infancy of the mortgagor, a feme covert, who did not come of age until the time for appeal had expired, was held absolutely void.—Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217.

¶ 140. Equity will not at the instance of a minor plaintiff set aside a judgment of a court of law rendered in an action for personal injuries, where the amount awarded was adequate, and the defendant was not guilty of any fraud or misrepresentation.—Barr v. Packard Motor Car Co., 182 Mich. 612.

¶ 141. No decree will be entered against an infant on a bill taken against him as confessed, or without full proof; his guardian's admissions do not conclude his rights.—Thayer v. Lane, W. 200; Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217; Ballentine v. Clark, 38 Mich. 395; Cooper v. Mayhew, 40 Mich. 528; and see Smith v. Smith, 13 Mich. 258.

¶ 143. The guardian or solicitor of an infant defendant in foreclosure has no implied power to stipulate for the introduction of evidence of facts occurring since the filing of the bill.—Wood v. Truax, 39 Mich. 628.

¶ 145. An infant cannot in his own name confess judgment, nor can an infant's partner confess judgment for him.—Soper v. Fry, 37 Mich. 236.

I. GENERAL NATURE OF AND GROUNDS AND OCCASION FOR THE REMEDY.

§ 1. Nature, office and propriety of injunctions.

Injunction in aid of other suits or proceedings, see post §§ 4-7.
Existence and sufficiency of other remedies, see post §§ 8-10.
Necessity that complainant have clear right or title, see post §§ 11, 12.
Necessity that injury complained of be a substantial one, see post § 18.
To prevent multiplicity of suits, see post §§ 16, 85.
Not to restrain defendant in performance of lawful acts, see post § 17.
Injunction impossible of execution or ineffectual, see post § 18.
Refusal of injunctive relief where it would work disproportionate injury to defendant, see post § 19.
To whom remedy available, see post § 20.
Conditions precedent to relief, see post § 24.
As discretionary writ, see post § 116.
Refusal of remedy on ground of laches or estoppel, see post § 23.
Nature and purpose of preliminary injunction, see post § 115.
Discretion of court in issuing preliminary injunction, see post § 116.
Equitable rights and remedies generally, see Equity.

Mandamus to compel issuance or dissolution of injunction, see Mandamus.
Prohibition to restrain action by court of bill for injunction and other relief, see Prohibition.
Clean hands maxim as bar to relief, see also Equity § 6.
Disability to relieve against nuisance in another jurisdiction, see Equity § 32.

¶ 1. The summary remedy by injunction is granted only on strictly equitable grounds. —B. Siegel Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 145.

¶ 2. The writ of injunction is not one of right, but of grace. It should not issue out of hand, but should issue in cases where the right to such relief is clearly established. —Saier v. Joy, 198 Mich. 295.

¶ 3. Injunctions are to prevent irreparable mischief and stay consequences that could not be adequately compensated; their allowance is discretionary and not of right, call for good faith in the petitioner, and may be withheld if likely to inflict greater injury than the grievance complained of.—Edwards v. Allouez Min. Co., 38 Mich. 46.

¶ 4. The writ of injunction is not a writ of right, but its issuance rests in sound discretion, and such discretion should not be moved where the party applying does not bring his case with equitable principles, does not show superior equities that are entitled to protection at the hands of a court of equity, and does not make such a case as moves the conscience of the court to grant the relief.—Howard v. Lovett, 198 Mich. 710.

¶ 5. Upon a bill for an injunction, the court will take into consideration not only complainant's bare legal rights, but the damage which will result to a defendant from the enforcement of such legal rights as well as the question of delay in bringing the proceedings. So, a court will not restrain a city from adding to its water plant, although the addition is an infringement of complainant's legal rights, where it appears that he had known for a number of years of defendant's use of the water, that the extension of the plant was simply a furtherance of the city's original policy, and that before filing his bill he had allowed the city to spend a considerable amount of money and incur large obligations without more than a protest.—Stock v. City of Hillsdale, 155 Mich. 375.

Injunctions mandatory in character, see post § 3.
Removal of obstruction in alley by plaintiff as precluding injunction to prevent closing of alley, see post ¶ 280.
Scope and terms of decree or order, see post V.

¶ 6. Preventive injunctions necessarily operate upon unperformed and unexecuted acts.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

¶ 7. Injunction will not lie where the wrong sought to be enjoined is already perpetrated.—Golden Star Lodge No. 1 v. Watterson, 158 Mich. 696.

¶ 8. A hearing upon an injunction bill cannot be had after the act has been done which it is the sole purpose of the bill to restrain; the remedy for any consequent injury is to be had, if at all, at law.—East Saginaw St. R. Co. v. Wildman, 58 Mich. 286.

Mandatory preliminary injunction to compel delivery of cars by carrier, see post ¶ 407.

¶ 9. Courts look with disfavor upon mandatory injunctions, and will only grant them when it is necessary to preserve the status quo. Usually an order restraining action will accomplish this result, but the status quo is not always "a condition of rest, but of action." Whenever courts have found a mandatory injunction essential to the preservation of the status quo, and a serious inconvenience and loss would result if not preserved, they have not hesitated to grant it.—Gates v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 151 Mich. 548.

As remedy to preserve status quo pending litigation, see post §§ 5-7.
Injunction to stay proceedings in court, see post II, B.
Injunction in aid of recission or cancellation, see Recission and Cancellation.
Ancillary to creditors' bill, see Creditors' Suits § 33.
Injunction as ancillary to interpleader, see Interpleader § 12.

¶ 10. An injunction bill, strictly speaking, is one seeking no other relief. When the bill prays other relief, the injunction is regarded as ancillary to such relief and falls with it. —Blackwood v. Van Vleet, 11 Mich. 252; Widner v. Olmstead, 14 Mich. 124.

¶ 11. Equity may stay proceedings at law until an answer to a bill for discovery has been obtained.—Wright v. King, H. 12.

§ 5. Protection of title or rights pending litigation.

Injunction to protect property rights of spouse intending to sue for divorce, see post § 65.
Restraining enforcement of gas regulating ordinance pendente lite, see post ¶ 332.
Sufficiency of bill for injunction, see post § 107.
Decree restraining waste pending ejectment, see post ¶ 480.
To restrain proceedings in courts, see post II, B.

Injunction to restrain waste by tenant pending possessory proceedings, see Landlord and Tenant.
Provisions as to injunctions pending divorce suits, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11405, 11480.
Retention of divorce bill for injunction to protect property rights, see also Divorce ¶ 415.

¶ 12. An injunction will generally issue to preserve the status quo of property until the final hearing upon the merits.—State Road Bridge Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 337.

¶ 13. The ground and the only ground on which injunctions are granted against third persons in possession of personal property, and ostensibly its rightful owners, upon an ex parte application, is the protection of the fund or property, when it is shown that without such interposition of the court there is danger that it may be lost to the complainant if he succeeds in establishing his title.—Thayer v. Swift, H. 430.

¶ 14. A bill was filed to cancel a lease as obtained by fraudulent representations. The fraud was denied and the injury alleged was not irreparable, as the lease provided for its termination by notice, so that the lessor had a remedy at law for damages. Held, that an ex parte injunction restoring possession to the lessor pending suit was improvidently granted.—Arnold v. Bright, 41 Mich. 207.

¶ 15. Since an attachment cannot be levied on corporate stock previously assigned by the defendant to his wife, a bill cannot lie to protect the lien of such an attachment by enjoining the payment of dividends to the holder.—Van Norman v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 45 Mich. 204.

¶ 17. Equity has jurisdiction to restrain the cutting of timber from the lands by a grantee in a deed claimed to be a mortgage, pending the determination of the question whether the debt had been fully paid or not.—Bigelow v. Thompson, 133 Mich. 334.

¶ 18. An injunction restraining a bridge company from collecting tolls until the further order of the court is improperly granted on a complaint in a court of chancery in the nature of an information in quo warranto to test the right of the company to maintain its franchise and privilege of collecting tolls; the result of such restraining order being to deprive the parties of the possession of their property, and their right and control over it and the income from it without a hearing upon the merits.—State Road Bridge Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 337.

§ 6. ——In aid of other equitable relief.

Injunction to prevent interference with possession pending suit for specific performance, see Specific Performance.
Injunctions in aid of judgment creditors' bills, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXIV, § 5, Comp. L. 1915, § 13382.

¶ 19. A bill will not lie merely for an injunction and receivership, pending another suit in the same court covering all rights in the disputed property. Interference with such rights can be restrained in the other suit.—Beekman v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 156.

§ 7. Pending review of proceedings.

Right to injunction on reversal against defendant who changed status pending appeal, see Appeal § 562.
Injunction in supreme court ancillary to appeal, see Appeal § 142.

¶ 20. The supreme court may, pending an appeal of a bill to establish a trust, restrain defendant from removing the fund in question from the jurisdiction.—Patek v. Patek, 166 Mich. 443.

¶ 21. The petitioner in condemnation proceedings that are admittedly illegal may be enjoined from entering upon the land condemned pending review of the proceedings by a court of equity.—Sandusky Grain Co. v. Sanilac Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 126.

§ 8. Existence of legal or other remedy.

[Note. The doctrine that injunction will not ordinarily issue when there is a complete and adequate legal remedy pervades the whole law of injunctions in so far as concerns the propriety of the remedy. Concrete applications of the general principles here illustrated may therefore be found throughout division II of this topic. This section and the one following are restricted to the decisions which express or enunciate the rule in general terms.]

¶ 22. A drain commissioner may be enjoined from emptying water on complainant's land without providing a proper outlet therefrom, notwithstanding the complainant will have a legal remedy for damages when they occur.—Bruggink v. Thomas, 125 Mich. 9.

¶ 23. A court of equity will not entertain a claim, and application for relief, when the subject-matter is in the nature of a set-off and therefore entertainable by a court of law.—Dewey v. Billings, 76 Mich. 89.

¶ 24. Complainant alleged in his bill that as mortgagee he obtained title to premises, through foreclosure; that the children of the deceased mortgagor denied the right of the latter to make the mortgage and were suing complainant in ejectment; that the estate of the mortgagor was being settled, and if the children succeeded in their ejectment suit complainant would have no remedy for the mortgagor's breach of warranty of title. Held, that complainant's proper remedy was to file a claim in the probate court against the estate of the deceased mortgagor for the breach of warranty, and that equity would not aid him.—Rogers v. Schram, 161 Mich. 278.

¶ 25. The State Game Warden will not be enjoined from interfering with the use of fish nets having a two-inch mesh, where the only question involved is whether the statute permits the use of such nets, since the legality of their use is available to the complainant as a defense to a criminal prosecution.—Kleinke v. Oates, 187 Mich. 548.

¶ 26. Upon a bill filed to restrain village authorities from interfering with a fence which complainant had been notified to remove as an encroachment upon a public street, the proofs showed an encroachment commenced upon an established street within the period required for adverse possession, and relief was denied without considering whether the summary method prescribed in How. St. § 1371 et seq. (Comp. L. 1897, § 4121), for settling such a controversy should not have been followed.—Wyman v. St. Johns, 100 Mich. 571.

Multiplicity of suits as ground for injunction, see post § 16.

Uncertainty of damages as ground for injunction, see post § 25.

Refusal of injunction to remove house where ejectment appropriate, see post ¶ 258.

Injunction to prevent interference with possession of church where ejectment inadequate, see post § 69.

Equitable relief by injunction against trespasses where legal remedy inadequate, see post § 70.

General rule to decline jurisdiction where legal remedy is adequate, see Equity § 39.

Adequacy of legal remedies to try question of disputed boundary, see Boundaries § 24.

¶ 27. In the case of a deed of property subsequently found to be incumbered the grantee's remedy at law upon his grantor's warranty of title is complete, and the fact that the grantor has absconded leaving no property to be assessed, gives no ground for equitable relief against the estate.—Crow v. Conant, 90 Mich. 247.

¶ 28. An injunction will not be awarded where an award of damages will afford adequate relief; as where lands had been inundated because of releasing water to float logs down a river where the defendant had been engaged in such business for many years and had a considerable investment which would be rendered valueless if an injunction were granted, none will be granted where the defendant can and will compensate complainant for pecuniary loss.—Howard v. Bellows, 148 Mich. 410.

¶ 29. Where in a dispute between two railway companies over the ownership of rights of way an adequate remedy exists at law, a bill for injunction is properly dismissed.—Grand Rapids Elec. Ry. Co. v. Battle Creek, C. & S. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 248.

¶ 30. The remedy at law is not adequate where the bill charges a deliberate violation of contract obligations, shows confusion and misunderstanding concerning the use of complainant's name in a business and an attempt to avoid an agreement with complainant not to use a certain name for a corporation by organizing another corporation of the same name which agreement complainant is entitled to specifically enforce.—George v. Rollins, 176 Mich. 144.

¶ 31. A bill will not lie in equity to require an accounting, to restrain the defendant from proceeding with a replevin suit begun by the complainant, to declare such action to have been settled by the parties, and to cancel the replevin bond; since there was an adequate legal remedy for determining such questions in the replevin suit on an issue framed under § 10402 et seq., Comp. L. 1897, § 13116 et seq., How. St., 2nd Ed.—Huebel Co. v. MacKinnon, 186 Mich. 617.

General law as to election of remedies, see Election.

¶ 32. An action at law for damages growing out of the erection of a dam is not an election of remedy that will preclude a bill to secure a mandatory injunction compelling the removal of the dam.—Feldkamp v. Ernst, 177 Mich. 550.

Enjoining collection of tolls pending litigation, see ante ¶ 18.

¶ 33. A bill for an injunction will not be sustained unless the right it aims to secure can be determined in advance with certainty.—Bennett v. Seligman, 32 Mich. 500; Bradfield v. Dewell, 48 Mich. 9.

¶ 34. A court of equity will not restrain a person from asserting a title to real estate in the course of judicial proceedings, or decree a release from one to another, unless in a case entirely free from doubt.—Stockton v. Williams, 1 D. 546.

¶ 35. Chancery has no jurisdiction to restrain a trespass upon land the title to which is in dispute, and to establish as the true boundary of such land the line claimed by complainant.—Andries v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 105 Mich. 557.

¶ 36. Where a bill for injunction alleges possession and this is denied by the answer, a question of fact as to possession is presented and if the evidence should disclose that complainant was out of possession, quære whether a suit in equity could be maintained.—F. H. Wolf Brick Co., v. Lonyo, 132 Mich. 162.

¶ 37. An injunction against the obstruction of a public way will not be denied for the reason that the title to the land may be said to be in dispute because of a claim by complainant of a private right of way secured by deed and by user.—Detroit Mineral Bath Co. v. Stroh Brewery Co., 151 Mich. 555.

¶ 39. In an action to enjoin repeated trespasses on the waters of an inland lake, a court of equity will not determine the title to the submerged lands, where the contending parties have each had intermittent partial possession for many years.—Beach v. Rice, 186 Mich. 95.

Necessity that complainant seeking bill of peace first establish his right at law, see post § 35.

Necessity that complainant seeking to enjoin ejectment have clear title, see post § 46.

¶ 40. Bill against one in possession of lands claiming them under tax titles, to have these titles declared void, and complainant's right to the lands quieted, and for an injunction to restrain the commission of waste by defendant. Complainant had not established his right at law, and had brought no suit for that purpose. Held, that the bill could not be sustained.—Blackwood v. Van Vleet, 11 Mich. 252.

¶ 42. A lumberman obtained the right to cut a lot of timber and run it to a mill, and at the same time he contracted to deliver it to a certain lumber company. The owner of the timber, however, was to retain his title until it was paid for. The lumberman afterward surrendered his interest in his contract to the owner. The lumber company had overpaid the former, and on its refusing to advance the necessary sum to finish the job, the latter abandoned it and sold the logs to a third person. The river-drivers also claimed liens on the logs for their labor, and several attachments were levied. The lumber company then filed a bill to enjoin any interference with their possession. Held, that the case did not fall within the jurisdiction of equity. The questions raised by the conflicting claims of title were purely legal, and so with the labor liens, which did not depend upon the rights of the original owner nor on any equities that might exist between him and the company. Held, also, that the owner of the logs was entitled to have his claim for stumpage paid by the company, and if the company had overpaid the original contractor, its loss cannot be charged to the owner, whose conduct in ordering payments by the company to be made to the lumberman did not make him a principal in the latter's contract.—Southern Michigan Cedar Lumber Co. v. McDonald, 57 Mich. 292.

¶ 43. Ejectment and not an action to enjoin repeated trespasses is the proper proceeding for the determination of title to land covered by the waters of an inland lake, where for many years the contending claimants have each had partial intermittent possession.—Beach v. Rice, 186 Mich. 95.

Necessity that injunctive relief be effectual or practicable, see post § 18.
Disproportionate injury to defendant from injunction, see post § 19.
Interest of taxpayer entitling him to relief by injunction against city, see post § 21.
Equity entitling plaintiff to enjoin proceedings at law, see post § 33.
Enjoining acts of public officers where injury slight or doubtful, see post ¶ 205.
Refusal to enjoin opening of highway where injury slight, see post ¶ 274.
Injury entitling landowner to restrain widening of drain, see post ¶ 302.
Amount in controversy in taxpayer's suit, see Equity § 16.

¶ 44. Injunction will not lie for the purpose of passing on abstract rights or wrongs apart from such threatened injury to the person seeking relief, nor when such injury is remediable at law.—East Saginaw St. R. Co. v. Wildman, 58 Mich. 286.

¶ 45. A court of equity will not lend injunctive aid to enforce mere abstract rights unaccompanied by any injury or damage to the person seeking relief.—City of Owosso v. Union Tel. Co., 185 Mich. 349.

¶ 47. Injunction will not issue simply because no material injury would accrue to defendants thereby; but on the contrary, the court requires in all cases a sufficient showing to be made of threatened injury entitling the complainant to equitable relief.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

¶ 48. An increase in telephone rates will not be restrained at the suit of a city where there is no substantial injury, though there may be some annoyance to the sensibilities of the patrons by the manner in which notice of it is given by the company.—City of Owosso v. Union Tel. Co., 185 Mich. 349.

¶ 49. A bill by a taxpayer and coal dealer to restrain the city from unlawfully injuring him in his business and from subjecting his property to the burden of an unlawful assessment for taxes because the city was engaging in selling coal at a loss will be dismissed where the proofs show that a few days after filing the suit the city discontinued the business, and that by the city's action no loss had occurred, and no increased burden could be imposed on complainant's property by reason of the city's action, and where he has failed to show any present or prospective injury.—Baker v. City of Grand Rapids, 142 Mich. 687.

¶ 51. Where a city has vacated certain streets for the purpose of enabling a railway company to erect a much-needed depot, a nursery and seed company cannot enjoin the railway from proceeding with the erection of said depot where it appears that the only inconvenience to said seed company is to compel its customers to approach its plant by a somewhat circuitous route.—Detroit & M. Ry. Co. v. Sioux City Seed & Nursery Co., 168 Mich. 668.

¶ 52. An injunction should not be granted to restrain the recording of a land contract where the only ground alleged is that certain matter set out therein is not usually set out in land contracts and is private to the parties and of no interest to the public and complainant dislikes to have it recorded.—Ranney v. Stoll, 174 Mich. 440.

§ 14. ——Apprehended or threatened injury.

Apprehended injury from electric railway in streets, see post § 82.

¶ 53. Injunctions will not issue to allay mere apprehensions of injury.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

¶ 54. Whether injunction to restrain threatened injury is matter of right, quære; but it will not be granted where such relief is disproportionate to the injury.—Hall v. Rood, 40 Mich. 46.

Benefit rather than resultant injury to complainant as reason for denying injunction against alley vacation, see Highways ¶ 489.

¶ 55. Where, by contract and deed between adjoining landowners, one landowner is entitled to have an area way of specified dimensions left open, an injunction against the obstruction of such area way will not be refused upon the ground that defendant is leaving open an area way more advantageous to complainants than that for which they had contracted.—Tolsma v. James E. Scripps Corporation, 153 Mich. 14.

See also post § 35.

Injunction where legal remedy inadequate or incomplete, see ante § 9.

Multiplicity of suits as ground for enjoining trespasses, see post § 72.

As ground for enjoining ejectment suits, see post § 46.

Joinder of taxpayers in suit to restrain collection of tax, see post § 106.

Avoidance of multiplicity as ground for bill to restrain acts which may become prescriptive, see also Equity ¶ 142.

Avoidance of multiplied litigation as ground to entertain suit by taxpayers, see also Equity § 44.

¶ 56. Injunction will issue to remedy a wrong for which redress might be secured by an action of trespass, where it would be necessary to resort to a multiplicity of suits to secure such redress.—Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting & Fishing Club, 153 Mich. 185.

¶ 57. An injunction will not generally be granted against the continuance of action or possession which, though originally wrongful, can be made lawful for the future by taking the necessary legal measures.—Mercer v. Williams, W. 85; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 63 Mich. 645.

¶ 58. Equity will not interfere to protect one from an injury that defendants can make lawful at any time, if they choose, proof of a subsisting right of flowage for saw-mill or grist-mill purposes will prevent the abatement of a mill-dam erected to supply a paper-mill, and causing only the like extent of flowage.—Hathaway v. Mitchell, 34 Mich. 164.

¶ 59. Where a city has used property for market purposes for a sufficient length of time to gain a prescriptive right to do so, continuation of such market will not be restrained.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

¶ 60. The representative of a deceased partner in a firm of hotel-keepers who have been occupying the hotel under a lease cannot, after the expiration of the lease, restrain the survivor from separating the furniture which belonged to the partnership from the rest of the hotel property on the ground that its value depends upon its being used in connection with the good-will of the property, and that such separation would cause irreparable injury to the interest of decedent's estate in the partnership assets.—Witbeck v. Chittenden, 50 Mich. 426.

Abstract rights or wrongs not within scope of remedy by injunction, see ante § 13.

¶ 61. An injunction to restrain the use of more than defendant's just share of the water furnished by a dam and canal was denied where assuming jurisdiction would require constant oversight in respect to the conduct enjoined, and would involve perpetual controversies.—Bradfield v. Dewell, 48 Mich. 9.

§ 19. Injunction inequitable to defendant.

See also ante ¶¶ 3, 5, 54.

Necessity that equitable grounds for relief exist, see ante § 1.

Injunctive relief against nuisance disproportionate to the injury, see also Nuisances.

¶ 62. Where an injunction will do the defendant more harm than it will do the complainant good, the court may refuse it in its discretion.—Campau v. National Film Co., 159 Mich. 169.

¶ 63. Where the proofs showed that complainant's land was wrongfully flowed by defendant's dam, but that no general unhealthiness was caused, and where it appeared that to enjoin the flowage would practically abate the dam and would injure defendant to a degree disproportionate to complainant's grievance, it was held that relief should be confined to an allowance of damages.—Fox v. Holcomb, 32 Mich. 494.

¶ 64. Where complainant sought to enjoin perpetually the use of electricity by defendant as a substitute for horse-power in operating a railroad in a street upon which complainant owned unoccupied land, an injunction was refused on the ground that it would cause defendant far greater loss than complainant would suffer, even should all of his apprehensions prove true, and that he had a remedy at law for any violation of his rights.—Potter v. Saginaw Union Street R., 83 Mich. 285.

¶ 65. Where the circuit court refused to enjoin the city of Grand Rapids from emptying its sewage into the Grand River, the supreme court refused on mandamus to set aside the order, since it appeared that the people of the city would be subjected to great inconvenience by the injunction.—Township of Wyoming v. Judge Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 158 Mich. 60.

¶ 66. A complainant leased to a defendant with a provision that no hazardous use should be made of the premises. The complainant knew that defendant intended to use the premises for the storage and sale of inflammable picture films. In a bill by complainant to enjoin such use, held, that he was not entitled to such relief as a matter of right, and the court would not grant it when, as here, injustice would be done defendant.—Campau v. National Film Co., 159 Mich. 169.

¶ 67. Complainant will not be denied an injunction to prevent the defendant from overflowing certain mill tailraces by raising his dam, which is below that of the complainants', and a recovery of damages caused on the ground that the injury to the defendant by the restriction of his use of the dam would be disproportionate to the harm suffered by the flooding of complainant's mill tailraces, where the complainant has shown by a preponderance of the evidence that there is a reasonable fear that the overflowing will be so frequent as to seriously affect the value of his mills, that the mills are of great value, and that the remedy at law is inadequate, and where the defendant's dam can be allowed to stand provided that the water is not ponded above the original height of the dam.—Sheffield Car Co. v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 171 Mich. 423.

¶ 68. In a suit for injunction to prevent the defendant from overflowing certain mill tailraces by raising his dam which is below that of the complainant, even though it appears that the injunction will seriously affect the water supply of the defendant's mills and power plants, which are of great value, yet there is no reason to apply the rule of paramount necessity.—Sheffield Car Co. v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 171 Mich. 423.

¶ 69. Where the owner of a farm outside the limits of a city warns city contractors to desist from using her land to construct a sewage plant, and the warning is disregarded and the plant is completed entailing an expenditure of $50,000 by the city, on a bill for an injunction the city is in no position to urge that it would be inequitable to grant the injunction because it would entail great loss and inconvenience upon the city.—Onen v. Herkimer, 172 Mich. 596.

Interest, right or title in plaintiff, see also ante § 11.
Estoppel by acquiescence and laches, see post § 23.
Right of private persons to enjoin obstruction of or encroachment upon streets, see post § 81.
Parties to injunction proceedings, see post § 101.

¶ 70. Attorney-general may act on private relation so long as the grievance is one affecting public interest and while he retains control of suit; so held where he seeks to restrain county board of auditors from exercising inhibited powers.—Attorney-General ex rel. Seitz v. Board of Auditors of Wayne County, 73 Mich. 53.

¶ 71. In a bill to restrain the erection of a church upon premises alleged to be owned in fee by complainant, a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church, the latter, under Comp. L. 1897, § 8844, providing that every express trust (with a certain exception not material) shall vest the whole estate in the trustees in law and inequity subject to the execution of the trust, is entitled to maintain the action even though the title which he holds is subject to a trust, if he is entitled as trustee to maintain the action.—Foley v. Kleibusch, 123 Mich. 416.

¶ 72. The holder of the legal title to land may maintain a bill for an injunction against a stranger to restrain interference with the property, though his deed was intended as a mortgage.—Wilkinson v. Dunkley-Williams Co., 139 Mich. 621.

¶ 73. The owner of lots to which access can be had only by means of a certain street, has such a peculiar interest in that street as to entitle him to bring injunction proceedings to restrain defendant from cutting into the street so as to prevent such access.—Wilkinson v. Dunkley-Williams Co., 139 Mich. 621.

¶ 74. Although the right to fish in a private pond belonging to an estate has been granted to another by the heir who is in possession under an arrangement among those interested this does not prevent such heir bringing a suit to restrain a trespass upon such water for the purpose of fishing.—Winans v. Willett, 197 Mich. 512.

Taxpayers as plaintiffs in suits to enjoin officers and municipalities, see post § 103.
Joinder of taxpayers in injunction suit, see post § 106.
Sufficiency of bill for injunction in taxpayers' suits, see post § 108.

¶ 75. An individual taxpayer whose tax is but a few cents cannot maintain a bill to restrain a threatened diversion of public funds by the board of supervisors. Public wrongs must be redressed by the people's public agents and not by private intervention.—Steffes v. Moran, 68 Mich. 291.

¶ 76. A resident taxpayer whose interest is sufficient to confer jurisdiction may maintain a bill in equity against a municipality to restrain a threatened and imminent illegal expenditure of the public funds.—Savidge v. Spring Lake, 112 Mich. 91.

¶ 77. A taxpayer is entitled to maintain a suit to restrain the illegal action of the municipality in the expenditure of public moneys.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

¶ 77a. A resident owner of real and personal estate subject to taxation can maintain a bill to enjoin the issue of railroad-aid bonds under a resolution of the township board, such bonds being unlawful.—Curtenius v. Hoyt, 37 Mich. 588.

¶ 78. A taxpayer who has voluntarily paid his tax for the use proposed to be made of it cannot restrain the payment of the money for the purposes for which it was raised, inasmuch as he has no interest in the money.—Bartlett v. Austin & Western Co., 147 Mich. 58.

¶ 79. To entitle a taxpayer to equitable relief as a taxpayer against a city selling electric supplies to its inhabitants at cost and installing equipment at a specified charge, present or prospective damages must be shown.—Andrews v. City of South Haven, 187 Mich. 294.

Right of one in default of order for restitution to restrain administrator from recovering value of property, see post ¶ 188.

¶ 80. Chancery will not enjoin the closing of a private alley for one who, in order to obtain a preliminary writ, forcibly invaded defendant's possession and destroyed a fence the latter had erected to close the alley.—De Sale v. Millard, 108 Mich. 581.

Eleventh-hour action to avoid injunction against monopoly, see also Combinations ¶ 26.

¶ 81. Complainant sought to enjoin the location of a burying ground near his residence for the reason, among others, that it would destroy his well. Held, to be a strong circumstance against his application that he had voluntarily bought and located his residence in the immediate vicinity of a burying ground which defendants were merely proposing to enlarge without bringing it nearer. And it appearing further that complainant's barnyard was nearer the well and more likely to injure it than the burying ground, held, that an injunction should be denied.—Upjohn v. Richland Tp. Board of Health, 46 Mich. 542.

¶ 82. A trustee of a religious corporation has no equities against his fellow trustees because of their action, unless he does what he can to restrain them speedily.—Cicotte v. Anciaux, 53 Mich. 227.

¶ 83. While a millowner was enlarging his mill and raising the height of his dam, not having acquired any additional rights of flowage, complainants remained silent and allowed their minor sons to labor upon the new dam knowing that it would increase the flowing of their premises. Held, that complainants could not ask that the height of the dam be abated, but that they were entitled to compensation for the damage caused by the additional flowage.—Blake v. Cornwell, 65 Mich. 467.

¶ 85. An injunction against an obstruction of an area way will not be denied because delayed until the building constituting the obstruction has been erected, where the complainants notified the defendant of their rights and claims before construction was commenced, and made a tender of the sum required by the contract under which they claimed, to secure the right to have the area way open.—Tolsma v. James E. Scripps Corporation, 153 Mich. 14.

¶ 86. Complainant alleged in his bill for injunction and damages that he had purchased a lot from defendant, owner of a plot, on the assurance that certain building restrictions contained in the sale to him would be imposed on subsequent buyers. The evidence showed that many lots were sold subsequent to complainant's purchase and to the knowledge of complainant without such restrictions, and without any protest by complainant. Later the lots were auctioned off; complainant attended and bought one, and gave no notice to the auction purchasers of the said restrictions. Complainant did not file his bill of injunction until six months after the auction. Held, that his conduct was such as to deprive him of any right to equitable relief.—Stott v. Avery, 156 Mich. 674.

¶ 87. The mere fact that one purchases land upon which an adjoining proprietor habitually trespasses does not put the purchaser under any duty to permit the trespasses to be repeated, and he cannot be prevented by such fact, under any doctrine of laches, from enjoining such trespass.—Offley v. Garlinger, 161 Mich. 351.

¶ 88. That a person interested in establishing the illegality of a dam, but not a party to a suit at law to recover damages for wrongful diversion of water, agrees to share the costs if such action is lost will not estop him from prosecuting a bill to secure a mandatory injunction compelling the removal of the dam.—Feldkamp v. Ernst, 177 Mich. 550.

¶ 89. That a municipality permits a person to proceed with the construction of a building in violation of an ordinance does not estop the city from restraining the completion of the structure, where the owner proceeded with its construction after notice to desist.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

¶ 90. Where a landowner refused to inform the defendant what he would accept for additional flowage rights in his land, stating that he would wait until he could determine what his damage actually would be, and the defendant proceeded to raise its dam with a considerable expenditure of money, one acquiring such land with full knowledge of all such facts is estopped from claiming injunctive relief, but must seek compensation by way of damages.—Morrison v. Queen City Elec. Light & Power Co., 181 Mich. 624.

¶ 91. The owner of land bordering on a lake who has had full knowledge for ten years of the increased height of the water, due to a dam of a power company, has stood by and allowed the company to spend a great deal of money in acquiring flowage rights and making other large investments, and has recovered and been paid damages for overflow for a series of years, is not entitled to an injunction to compel the lowering of the dam to its former height, but he will be relegated to his remedy for damages in full satisfaction for the damage, past and prospective.—Holcomb v. Alpena Power Co., 198 Mich. 165.

¶ 92. The purchaser of a business of selling and exchanging flour and feed, under a contract providing against the seller's engaging in a like business, was not entitled after a delay of nearly 3 years to restrain the carrying on of a grocery business in which flour was sold with the knowledge and consent of, or at least without objection from, such purchaser.—Buck v. Coward, 122 Mich. 530.

General law as to doing or offering to do equity, see Equity § 4.

¶ 93. An insurance company in seeking by bill in equity to enjoin suit on a policy, on the ground that the same was obtained by fraud, must tender back the premiums paid.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Freedman, 159 Mich. 114.

¶ 94. One cannot obtain an injunction to restrain an officer from levying on the complainant's property an execution against a third person, until he has notified the officer of his claim and given him an opportunity to abandon the levy.—Hinkle v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 422.

¶ 96. It is not a ground of equitable jurisdiction that, in case of a violation of a contract, the damages are uncertain.—Attorney-General ex rel. Marr v. Board of Education of Detroit, 133 Mich. 681.

¶ 97. A bill by a book publishing company to enjoin a board of education from changing the textbooks of complainant which were in use under contract in the schools, being in effect an attempt to enforce such contract in equity was not sustained, as its remedy at law was complete if it had a valid contract.—Attorney General ex rel. Marr v. Board of Education of Detroit, 133 Mich. 681.

¶ 98. A court of equity has jurisdiction to restrain work under a paving contract with a city where, through the fraudulent acts of the city officers, the contract has been departed from in fraud of the city and to the benefit of the contractors.—Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 132 Mich. 126.

¶ 99. Under a contract for the purchase of one run of first-class power and two runs of second-class power as developed by a canal, the first-class power having priority, and the second-class power being available only when there was more water than necessary to run all the first-class power, the use of a wheel requiring more than one run of first-class power will be enjoined where it is shown that for the greater part of the year none of the second-class power is available, since the purchaser's right is governed by the contract.—Powers v. Perkins, 132 Mich. 33.

¶ 100. Where a mortgage contained a stipulation respecting the sale of only a certain kind of beer on the mortgaged premises equity will not interfere to enjoin the selling of another beer for the reason that the remedy at law for damages is adequate.—Hardy v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 594.

¶ 101. A court of chancery will not interfere by an injunction which must necessarily operate as a decree for specific performance, to enforce a contract to sell a particular brand of beer, where the only purpose is to insure a brewer the profits arising from such sale, since to do so would be for the court to undertake the supervising of private contracts between parties engaged in the liquor traffic (a business by sufferance), extending over a term of years.—Voight Brewery Co. v. Holtz, 168 Mich. 352.

¶ 102. A stipulation for sale of one product exclusively not in its nature enforceable by injunction is not made enforceable by the fact that its performance is secured among other promises by mortgage.—Hardy v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 594.

§ 27. Contracts in restraint of trade or competition.

Injunction to prevent interference with business, see post § 89.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence in suit to enjoin carrying on of ice business, see post § 112.

Decree in suit to enjoin partners from engaging in business contrary to agreement, see post ¶ 486.

¶ 103. Violation of restrictive covenants not to engage in competitive business accompanying a sale of good-will may be restrained by injunction.—C. H. Barrett Co. v. Ainsworth, 156 Mich. 351.

¶ 104. A corporation participating with its stockholder in the breach of an agreement made by the latter not to engage in a certain business may be restrained, notwithstanding it might be doubted whether it could be restrained from the act complained of, if nothing more than their relationship as stockholder and corporation was shown.—Beal v. Chase, 31 Mich. 490.

¶ 105. Injunction may be allowed to restrain defendants from carrying on a particular business contrary to agreement contained in sale of the business of plaintiff as their successors.—Thompson v. Andrus, 73 Mich. 551.

¶ 106. Defendant's action in opening a hardware store ostensibly in her own name, but really managed by her codefendants of the same surname who had sold out and agreed with complainants not to engage in business, was a fraud upon complainant's rights and should be enjoined.—Thompson v. Andrus, 73 Mich. 551.

¶ 108. Where a physician agrees in writing to sell his practice to another and that he will not engage in the practice in the stated locality after a fixed date, he will be restrained from continuing such practice and cannot defend by showing that under a verbal agreement, void under the statute of frauds, the purchaser agreed to rent one of the physician's houses, and that if he continued at the city in question he should purchase the house and in such event the amount paid under the agreement should be applied on the purchase price.—Lemon v. Randall, 124 Mich. 687.

¶ 109. A breach by an employee of a contract not to enter the same business for himself within a certain period will not be enjoined unless the services rendered are of a special, unusual, and extraordinary or intellectual character, the loss of which cannot be reasonably or adequately compensated by damages in an action at law, or unless the contract is ancillary or incidental to another contract, by which the purchaser acquires a business, a profession, or a stock of goods together with the good-will attending them.—Osius v. Hinchman, 150 Mich. 603.

¶ 110. In a contract for employment between complainant, a dental company, and defendant, the latter agreed not to engage in the practice of dentistry within five years after the termination of his employment, in any city where complainant had an office. The bill was filed to enjoin defendant from carrying out his expressed intention of opening an office for such practice in one of said cities; it alleged that defendant was threatening to go into business for himself, and to use and disclose certain formulæ and trade secrets which he had learned from complainant, and the use of which would constitute an irreparable injury to complainant. Upon the hearing, complainant withdrew the question of formulæ and trade secrets entirely from the consideration of the court. Held, that since nothing is left as a foundation for the bill except the threatened breach of the agreement not to engage in practice, and since there are no allegations that complainant will suffer irreparable loss on account of such breach, and no showing that complainant's damages are not easily ascertainable, nor that his remedy at law is inadequate, the bill does not state a case for equitable relief.—Osius v. Hinchman, 150 Mich. 603.

¶ 111. Where a business was sold under an agreement that the seller would not engage in the same business and the seller's wife who did not sign the contract enters into such business, a permanent injunction restraining her and her husband from entering into that business is proper, when it appears that she knew of the contract, that the money and credit used by her is that of the husband, that he manages and controls the business as fully as before the sale and that they are attempting to evade the contract with knowledge of its effect.—Weickgenant v. Eccles, 173 Mich. 695.

¶ 112. An agreement "never to tow vessels in competition with" complainants is too uncertain and indefinite to be enforced by injunction.—Caswell v. Gibbs, 33 Mich. 331.

§ 28. ——Agreements not to use trade name or trade mark.

Modification of decree restraining use of trade name, see post ¶ 515.

General law as to trade names and trade marks, see Trade Marks.

Enjoining use of trade marks and trade names where no breach of contract involved, see Trade Marks.

¶ 113. Where the proprietor of a business known as "Little Jake" sells the same others who associate with him subsequently in establishing a rival business under the name "Little Jake" may be restrained to the same extent as the vendor himself.—Grow v. Seligman, 47 Mich. 607.

¶ 114. Where a person had established a business in the use of the name "Little Jake," and afterwards sold the business and stipulated not to make use of it in a rival business to that of his assignee, but that the latter might have the benefit of its use, held, that there was no reason in public policy why the vendor should not be enjoined from violating his agreement; there is no necessary fraud upon the public in such a contract, and no necessary deception.—Grow v. Seligman, 47 Mich. 607.

¶ 115. When an express contract has been made to remain out of business, or for the use by a purchaser of a fictitious name or trade mark, the courts will enjoin the continued violation of such agreement.—Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473.

¶ 116. A bill states a cause for equitable relief and if the charges therein are true complainant is entitled to the relief prayed where it is averred that defendants deliberately violated contract obligations, that a contract not to use a certain name in a business was ratified by a corporation formed by defendants but that a new corporation was formed for the purpose of avoiding it, and that the name is being used and the prayer is for a temporary injunction against defendants from further proceeding with the organization of the new corporation and from using such name in the business and for specific performance of the contract.—George v. Rollins, 176 Mich. 144.

¶ 117. One who is given employment by a manufacturer whose processes of manufacture, methods, and machinery are kept secret from the public, upon the agreement, express or implied, that he will not use the information imparted to him in the course of his employment for his own benefit or communicate it to strangers, will be enjoined from breaking his agreement.—O. & W. Thum Co. v. Tloczynski, 114 Mich. 149.

¶ 118. On authority of O. & W. Thum Co. v. Tloczynski, 114 Mich. 149, a decree enjoining the disclosure of trade secrets and the use of them to the defendant's profit may be made on proper evidence that defendant acquired knowledge of them by reason of employment by plaintiff.—Sanitas Nut Food Co. v. Cemer, 134 Mich. 370.

¶ 119. Complainant was engaged in retailing tea. He employed drivers who took orders from customers and delivered the tea on such orders, retaining a percentage of the money collected as compensation. Each driver was required to take the name and address of each customer on the order blanks. Defendant worked for complainant as a driver for about three years. He then made an arrangement to go to work for a third party in a similar enterprise, and in the last week in complainant's employ spoke to his customers and secured the promise of many of them to buy of his new employer. He then erased the names of the customers from the blanks and refused to give a list of them to complainant. Held, that while defendant might be enjoined from using the lists or copies of them, he could not be restrained from soliciting such of the customers as he might remember.—Grand Union Tea Co. v. Dodds, 164 Mich. 50.

¶ 120. Complainant was engaged in retailing tea. He employed drivers who took orders from customers and delivered the tea on such orders, receiving a percentage as compensation. Each driver was required to take the name and address of each customer in the order blanks. Defendant worked for complainant as a driver for about three years. He then made an arrangement to go to work for a third party in a similar enterprise, and in the last week in complainant's employ spoke to his customers and secured the promise of many of them to buy of his new employer. He then erased the names of the customers from the blanks and refused to give a list of them to complainant. Held, complainant was entitled to damages and to an injunction compelling defendant to supply it with lists of the customers, and forbidding him using the lists or copies of them.—Grand Union Tea Co. v. Dodds, 164 Mich. 50.

¶ 123. A lease contained a provision that no intoxicating liquors should be sold on the premises. Complainant consented to the sale of liquors by an assignee of the lessee with the provision that the privilege of selling liquor should not be extended to the heirs or assigns of said assignee or to any other person. Defendant bought the assignee's interest in the lease at a judgment sale. Complainant refused to permit defendant to continue the sale of liquors. Held, complainant was entitled to a permanent injunction forbidding the sale of liquors.—Hammond v. Hibbler, 168 Mich. 66. (Ostrander, C. J., Steere and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 124. Where, under a lease providing that defendant saloonkeeper shall buy his beer exclusively from complainant brewer, the former finds his business unprofitable and with the consent and upon the suggestion of the latter the provision of the lease is orally modified so as to permit defendant lessee to sell beer purchased from brewers other than complainant, and under said oral agreement defendant in fact sells only a small amount of said other beer, a bill in equity will not lie to enjoin defendant from violating said provision of the lease but he will be left to his remedies at law.—Voight Brewery Co. v. Holtz, 168 Mich. 352.

¶ 125. Where a landlord has threatened to destroy the leased building, eject the tenant, and terminate the tenancy, this is so serious in its nature, and so difficult of ascertaining the resulting damages and adequately making reparation therefor, as to come within the purview of irreparable injury and confer upon a court of chancery jurisdiction to enjoin the same.—Minnis v. Newbro-Gallogly Co., 174 Mich. 635.

¶ 126. If according to the conditions of a lease, a lessor has an absolute right to prohibit changes in the exterior walls of a demised building, injunctive relief will be granted only on the ground of irreparable injury to the freehold through changes impairing the structural safety of the building; for anything beyond that the remedy at law is adequate.—B. Siegel Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 145.

Proof and variance in suit to enjoin breach of building restrictions, see post § 110.

Decree in suit to enjoin violation of restrictions in deed, see post ¶ 483.

Violation of building restrictions, see Buildings §§ 20, 25.

¶ 127. A grantee will be enjoined from violating a condition in his deed against erecting a saloon on the land conveyed, where the grantor bought such land to protect other of his property from depreciation in value by the proximity of a saloon, and although before conveying to defendant he had sold adjoining property without restriction and had leased other premises in the vicinity for saloon purposes which use had ceased.—Reilly v. Otto, 108 Mich. 330.

¶ 128. A valid building restriction is binding upon a city as well as an individual, and before it can use a lot charged with such restriction for a purpose prohibited by the restriction it must obtain by purchase or condemnation the title of all owners of any interest therein, and when it has not done so, equity may properly intervene to preserve the status quo until such interests are ac-

Enjoining acts constituting waste, see also post § 73, and Waste.

¶ 129. Equity has jurisdiction in a proper case to restrain an administrator from unlawfully dissipating an estate.—Clifton v. Keeler, 158 Mich. 615.

Provisions as to enjoining proceedings at law, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 8-21; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12662-12675.

¶ 130. The enforcement of a legal right will not be enjoined unless a case is made out showing a clear equity superior to that of the legal owner, and such as in a court of equity would control it.—Boinay v. Coats, 17 Mich. 411.

¶ 131. It is not within the province of equity to intervene and enjoin the prosecution in a court of law, having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, of a cause of action given to plaintiff under the well-settled rules of law, because in the particular case a hardship will be done if the cause of action is enforced.—Wierengo v. Mason, 115 Mich. 646.

¶ 133. One who is himself in default of the condition of a decree ordering the reassignment of an interest in an estate, in that he neglected to pay a sum in restitution, cannot restrain an action by the administrator to recover the value of the property on allegations that the decree was self-effectuating and that eventually he is entitled to the estate because the debts are merely nominal, where it appears that the other party makes adverse claim to the estate; since it is the duty of the administrator to get in the estate and distribute it in regular course.—Crane v. Beedle, 95 Mich. 524.

¶ 134. A sale by a guardian of his ward's share in lands whereof the ward was a coheir does not blend the proceeds with the personalty of the ancestor's estate in another's hands and require an accounting, even though such estate has not been settled; and an injunction to restrain an action at law by the coheir for such proceeds was denied.—Cole v. McFall, 48 Mich. 227.

¶ 135. The prosecution of an action at law will not be enjoined on the ground that as the plaintiff has assigned his interest to a third person, the defendant may be liable to the assignee, where such action was begun under an agreement between the assignor and the assignee as to the use of the former's name.—Michigan Sugar Co. v. Moffett, 183 Mich. 589.

¶ 136. A bill will not lie in equity to require an accounting of a contract, to restrain the defendant from proceeding with a replevin suit begun by the complainant, to declare such action to have been settled by the parties, and to cancel the replevin bond; since there was an adequate legal remedy for determining such questions in the replevin suit on an issue suggesting the settlement framed under § 10402 et seq., Comp. L. 1897, § 13116 et seq., How. St., 2nd Ed.—C. J. Huebel Co. v. MacKinnon, 186 Mich. 617.

¶ 137. A bill in equity will not lie to enjoin actions at law on the ground merely that the defense relied on is an equitable estoppel; the defense will be as perfect at law.—Barnard v. German-American Seminary, 49 Mich. 444.

¶ 138. After a vendor's death the vendee paid the price of the goods bought to an agent of the vendor, believing him to be a partner of the vendor, and the money was paid over by the agent to the vendor's widow. The vendee being sued in trover by the vendor's special administrator, filed a bill to enjoin the suit and for a disclosure of the moneys received by defendant as special administrator, praying that if any liability should be established in the trover suit it should be decreed to be paid out of moneys, etc., in the hands of such agent and widow of deceased, but not averring that the money had come into the special administrator's hands. Held, that as such facts were available as a defense in the trover suit, the bill would not lie.—Pardridge v. Brennan, 64 Mich. 575.

¶ 139. A bill to restrain the prosecution of an action at law to recover a tax assessed against certain bank-stock cannot be maintained by the bank on the ground that such stock was transferred by the owner before the tax became a lien; the defense is available at law.—St. Johns Nat. Bank v. Township of Bingham, 113 Mich. 203.

¶ 140. A court of equity may enjoin an action at law on grounds which may be urged as a defense to such an action, and may therefore enjoin an action begun on a life insurance policy and cancel the policy on the ground that it had been obtained by means of false statements, and further that the insured had committed suicide.—Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Blain, 144 Mich. 218.

¶ 141. Equity will not enjoin an action at law in which a money judgment only is sought, where adequate relief may be granted the defendant in such action.—Michigan Sugar Co. v. Moffett, 183 Mich. 589.

¶ 142. Injunction will not issue to restrain condemnation proceedings to open a boulevard across a railroad company's tracks, where complainant has a complete remedy by way of defense in the condemnation proceedings.—Detroit, G. H. & M. R. v. Detroit, 91 Mich. 444.

§ 35. To prevent multiplicity of suits.

See also ante § 16.

As ground for enjoining ejectment suits, see post § 46.

¶ 143. The avoidance of many suits may in certain cases justify the filing of a bill of peace.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 168 Mich. 180.

¶ 144. A bill of peace, enjoining litigation at law, lies only where the plaintiff has already satisfactorily established his right at law, or where the persons who controvert it are so numerous as to render the direction of a court of equity indispensable to embrace all the parties concerned, and to save multiplicity of suits.—Rogers v. Schram, 161 Mich. 278.

¶ 145. Injunction may sometimes be sought to restrain a suit at law where the latter only involves a portion of the controversy, or is likely to leave an apparent record title clouding the legal title in issue.—Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355.

¶ 146. An allegation that the defendants have fraudulently confederated to harass the plaintiff with suits will not uphold an injunction under a bill of peace where the defendants claim adversely to each other.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 168 Mich. 180.

¶ 147. An injunction to restain multiplicity of suits will not lie where a court of law is competent to give relief by consolidating them.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 168 Mich. 180.

¶ 148. The prosecution of an action at law will not be enjoined on the ground that the contract in issue is similar to many others on which the defendant is liable, and on which it may be sued by hundreds of persons not parties to the action.—Michigan Sugar Co. v. Moffett, 183 Mich. 589.

¶ 149. In those cases where leave of the equity court to bring suit at law is required such leave is seldom jurisdictional, and when suit is brought without the order granting leave it is usually no more than an irregularity, and the proceedings will not be restrained where nothing substantial can be gained.—Culver v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 25.

Enjoining proceedings pending in other county, see post § 39.

Jurisdiction and venue, see post § 100.

Jurisdiction and powers of courts generally, see Courts, V.

Extent of jurisdiction of circuit in exercise of supervisory powers, see Courts § 55.

Bringing injunction as contemptuous interference with another court's jurisdiction, see Contempt § 4.

¶ 150. One court cannot enjoin another.—People ex rel. Mabley v. Detroit Superior Judge, 41 Mich. 31.

¶ 151. One court cannot interfere by injunction to restrain proceedings just commenced and already pending in another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction.—E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works v. Speed, 59 Mich. 272.

¶ 152. A court has no jurisdiction to restrain competent proceedings upon a judgment obtained in another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction.—Maclean v. Speed, 52 Mich. 257.

Jurisdiction to relieve by cancellation suit notwithstanding inability to restrain proceedings pending in other state for enforcement of judgment, see Courts ¶ 230.

¶ 153. The court of chancery will not restrain a suit or proceeding previously commenced in a court of a sister state or in any of the United States courts.—Carroll v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, H. 197.

¶ 154. Chancery will not restrain a suit or proceeding previously begun in a court of a sister state or in a federal court.—Carroll v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, H. 197.

¶ 155. A state court will not issue an injunction in a case against a receiver appointed by a federal court, in which the enforcement of the injunction would depend upon the judgment of the federal court appointing the receiver.—Rogers v. Chippewa Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 79.

Proper county for injunction suits, see Venue, I.

¶ 156. Authority to enjoin a pending action at law is not confined to the chancery court for the county in which the action at law is pending as the injunction restrains the party and not the court, and any court has jurisdiction over the party before it.—Mactavish v. Kent Circuit Judge, 122 Mich. 242.

¶ 157. The circuit court of one county has jurisdiction to restrain an action at law in another county on a bill filed January 1, 1916, as the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, repealed so much of Pub. Acts 1915, No. 283, concerning jurisdiction in injunction cases as was inconsistent therewith.—Long Point Development Ass'n v. McIntosh, 193 Mich. 567.

¶ 158. One will not be restrained from relying on a defense simply on the ground that those who could have rebutted it are dead or disqualified from testifying.—Dubois v. Campau, 37 Mich. 248.

¶ 159. John Parr in his will left the residue of his estate to his wife, Mary Parr, provided she did not die first. John Parr and his wife were both killed simultaneously in an accident. The probate judge ordered defendant, administrator John Parr, to pay over the residue to the administrator of Mary Parr. From this order complainant, an heir of John Parr, appealed. Complainant brought this bill to restrain the defendant from expending funds of the estate in interfering with such appeal. Held, the bill should be denied, since the defendant had the right to have the disposition of the estate adjudicated in order to see to the proper execution of his trust.—Clifton v. Keeler, 158 Mich. 615.

¶ 160. Injunction will lie to restrain an action on a contract of agency delivered in violation of an agreement to hold it in escrow until certain changes in it had been made.—Wyckoff v. Victor Sewing Mach. Co., 43 Mich. 309.

¶ 161. Defendant, the beneficiary, conspired with one Burnham to get insurance on the life of defendant's father. Burnham knew the father had been rejected by other companies, and was uninsurable, but told the agent of complainant company he was a good risk. Held, that a bill would lie to enjoin defendant from suing on the policy, since he would not be allowed to profit by the fraud of his coconspirator.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Freedman, 159 Mich. 114.

¶ 162. A pending action at law upon an insurance policy that had been reinstated upon a fraudulent certification of the good health of the insured after it had been allowed to lapse, may be enjoined, and cancellation of the policy decreed.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Dick, 114 Mich. 337.

¶ 163. A bill in equity charging that the complainant made a parol agreement to sell to the defendant about 13,000 acres of timber land at $3.50 per acre, that the complainant had not estimated the timber and was ignorant of the amount that the defendant's agent represented to the complainant, that he had estimated the timber and that the complainant could not lose and might possibly gain by selling the land upon the basis of $3.50 for every 5,000 feet of timber, that upon these representations the complainant entered into a contract and deeded the land to the defendant, that it turned out that the value of the timber was about $12,000 instead of $45,000 based upon the defendant's value of the land, is sufficient to warrant cancellation of the deed and an injunction against an action at law to recover a part of the purchase price paid.—Noble v. Grandin, 125 Mich. 383.

Enjoining transfer of negotiable instruments, see post § 68.

Joint maker as party to suit to enjoin enforcement of judgment on note, see post ¶ 356.

Presumptions in suit to enjoin action on bond, see post ¶ 395.

¶ 164. An injunction may issue to enjoin the collection of detached bond-coupons in the hands of one not an innocent holder.—Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Turner, 79 Mich. 133.

¶ 165. Defendant, a creditor of a lumber company in the hands of a receiver, agreed to sell for fifty cents on the dollar, its claims to complainant. Complainant sent a certified check to defendant for the amount, with a letter stating that same was to be paid defendant only if complainant succeeded in buying the assets of said lumber company at the sale and the title thereto was transferred to him and the transaction confirmed by the court. Complainant bought at the sale but the sale was set aside on the ground that two members of the creditors' committee were officers of defendant. Complainant did not receive said assets or pay anything therefor. Held, the conditions attached to the payment of the check not being fulfilled, complainant was entitled to an order enjoining its collection.—Preston v. National Bank of Ionia, 169 Mich. 571.

¶ 167. Sureties on a replevin bond can enjoin the prosecution of a suit thereon where their principal without their knowledge has stipulated that defendant may take judgment.—Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525.

¶ 169. A. advanced money to his son B., who was to support him and his wife for life for the use of it. B. died, and A. of his own motion went to live with a grandson, C., who took care of him at his own request and not at that of B.'s executors or for their benefit. But C. procured from them notes and a mortgage which he claims were given to pay him for keeping the old people. A. had no personal claim against the executors and never proved his claim against the estate or assigned it to C., and it was neither paid nor suspended. Held, that the securities did not represent a debt and should be given up and cancelled, and a perpetual injunction was granted against their enforcement.—Teed v. Marvin, 41 Mich. 216.

¶ 170. A. sold his interest in a partnership to his partner, B., and for a balance of payment took B.'s notes to C., who surrendered A.'s notes to the same amount. Before the maturity of the notes B. discovered that the representations on which he bought the interest were fraudulent, and notified C. that he should not pay the notes. Held, that C., not being cognizant of the fraud, could not be restrained from collecting the notes.—Outhwite v. Porter, 13 Mich. 533.

¶ 171. The prosecution of an action at law against a mortgagor's vendor, upon a covenant of title, was restrained, and the deed reformed where such vendor, being the owner of only the N. W. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ and the S. E. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ of a section, mistakenly described the premises in his deed as the N. W. ¼ and the S. E. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ of the section, and where the vendee in giving said mortgage followed the description in the deed with the addition, "containing 80 acres more or less" and subsequently, to save the expense of foreclosure, gave a deed to the mortgagee likewise containing the same description as in the original deed, but where the original parties understood that only 80 acres were involved in the transaction and the mortgagee should have known from her mortgage that only 80 acres were involved.—Davis v. Benedict, 122 Mich. 657.

¶ 172. The mere fact that the covenantee, at the time he took the deed containing covenants sued on, knew of the insufficiency or invalidity of the grantors' title and did not disclose it to them, or that one of the grantors has become insolvent since the execution of the deed, thus rendering complainant liable to pay the entire damages for the breach, affords no reason to restrain prosecution of an action on the covenants.—Sparrow v. Smith, 63 Mich. 209.

Injunction to protect lien of attachment, see ante ¶ 15.

Validity of preliminary injunction staying garnishment, see post ¶ 434.

Pleading in suits to restrain attachment, see post § 107.

¶ 173. Where, after a receiver has been appointed in Indiana for a benefit association organized there, garnishment proceedings are instituted in this state prior to an ancillary receivership here, in aid of suits against the association upon matured certificates issued to Michigan members, injunction to restrain such proceedings will be refused.—Baldwin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 432.

¶ 174. An order of the circuit court in chancery permitting the complainant in a suit pending in that court to begin an action at law for the same cause of action, and to garnish in aid thereof, but restraining all proceedings in the law court after service of process, cannot be sustained, as it ties up defendant's funds without giving him the rights which the garnishment statutes confer.—Foster v. Kent Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 285.

Necessity that complainant have clear right or title, see ante §§ 11, 12.

Multiplicity of suits as ground for injunction, see ante §§ 16, 35.

Refusal of relief where remedy at law adequate, see ante ¶ 24.

Sufficiency of answer in suit to enjoin agreement and to quiet title, see post ¶ 390.

Parties defendant to suit to enjoin ejectment, see post § 104.

¶ 175. Ejectment suits for a part of the premises may be enjoined where complainant has a right to file a bill to quiet title to the whole, thus saving multiplicity of suits.—Woods v. Monroe, 17 Mich. 238.

¶ 176. A railroad company contracted for certain lands, and under the conditions of the contract proceeded to lay its track across them, receiving at length a deed from the only owner of whose rights it had notice. Meanwhile the same land had been set off by deed of partition to a party who held some unrecorded claim to an undivided interest in the premises, and this party afterwards quitclaimed the land by a deed referring to the company's occupancy. Held, that an injunction would lie to restrain proceedings in ejectment brought against the company by the holder of the quitclaim.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Brown, 37 Mich. 533.

¶ 177. Where parties claim conflicting descriptions of land under a common source of title, one who had a contract right and had entered into possession before the other purchased, but whose deed was subsequent to the latter's, may maintain a bill to have ejectment enjoined.—Seager v. Cooley, 44 Mich. 14.

¶ 178. One who claims the legal title to land under a will has no reason for resorting to equity to restrain an action of ejectment against him, except when the common law is inadequate to give full relief.—Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355.

¶ 179. A man left all his property to his wife, providing, however, that if she should have any children who should reach majority it should be equally divided between her and the children, and that it should be converted into money and securities. She had a posthumous child which died an infant, and she died not long afterwards, leaving the property to a sister, who sold it. But a brother of the original testator claimed it under the statute of descents and brought ejectment against the purchaser who sought to enjoin his action. Held, that the title was a legal question and the bill should be dismissed.—Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355.

¶ 181. An attorney's assertion of his client's claim of dower in certain lots in an amount greatly in excess of that which the owners believe to be justifiable, and his threat that, if the amount is not paid he will institute additional suits in ejectment, which would involve costs to an extent rendering it more expensive for the owners to litigate than to accede to his demands, is not such an indication of fraud as will justify a court of equity in enjoining the prosecution of the suits at law.—Douglass v. Boardman, 113 Mich. 618.

¶ 182. A defendant who has the legal title to the premises must succeed in an ejectment suit, unless it can be shown that the premises were the homestead of the grantor, and inasmuch as legal title and not equitable title is involved he cannot maintain a bill to restrain the ejectment suit.—Lott v. Lott, 146 Mich. 580.

¶ 183. Complainant, a contractual vendee of land, brought a bill to enjoin an ejectment suit and for specific performance. Complainant was in default in payments, and defendant had terminated the contract by notice. Held, that the bill should be dismissed.—Lafrance v. Griffin, 160 Mich. 236.

¶ 184. Where no equitable title is claimed by complainant, and only legal titles are involved, equity will not restrain an action of ejectment.—Rogers v. Schram, 161 Mich. 278.

¶ 185. Complainant alleged in his bill that as mortgagee he obtained title to premises through foreclosure; that two of the three children of the deceased mortgagor denied the mortgagor's right to give the mortgage, and were suing complainant in ejectment; and that the third child threatened suit. Complainant did not show he had established his title at law. Held, the bill would not lie on the ground of preventing multiplicity of suits.—Rogers v. Schram, 161 Mich. 278.

¶ 187. A grantee under testator's daughter is without equity to support an injunction against the prosecution of ejectment by the daughter's children, claiming under the will as remaindermen in trust after the daughter's life estate, where that trust was void, so that the land vested in the daughter as heir rather than as devisee, and where she and they, as her heirs, are bound by her assent to and acquiescence in a partition decree of the probate court conforming to the terms of her father's void will, which apportioned to her a life estate only with remainder to her children none of whom were in existence at that time; since in neither view could they in ejectment attack the probate partition because they were not parties.—James E.

Scripps Corporation v. Parkinson, 186 Mich. 663.

¶ 188. Where the complainant has resided on land for more than five years under a state homestead land deed, the issuance of which was unsuccessfully contested by defendant who claimed through mesne conveyances, the latter will be enjoined from prosecuting an action of ejectment to recover such land.—Olson v. Williams, 185 Mich. 294.

¶ 189. Injunction against the prosecution of an action for trespass for removing timber under a partly executed parol contract will be denied, where the circumstances are such that in equity the logger might have obtained specific performance of his contract to remove the logs.—Oconto Co. v. Lundquist, 119 Mich. 264.

See also ante ¶ 136.

Enjoining suit on replevin bond, see ante ¶ 167.

¶ 190. Execution of a writ of replevin to retake certain boilers sold to her husband, will not be enjoined at the instance of a wife on the ground that the buildings in which the boilers were placed were owned by her and her husband jointly in entirety, where such boilers did not become fixtures.—Schellenberg v. Detroit Heating & Lighting Co., 130 Mich. 439.

Bill in restraint of foreclosure by purchaser of mortgaged property to test lien, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 332.

¶ 191. A mortgagee turned over to his wife a note and mortgage in satisfaction of claims held by her against him; and afterwards formally assigned the same, without delivery, to a third person. The mortgagor made payment to the wife, and took up the mortgage. Held, that he might have an injunction restraining the subsequent assignee from proceeding to foreclose.—Haescig v. Brown, 84 Mich. 503.

¶ 192. The fact that under an order of distribution an executor has assigned to a legatee a purchase-money mortgage which he had himself executed to the testator, and that afterwards, falsely representing the mortgaged land to be unincumbered has sold such land to a third person who without examining the records paid the price thereof, gives the grantee no right to enjoin the legatee from foreclosing, for, both parties being innocent, the grantee whose confidence rendered the fraud possible should suffer.—Crow v. Conant, 90 Mich. 247.

¶ 193. On a bill to enjoin foreclosure of certain mortgages held by defendant bank, complainant alleged that in reliance upon statements of defendant's cashier that one of such mortgages had been paid and the other materially reduced, he had prosecuted certain notes to judgment and bought in on execution the land which the bank was now seeking to sell. Held, that the bill should not be dismissed on the ground of want of equity in that the representations of the cashier were not binding on the bank, where it further claimed that one of the mortgages sought to be foreclosed was fully paid, and that the amount due on the other was less than shown in the notice of sale.—Melze-Alderton Shoe Co. v. First State Sav. Bank, 171 Mich. 26.

¶ 194. An action at law for deficiency on a chancery foreclosure sale will be enjoined where plaintiff's conduct caused the deficiency by preventing a fair sale.—Innes v. Stewart, 36 Mich. 285.

Jurisdiction to award injunction in condemnation cases, see post ¶ 340.

¶ 195. The prosecution of a void condemnation proceeding will be enjoined.—Sandusky Grain Co. v. Sanilac Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 126.

¶ 196. Equity will not enjoin condemnation proceedings which are being conducted according to law, on the ground of irreparable injury, or anticipated and probable danger to the public.—Sandusky Grain Co. v. Sanilac Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 126.

¶ 197. Courts of chancery should not enjoint criminal prosecutions on the theory that the law under which they are brought is unconstitutional, as such fact is available at law by way of defense to the criminal charge.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655.

¶ 198. It is a general rule that criminal prosecutions cannot be restrained by injunction.—Michigan Salt Works v. Baird, 173 Mich. 655.

¶ 198a. As a general rule a court of equity will not interfere to restrain a public officer from invoking the criminal law and instituting a prosecution for a violation of a statute; neither will it transfer to its own jurisdiction the trial of a criminal case.—Pratt Food Co. v. Bird, 148 Mich. 631.

¶ 199. The unconstitutionality of the law under which a criminal prosecution is brought being available at law as a defense chancery cannot enjoin such a prosecution.—Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 665.

§ 52. Enjoining appeal or review proceedings.

Injunction to preserve status quo pending review, see ante § 7.

¶ 200. The heirs, except one, and those having claim against an estate, had a meeting and an agreement was entered into as to the settlement of the claims, which were then allowed by the commissioners of claims. It was claimed that the heir who was not present ratified the settlement, but the assignee of his interest appealed from the allowance of the claims. Held, that the fact that the doctrine of equitable estoppel could be urged in suits at law in support of the claims, would not preclude equity taking jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the appeal, as a multiplicity of suits and expensive litigation would thereby be prevented.—Roth v. Rubert, 176 Mich. 484. Bird, J., dissenting.

C. ACTS OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS, ASSOCIATIONS AND OFFICERS OR MEMBERS.

[Note. The propriety of injunction at the suit of a corporation against its officers or members or at the suit of a stockholder or officer against the corporation or one in a corporate relation is usually dependent on the law of corporations or else involves the general law of injunctions. In either case proper classification would place the precedent elsewhere. For the propriety of injunction against a corporation, see Corporations § 204 and cross-references there collated. For the general law of injunctions not involving corporation law but having a corporate party, see other portions of Injunctions.]

¶ 201. The legislative department of a city cannot be restrained from doing any act within its legal discretion, but may be enjoined from any unlawful act.—City of Detroit v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 384.

¶ 202. Courts do not interfere by injunction with the discretion of the authorized agents of municipalities in the exercise of the powers granted by the legislature except where there is a want of jurisdiction in the proceedings.—Dixon v. City of Detroit, 86 Mich. 516.

¶ 203. The judicial power cannot interfere by injunction with the legitimate discretion of any other department of government, unless it is acting beyond its legal discretion.—Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

§ 55. Acts illegal or contrary to public policy.

Interest entitling taxpayers to maintain injunction, see ante § 21.
Taxpayers as plaintiffs, see post § 103.

¶ 204. Equity may restrain public officers by injunction where they are proceeding illegally or improperly, under a claim of right, to do any act to the prejudice of individual rights.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

¶ 205. The ground on which equity interferes to restrain public officers who are acting illegally is to prevent great and irreparable mischief. It will not interfere if the injury is slight or doubtful.—Brown v. Gardner, H. 291.

¶ 206. Where a majority of the electors of a village have filed a petition under Act No. 321, Pub. Acts 1907, protesting against the acceptance of saloon bonds and the issuance of licenses, an injunction will issue to prevent the officers of the village from ignoring such protest.—Village of Wolverine v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 718.

¶ 207. The fact that a city, in the exercise of its proprietary or business powers through its officers engages in a certain line of activity, commercial in its nature, and competes with and thereby damages one of its inhabitants in his business does not entitle him to relief, as the city owes him no immunity from competition.—Andrews v. City of South Haven, 187 Mich. 294.

¶ 208. A municipality may be enjoined in a suit by a taxpayer from making payment to a corporation, of which one of the city officers is a stockholder, for the value of goods delivered under a contract of sale void under the city charter, regardless of whether the contract was fair or unfair, or whether the officer had notice of the contract.—Ferle v. City of Lansing, 189 Mich. 501.

¶ 209. Where the trespass sought to be enjoined is an act of official oppression by public officers and agents, under color of office, a less grievance constitutes a ground for an interference by equity than when the trespass is by a private person.—Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196.

¶ 210. It is within the jurisdiction of equity to restrain highway officers from trespassing upon the lands of a private person under the claim that it is a public highway and to try and quiet his title.—Lawrence v. Kirby, 145 Mich. 432.

Sufficiency of bill to enjoin expenditure of public funds, see post ¶ 389.
Taxpayers as complainants, see post § 103.
In seeking injunctive relief against expenditures of public funds, see Municipal Corporations.

¶ 211. Under How. St. § 6612, the attorney general may file a bill upon the relation of citizens and taxpayers of a county to enjoin the illegal issue by the board of supervisors of such county of bonds to be used in erecting a court house.—McMullen v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 102 Mich. 608.

¶ 212. The attorney general may proceed in equity to enjoin a substantial abuse of municipal corporate power, such as the appropriation of corporate funds in a manner not justified by law, or the award of a paving contract contrary to the city charter. The pretense or purpose in raising the money is immaterial to the issue. But the remedy is extraordinary, and not to be resorted to for trifling amounts and mere errors of judgment.—Attorney General ex rel. Cook v. City of Detroit, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 213. A taxpayer's bill is not prematurely filed, which seeks an injunction restraining the officials of a municipality from the threatened expenditure for private enterprises, money raised by the sale of bonds issued in proceedings admitted to have been regular, even though no illegal act is shown to have yet been done by such officials; since such bonds once negotiated, would create a valid debt against the city which such taxpayer could not evade and his only remedy would be the possibility of intervening between the receipt of the money by the city authorities and its expenditure for such illegal purposes. —Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

¶ 214. Where land is dedicated to a particular purpose, and the municipal authorities undertake to appropriate it to an entirely different one, they may be restrained by injunction, on the application of an adjoining lot owner, from so doing.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

¶ 215. A city may be restrained from discontinuing a public market where such discontinuance is not authorized.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 71 Mich. 92.

¶ 216. Where the right of a city to certain property has been established by the statute of limitations, the use of such property by the city for a market which purpose is not unlawful will not be enjoined merely because such use may have a bad effect on neighboring property.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

¶ 217. Chancery has jurisdiction to enjoin the action of township boards of health in establishing burial places, should they proceed to exercise it illegally or improperly to the injury of others.—Upjohn v. Richland Tp. Board of Health, 46 Mich. 542.

§ 59. Usurpation or destruction of franchises.

Enjoining city from enforcing franchise obligation against street railway, see post ¶ 298.

Restraining city from forfeiting street railway franchise, see post § 99.

¶ 218. The attorney-general can intervene by information in equity to prevent franchises of a public nature from usurpation or destruction.—Attorney General v. City of Detroit, 71 Mich. 92.

Enjoining work under a paving contract with city, see ante ¶ 98.

Restraining municipality from opening or improving streets, see post § 80.

Parties to bill to restrain performance of public contract, see post ¶ 348.

Retention of suit to decree an accounting, see post ¶ 495.

Injunction to restrain local improvements or assessments for same, see also Local Improvements.

¶ 219. Where no fraud is alleged or any statute which is violated, injunction will not be granted to the lowest bidder for public work to restrain a municipal board from awarding the contract to one who is not such bidder.—Chandler v. Board of Education of Detroit, 104 Mich. 292.

¶ 220. Where city authorities propose to let a contract for an improvement to a bidder not entitled thereto, a proceeding by the attorney general, upon the relation of the bidder entitled to the contract, for an injunction to restrain such illegal action, is the appropriate remedy.—Attorney General ex rel. Allis Chambers Co. v. Public Lighting Commission of City of Detroit, 155 Mich. 207.

§ 61. Issuance and negotiation of bonds.

Parties to bill to prevent approval of bonds for liquor licenses, see post § 102.

Affidavits or showing in support of bill, see post ¶ 426.

Dissolution of temporary injunction restraining approval of liquor bonds, see post ¶ 468.

Relief to defendant in suit to restrain negotiation of village bonds, see post ¶ 513.

Mandamus to compel issuance of injunction restraining negotiation of township bonds, see Mandamus.

¶ 221. A resident owner of real and personal estate subject to taxation can maintain a bill to have the issue by a township of unlawful railroad aid bonds enjoined.—Curtenius v. Hoyt, 37 Mich. 583.

¶ 222. Under the rule laid down by Curtenius v. Railroad Co., 39 Mich. 583, a taxpayer's bill for an injunction to restrain a township from negotiating invalid railroad aid bonds cannot be objected to on the ground that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law.—Dodge v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 118 Mich. 189.

Right of grantee of heir to injunction against representative for attempt to dispose of his lands for debts, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 679.

¶ 223. Where chattels are purchased under a contract in the nature of a chattel mortgage, and the vendor makes a premature seizure thereunder, a sale of the goods by him will be enjoined.—Lehnen v. Ryan, 185 Mich. 246.

§ 63. Conveyances, transfers or incumbrances in breach of contract.

Injunction to prevent breach of contract, see also ante § 25.
Enforcement of decree enjoining sale of mortgaged property, see post § 154.
Suit to enjoin sale of farm retained for complete relief, see post ¶ 496.

¶ 224. A parent will be enjoined from alienating or incumbering his property except for his personal necessities, where he has agreed with his children that the property should be theirs after his death, if they remained at home after majority and worked a farm.—Hogan v. Hogan, 187 Mich. 278.

§ 64. Disposal of trust or estate property.

¶ 225. Grantees of realty conveyed by heir may have administrator enjoined from selling it to satisfy claims where there is personalty enough to meet them.—Hill v. Mitchell, 40 Mich. 389.

Operation and effect of injunction decree, see post ¶ 521.
Property rights as between husband and wife, see Husband and Wife, II.

¶ 226. Where, in pursuance of a conspiracy between himself and a third person a husband has fraudulently conveyed his property to the latter, a wife who has ground of divorce but has not resided in this state long enough to maintain a bill therefor, may have an injunction restraining the disposing of or incumbering such property until such time as she can legally maintain such bill.—Smith v. Waalkes, 109 Mich. 16.

¶ 227. Where parties assumed to be agents for a bank in settling a demand, and procured from the debtor an assignment of property in compromise, and the bank denied their authority to make the compromise, whereupon the debtor made a second assignment of property to complainants, held that complainants might maintain a bill in equity to restrain the assumed agents from collecting and disposing of the property.—Pratt v. Campbell, H. 236.

¶ 228. A subsequent assignee may have an injunction against an agent's disposing of property received under an assignment for creditors, his assumed principals, who have repudiated his act.—Pratt v. Campbell, H. 236.

§ 67. Sale on execution or process.

General law of judicial sales, see Judicial Sales.
Sales on execution generally, see Executions.

¶ 229. Injunction granted to restrain the sale of a wife's land on execution against her husband.—Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191; Patterson v. Fish, 35 Mich. 209.

¶ 230. Equity will not enjoin a sale under an execution against a third person where complainant's only equity is that of a bona fide purchaser.—Manistique Lumbering Co. v. Lovejoy, 55 Mich. 189.

¶ 231. Where a judgment was obtained against a principal and surety, and a levy made on the land of each, and subsequently, by collusion between them, the principal's land was sold to a third person, who was ignorant of the levy, the surety was not entitled to maintain a bill to restrain the sheriff from first selling his land in satisfaction of the judgment, upon the claim that the surety should be protected by the sale of the property of the principal.—Stratton v. Thomas, 133 Mich. 281.

¶ 232. A defendant in ejectment against whom judgment has been rendered in another suit may enjoin the sale under an execution issued under the judgment where as equitable owner of a mortgage on the land he has a lien thereon.—Taylor v. Roniger, 147 Mich. 99.

¶ 233. Where on a proceeding by a grantor to enjoin a judgment creditor of the grantee from proceeding under an execution levy on the ground that the conveyance was fraudulently procured, it appears that the record title of grantee's interest stood in her name for several years and that there was no want of good faith by the creditor or any irregularity in the execution proceedings, it is improper to issue an injunction.—White v. Herrick Piano Co., 176 Mich. 616.

¶ 234. A sale on execution will not be enjoined on the ground of irreparable injury where the property levied upon is not in immediate use and has peculiar or special value to the owner by reason of association, antiquity or rarity, but is a commercial article and the market value easily ascertainable and can readily be replaced.—City Bank & Trust Co. v. Hurd, 179 Mich. 454.

¶ 235. The wife of a judgment debtor, whose automobile has been seized on a debt of the husband and is about to be sold by the sheriff on the execution, has an adequate remedy at law, precluding equitable relief by injunction, where, although the judgment creditor is insolvent, the sheriff is, officially, solvent, and it matters not that the wife desires the particular automobile.—Allen v. Heft, 200 Mich. 593.

Enjoining actions on negotiable instruments, see ante § 43.
Provisions as to enjoining defendant in garnishment from disposing of negotiable instruments, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 13145.
Provisions as to restraining negotiation of bills of lading see Comp. L. 1915, § 8197.

¶ 236. Injunction will issue to restrain the transfer of notes where it would be inequitable to hold complainant on his indorsement.—Maclean v. Fitzsimons, 80 Mich. 336.

F. INTERFERENCE WITH OR DISTURBANCE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY RIGHTS OR BUSINESS.

Necessity that title or right be undisputed, see ante § 11.
Partner's lawful right to remove furniture from hotel not restrainable, see ante ¶ 60.
Necessity that complainant have a clear right or title, see ante § 11.
Exercise by defendant of his lawful rights not restrainable, see ante § 17.
Determining right to possession on application for preliminary injunction, see post § 123.
Acts constituting violation of injunction, see post § 152.

¶ 237. Injunction is the proper remedy to secure to the officers of a church the peaceable possession of its property as against members of the parish who have assumed to exclude them therefrom without right; the proceeding by ejectment being impracticable in such case.—Richter v. Kabat, 114 Mich. 575.

§ 70. Trespasses in general.

Ejectment as remedy where title or possession in dispute, see also ante § 12.

Decree in suit to restrain trespasses upon private fishing pond, see post ¶ 489.
Injunction by dowress against trespasses on lands occupied but not yet assigned, see also Dower ¶ 113a.

¶ 238. While the court has occasionally refused to restrain a threatened trespass, where the remedy at law was adequate, the opposed interests to be affected by the injunction of large proportional consequences, and other and independent circumstances considered negatived the right of complainant to equitable relief, it does not follow that the writ of injunction will issue to protect a confessed trespasser in his occupancy and use of his neighbor's premises, on the ground that his interests are large and the landowner's damages small.—Garth Lumber & Shingle Co. v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 205.

¶ 239. Equity has no jurisdiction of an action to enjoin the trespassing by one person on the land claimed by another to erect a building, as such act would not tend to injure the freehold.—Hendershott v. Moore, 188 Mich. 364.

§ 71. ——Irreparable or permanent injury.

Continuance of temporary injunction restraining trespasses, see post ¶ 476.

¶ 240. Where a trespass is calculated to do permanent damage to the freehold, equity will restrain it, and the remedy does not depend upon the insolvency of defendants.—Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196.

¶ 241. Where the injury by a threatened trespass is of such a nature as to materially lessen the enjoyment of complainant's property and rights.—Newaygo Mfg. Co. v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 Mich. 114.

¶ 242. The owner of realty is entitled to the aid of equity to prevent permanent and continually recurring injuries to the enjoyment of his property.—Koopman v. Blodgett, 70 Mich. 610.

¶ 243. Chancery will not grant an injunction in every case of permanent injury to real estate, but will look at all the facts and circumstances and grant or withhold relief as justice and equity may require.—Potter v. Saginaw Union Street R., 83 Mich. 285.

¶ 244. While ordinarily a trespass will not be enjoined it may be upon a showing of irreparable injury.—Brassington v. Waldron, 143 Mich. 364.

¶ 245. Where a person's possession of land is disturbed by those holding adverse claims or by trespassers, an injunction is the appropriate remedy in case of irreparable injury. —Doane v. Allen, 172 Mich. 686.

¶ 249. Where the destruction of complainant's premises is threatened by acts under color of eminent domain he is not limited to an action of trespass, but may have the illegal acts perpetually enjoined.—Vanderlip v. City of Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 522.

Relief refused where legal remedy adequate, see ante ¶ 28.

Provisions respecting injunctions to restrain waste, see Jud. Act, chaps. VI, § 4; XXXIII, §§ 20, 149; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12302, 12964, 13377.
Provisions as to injunctions to prevent nuisances, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 7782, 7784, 12302.

¶ 250. K. owned certain land and W. agreed to work it on shares with him, and stipulated that his wife should cook and wash for K. Becoming tired of the arrangement Mrs. W. left, and W. afterwards assigned his contract to his father, who notified K. that his wife was ready to do his work, and, entering upon the land began to cut and remove timber. At about the same time the owner sold the land and his grantee filed a bill to stay waste and obtained relief. The decree was affirmed. The contract was practically rescinded by W.'s action and no longer bound K.; it contemplated personal association, and was therefore not assignable, and the grantee, on obtaining his deed, was justified in proceeding without delay to restrain waste.—Litka v. Wilcox, 39 Mich. 94.

¶ 251. A lease gave the lessee the privilege of removing the wheat crop upon the ground at the expiration of the lease if he should have sown the same. The farm leased contained two hundred acres, one hundred and forty acres being tillable land, of which thirty-five were in wheat when the lease was made. Held, that an injunction would lie to prevent the tenant from sowing all the arable lands to wheat, thus leaving the land worthless for renting purposes for the coming season.—Chapel v. Hull, 60 Mich. 167.

¶ 252. The cutting of timber not for the purpose of husbandry or clearing will be enjoined in favor of grantees who are trustees for grantor's creditors as against subsequent grantees.—Webster v. Peet, 97 Mich. 326.

¶ 253. A bill states a case for equitable relief where it avers that defendant is inflicting a permanent injury to complainant's freehold by wrongfully removing the rich top soil and by wrongfully refusing to transfer it to the cut last made in removing gravel and to level it fit for husbandry as required by the deed conveying the gravel.—Putnam v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 174 Mich. 246.

Injunction to protect fences refused where remedy at law adequate, see ante ¶ 26.
Injunction to establish boundary where title in dispute, see ante ¶ 35.
Enjoining removal of fixtures, see post § 75.
Validity of preliminary injunction abating fence, see post ¶ 432.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence in suit to compel removal of building, see post § 112.
Relief on bill to restrain removal of house, see post ¶ 480.
Reasons excusing noncompliance with decree requiring removal, see post ¶ 533.

¶ 254. An owner in possession of land may maintain an action to enjoin an adjoining owner from moving a fence, located upon a line recognized for more than 20 years as the boundary, and relocating it 6 feet over the premises occupied by complainant.—F. H. Wolf Brick Co. v. Lonyo, 132 Mich. 162.

¶ 255. Where, in a dispute between adjoining owners over a boundary line, a complainant has had continuous possession, and the only right defendant has had was to go upon the land to get water, a bill of injunction will lie, under the statute authorizing a person in possession to file a bill to quiet title, where the defendant attempts to remove a fence erected by complainant as a boundary line.—Cullen v. Ksiaszkiewicz, 154 Mich. 627.

¶ 256. Where the complainant is in possession of land, and builds a boundary fence, equity has jurisdiction to enjoin a defendant from removing the fence in a dispute over the boundary line.—Cullen v. Ksiaszkiewicz, 154 Mich. 627.

¶ 257. A complainant alleged that he was the owner of land; that defendant was taking down his fences, entering upon his land, and injuring his sod and clover, and asked for a temporary injunction. Held, that the bill stated a case for the intervention of equity.—Harbor Springs Lumber Co. v. Emmet Circuit Judge, 160 Mich. 497.

Necessity that applicant for injunction give bond or security, see post ¶ 442.

¶ 259. Subscribers towards the erection of a mill which was operated two years at a loss were denied an injunction against removal of machinery, there being no agreement that the defendant should continue the business for any specified time.—Ayres v. Dutton, 87 Mich. 528.

¶ 260. It is within the discretion of chancery to restrain without bond the removal of machinery from the mill by the conditional seller, where the bill alleges that the removal would destroy the building and impair the security of the mortgagee complainant whose mortgage covered real and personal property, and where it appears that no injury to the machinery would result from its being left in the mill until the rights of the parties are determined in a pending replevin suit, the mortgagee having the right to pay the balance found due the seller of the machinery and keep the building intact.—American Foundry & Machinery Co. v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 167.

Restraining cutting of timber pending litigation, see ante ¶ 17.
Necessity that complainant have undisputed title or right, see ante § 11.
Injunction refused where it would aid in enforcing forfeiture, see post § 98.
Joinder of parties in suit to restrain cutting of timber, see post ¶ 374.
Retention of bill to give complete relief, see post ¶ 494.

¶ 261. Where timber is being cut from mortgaged land without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee, an injunction may be granted and retained in mortgagee's behalf to restrain the cutting.—Sherwood v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 540.

¶ 262. A court of equity is the proper forum to enforce the rights of a vendor of timber land where the purchaser has agreed and failed to pay the taxes on the land until the timber contracted for has been removed, and the purchaser may be restrained from removing the timber until he has paid the taxes.—Michigan Iron & Land Co. v. Nester, 147 Mich. 599.

¶ 263. A bill to restrain defendants from cutting and removing trees is properly dismissed where the written contract made by the parties as to the sale of trees indicates that the defendant has not gone outside the terms of the agreement in the trees cut and hauled away by him, and where the preponderance of evidence and the circumstances indicate that the terms of the written agreement were not orally modified.—Lockwood v. Pope, 166 Mich. 14.

¶ 264. Where, in a deed conveying all timber on certain land to defendant a provision is inserted that all timber remaining cut or uncut on said land after a certain date should revert to complainant grantor, a bill in equity will lie to enjoin defendant from removing after said date the cut lumber remaining on said land.—Dye v. East Shore Woodenware Co., 169 Mich. 78.

Injunction to protect rights of mortgagee refused where remedy at law adequate, see ante ¶ 24.
Sufficiency of bill, see post ¶ 385.

¶ 265. Equity has jurisdiction to enjoin defendant from mixing ore of an inferior quality with other ore that had been turned out to complainants, and from removing the property out of the jurisdiction, thus depriving them of their security.—Glidden v. Norvell, 44 Mich. 202.

§ 78. Maintenance or interference with easements and ways.

Benefits to plaintiff as effecting right to injunctive relief, see ante § 15.
Injunctions to prevent building or obstruction of highways, see post § 80.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence in suits to compel removal of obstructions from ways, see post § 112.
Operation and effect of decree enjoining obstruction of way, see post ¶ 524.
Mandamus to vacate injunction preventing interference with sidetrack, see Mandamus.
General law of easements, see Easements.

¶ 266. Interference with complainant's right of way over defendant's land may be restrained by injunction.—Lathrop v. Elsner, 93 Mich. 599.

¶ 267. Where land along a river is platted and laid out in lots, the plat showing a strip to be reserved as a walk about twenty feet from the water line, complainants who own a lot may have an injunction preventing defendants, grantees of a lot by a deed attempting to convey the strip reserved, from erecting a summer cottage across the strip.—Kendrick v. Louk, 175 Mich. 130.

¶ 269. A decree awarding a permanent injunction to restrain the use of a roadway across complainant's land was sustained as against the claim that complainant had an adequate remedy at law, where it appeared that after all of complainant's timber, for the carriage of which the use of the way had been granted, was drawn, defendant continued the use of the road for the drawing of timber for himself; and the fact that the drawing of defendant's timber had been practically completed, did not deprive complainant of his rightful remedy.—Rhoades v. McNamara, 135 Mich. 644.

¶ 270. On a bill to restrain grantees of land to whom complainant had also granted a private right of way across his land from opening another right of way in lieu of the one used as such, where there was evidence that complainant had prior to the date of the deed to defendant granted the exclusive use of the right of way used by defendant to two different persons, and it appeared also from the deed from complainant to defendant that the new right of way desired by defendant was granted by such deed, held that complainant's bill should be dismissed.—Whitman v. Cook, 191 Mich. 453.

ture Co. v. Valley City Milling Co., 194 Mich. 234.

§ 79. Erection or use of overlooking or obstructing structures.

Spite fences as nuisances abatable by injunction, see Nuisances.

¶ 273. Injunction will not lie against the occupant of premises adjacent to a baseball park to prevent his use of a platform, erected by him on these premises, from which the games may be viewed over the boundary fence.—Detroit Base Ball Club v. Deppert, 61 Mich. 63.

Enjoining public improvements, see ante § 60.

Restraining proceedings to condemn property for boulevard, see ante ¶ 142.

Modification of injunction restraining use of certain road material by plank road, see post § 136.

Decree in suit to restrain plank road from using certain material in its road, see post ¶ 487.

General law as to highways and streets, see Highways.

¶ 274. Where a bill was filed and preliminary injunction obtained to restrain commissioners of highways from laying out a highway through the orchard and garden of complainant in violation of the statute, but before the injunction was served or defendants had knowledge of it, the road was opened; and where the equity of the case was doubtful and the injury slight, the court refused to retain the suit and close up the road, and also refused to award an issue quantum damnificatus.—Brown v. Gardner, H. 291.

¶ 275. Complainant went into possession of a lot in Detroit in 1809, and in 1821 received a conveyance of the same from the governor and judges of Michigan territory. Nearly thirty years after she took possession the common council of Detroit, on a claim that a street was laid out through the lot originally, proceeded to open the same. On bill filed for the purpose, held, that the council should be enjoined from opening the street until they had established their title at law. —Devaux v. City of Detroit, H. 98.

¶ 276. Injunction will be granted to restrain a city from grading a street in such a manner as to raise an embarkment upon the front of complainant's premises, thereby burying part of her dwelling-house, where there has been no previous condemnation or compensation.—Vanderlip v. City of Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 522.

¶ 278. An injunction will lie, at the suit of a township and its highway commissioner, to restrain a plank-road company from using in the construction of its roadbed material which will render the same dangerous, unsafe, and impassable with loaded teams; and this as a police measure independent of any provision in the company's charter.—Detroit & E. P. R. Co. v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 371.

Interest entitling complainant to seek injunctive relief, see ante § 20.

Denial of injunction to wrongdoer, see ante § 22.

Restraining interference with easements and ways, see ante § 78.

Parties to injunction to prevent closing of street, see post § 101.

Necessity of describing encroachment in bill, see post ¶ 384.

Injunction by abutter against imposing servitude on street without compensation, see also Highways ¶ 579.

¶ 279. Where a strip of land platted as a public street had been used to some extent as such and the city had built a cross-walk at the end thereof and had not taxed it, held that a grantee who had purchased a lot adjoining the strip in reliance upon the plat could enjoin the closing of such strip by the grantor.—Babcock v. Heenan, 193 Mich. 229.

¶ 280. A bill for an injunction to prevent the closing of an alley will not be denied for the reason that complainant had already summarily removed the obstruction.—Detroit Mineral Bath Co. v. Stroh Brewery Co., 151 Mich. 555.

¶ 282. The obstruction of a highway constitutes a nuisance, and an injunction bill by a highway commissioner is a proper method of abating such nuisance, even when defendant is in possession.—Hinckley v. Dennison, 169 Mich. 361.

¶ 284. Equity will not, in the absence of special circumstances, entertain a bill to remove an alleged obstruction from a township highway, under the provisions of How. St. § 6611, since an adequate remedy at law in such cases is afforded by How. St. §§ 1371-1378.—Township of Greenfield v. Norton, 111 Mich. 53.

¶ 285. Injunction will lie to prevent construction of a channel or turning basin in a river by cutting into lots and an adjacent street so as to cut off access by that street to complainant's lots.—Wilkinson v. Dunkley-Williams Co., 139 Mich. 621.

¶ 286. An injunction bill was filed to restrain certain defendants from closing up premises which complainants claimed the right to use as a street. The bill alleged, in substance, that, in September, 1859, one R., who is also made defendant, being the owner and actual possessor of certain land, conveyed it to complainant, bounding it as on the south side of G street, which did not reach the land conveyed, but which R. expressed the intention of opening through the premises afterwards obstructed by defendants; that complainants had bought relying on such extension, and said R. had aided in preparing the premises for a highway; that defendants hold land on the north side of these premises under a mortgage from R., dated in December, 1859, and recognizing the proposed extension of G street; and that they had erected a small brick office which stands partly on the premises, and for the removal of which complainants ask. Held, that the bill sufficiently alleges the ownership of R. and the source of the other defendants' title to be sustained, at least unless specially demurred to; and that a court of equity could require the destruction or removal of the building under the circumstances, there being no adequate remedy at law.—Karrer v. Berry, 44 Mich. 391.

¶ 287. Where the express terms of a license to construct bay windows extending into the street give the city the right to terminate it at will, the revocation thereof will not be enjoined though made before the windows were completed thereby causing loss to the licensee without any fault on his part.—Forbes v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 280.

Refusal of injunction causing disproportionate injury to defendant, see ante ¶ 64.

Enjoining continuing trespass by street railway occupying street, see ante ¶ 247.

Issues in suit to enjoin railway from changing curve in its track, see post ¶ 392.

Dissolution of preliminary injunction preventing use of street by railway, see post ¶ 449.

Joinder of parties, see post § 106.

Operation and effect of decree, see post ¶ 522.

Estoppel to have injunction against operation of railroad in street without payment of damages for changing grades, see also Estoppel ¶ 155.

¶ 288. A mere apprehension that injury may result to complainant's property by the substitution of electricity as a motive power by a company operating a street railway line in front of his premises does not warrant a perpetual injunction.—Potter v. Saginaw Union Street R., 83 Mich. 285.

¶ 291. A mining company owned certain land near a city, which it platted, reserving to itself and its assigns "the exclusive right to lay a plank or railroad through and across any of the streets reserved on the map." The street down which it constructed its road was laid out 100 feet wide and the others but 66 feet wide, and the wide street was only partially occupied for such purposes. Subsequently it assigned all rights to a railroad company, which proceeded to build four tracks for general traffic down this street, after having gained the city's permission so to do. Held, that a temporary injunction obtained by a property owner along the street against the railroad company should be made perpetual unless within six months it took legal measures to condemn the right of way for the additional new use claimed, and made proper compensation therefor and for the injury already sustained.—Riedinger v. Marquette & W. R. Co., 62 Mich. 29.

¶ 295. A street-railway company was organized to construct and operate a road connecting two cities and passing through a third city. The third city was willing to grant a franchise but insisted upon a right of way which the company considered too circuitous and expensive, whereupon the latter organized the defendant company under Comp. L. 1897, § 6223 et seq., to construct an electric railroad within the city limits, on a private right of way, crossing city streets and connecting the two portions of the street railway at the city limits. Held, that the construction of the road through the city could not be enjoined although the purpose was to get through the city without a franchise from its common council.—City of Mason v. Lansing & J. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 1. (Blair, C. J., and McAlvay, J., dissenting.)

¶ 296. Where a railroad company had leased for a term of years the property of a traction company operated in a certain city under an ordinance whereby the latter was authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a street railway along certain streets, and there was a provision in the ordinance to the effect that "no wires carrying an electric current shall be placed in said street except the trolley wire," the putting up of a feed wire in the nighttime by the lessee in one of the streets of the city, without any authority, is an act which will be enjoined and the company may be required to remove it.—City of Monroe v. Detroit, M. & T. S. L. Ry., 143 Mich. 315.

¶ 297. An injunction was granted to restrain the cutting down by adjoining owners of posts set in a street to aid the propulsion of street cars by electricity.—Detroit City R. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634.

¶ 298. The writ of injunction cannot be used by a street railway company to aid it in refusing to carry out its agreement contained in a franchise, whereby it agrees to remove a switch constructed in a street, when ordered to do so by the common council of the city which granted permission to construct the switch, originally.—Rapid Ry. Co. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 118 Mich. 133.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post ¶ 399.

¶ 299. Where a city owns an island in a navigable river and has made it suitable for park purposes, and has constructed a bathing pavilion thereon at great expense a permanent injunction should be granted restraining the anchoring of house boats within the limits of a line around the island to which the city has been authorized to extend the shore line, and the discharging of garbage and night soil into the water.—Paterson v. Dust, 190 Mich. 679.

§ 85. Construction, maintenance and obstruction of drains and sewers.

Denial of injunction to wrongdoer, see ante § 22.

Decree compelling defendants to remove obstructions from ditch, see post ¶ 481.

Decree in suit to restrain city from maintaining sewage plant, see post ¶ 488.

Award of damages to complainant, see post § 144.

Affirmative relief to defendant, see post ¶ 514.

Restraining creation and operation of nuisances, see Nuisances.

Restraining collection of assessments, see Local Improvements.

Provisions as to enjoining the enforcement of drain assessments, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4924, 4926.

¶ 300. Injunction lies to restrain a township drain commissioner from fraudulently running a drain for the special benefit of his own property, and at the expense of complainants who are not benefited, but are injured by the consequent interference with an ancient watercourse in which they have rights.—Zabel v. Harshman, 68 Mich. 270.

¶ 301. An owner of land is entitled to an injunction to restrain another from extending sewer and water pipe, without authority, over such owner's land.—Flitcraft v. Sylvan Beach Resort Co., 157 Mich. 84.

¶ 302. The widening of a drain laid in a highway will not be enjoined at the suit of adjacent landowners on the ground that it would make the roadway so narrow as to be unsafe, where there is nothing to show that the danger could not be obviated by suitable barriers.—Kiley v. Bond, 114 Mich. 447.

¶ 303. The appropriation by a city of a strip of farm land from two to three feet wide outside the corporate limits and the erection of the retaining wall of a sewer thereon and the casting upon the land the entire sewage from a city of 5,000 inhabitants are such acts as peculiarly call for the interference of a court of equity, and which if permitted to continue unrestrained will unquestionably result in irreparable injury to the owner.—Onen v. Herkimer, 172 Mich. 593.

¶ 304. Where a city appropriated a strip of farm land from two to three feet wide outside the corporate limits and erects the retaining wall of a sewer thereon and cast upon the land the entire sewerage from a city of 5,000 inhabitants, the owner may maintain a bill for an injunction and is not remitted to her legal remedy.—Onen v. Herkimer, 172 Mich. 593.

¶ 305. Where a ditch is constructed by a highway commissioner along a public highway for the purpose of draining the same, also carrying the water from the surrounding territory to a larger drain, and an abutting owner, past whose premises this ditch runs, fills the same, obstructs the flow of water and prevents the removal of the obstructions, he is properly restrained from so acting.—Miller v. Harmer, 173 Mich. 560.

¶ 306. An owner of land adjacent to the limits of a city was enjoined from filling up a ditch on his premises and obstructing the drainage of the city, where the city, in improving the ditch, had substantially fulfilled its obligations to the owner to his apparent satisfaction.—City of Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474.

¶ 307. The owner of a private sewer, who has the exclusive right to use the same, may maintain a bill to enjoin its use by other citizens, who connect therewith without his consent, where such use results in clogging the sewer and flooding the owner's house.—Boyden v. Walkley, 113 Mich. 609.

Action at law for damages as precluding mandatory injunction to remove dam, see ante ¶ 32.
Abating mill dam which defendant has right to maintain, see ante ¶ 58.
Impracticability of enjoining excessive use of water from dam and canal, see ante ¶ 61.

Modification of decree enjoining diversion of water, see post ¶ 515a.
Conclusiveness of decree, see post ¶ 525.
Violation of injunction against building dam, see post ¶ 532.
[Note. The right to or propriety of injunction to protect water rights and easements is so involved in the law of waters that the cases are treated in Waters, II-V. Matters of general injunction practice arising in water cases but not involving the law of waters are treated in other appropriate portions of Injunctions.]
Restraining maintenance of a mill dam at an unlawful height, see Nuisances.

Injunction to protect hunting rights on navigable waters, see post § 91.
Restraining construction of boat channel cutting off access to complainant's lots, see ante ¶ 285.
General law of navigable waters, see Navigable Waters.

¶ 308. Erections by riparian owners in those parts of a stream that do not reach the line of navigability cannot be restrained unless shown to be nuisances or to be injurious to some public or private interest.—City of Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94.

¶ 309. Even if a dock line established by the state in a navigable river used in interstate commerce is unreasonable its use will not be restrained as an obstruction to navigation where it merely affects the convenient floating of rafts of logs navigated between points on the river exclusively within the state.—Tittabawassee Boom Co. v. Cunning, How. N. P. 82.

¶ 311. One owning to the center of a bayou may maintain a bill for an injunction against one who, claiming under an agreement with complainant's grantor, obstructs the bayou by using it as a booming ground for saw-logs.—Turner v. Holland, 54 Mich. 300.

General law as to copyrights, see Literary Property.

¶ 312. One entitled to the exclusive use of certain moving picture films will be granted an injunction against parties wrongfully using and exhibiting the same films.—Gilligham v. Ray, 157 Mich. 488.

Enjoining breach of agreement not to engage in competitive business, see ante § 27.
Restraining employee or agent from disclosing or using trade secrets, see ante § 29.
Injunction to restrain city from engaging in commercial activities, see ante § 55.
Restraining boycotts and strikes, see post § 90.
Injunction against infringement of names used for trade marks or in business as trade names, see Trade Marks, IV.
What constitutes fraud by unfair competition, see Fraud § 75.

¶ 313. There is a remedy at law against a business rival who injures his competitor by false representations, such as that he is dead or gone out of business, or that the former's goods are the same as the latter's.—Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 456.

¶ 314. Equity will grant relief on a bill by one to restrain competitors from injuring his business by threatening his customers with law suits if they buy or use goods manufactured by him, and will restrain the competitors from acquiring information as to who are his customers.—Schwanbeck Bros. v. A. Backus, Jr. & Sons, 148 Mich. 508.

Injunction to prevent unfair competition, see ante § 89.
Dissolution of preliminary injunction against labor union, see post ¶ 450.
Contempt for violating decree, see post § 154.
Mandamus to compel issuance of junction against labor unions, see Mandamus.
General law as to labor unions, see Trade Unions.

¶ 315. Acts constituting a boycott or conspiracy may be restrained by injunction.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 316. A circuit court in chancery has jurisdiction to issue an injunction restraining interference by labor organizations, and their members, during a strike, with the rights of an employer by picketing his premises.—In re Langell, 178 Mich. 305.

¶ 317. Defendants were members of a unincorporated liquor dealers' association. Complainant, the publisher of a newspaper, printed a number of articles attacking alleged unlawful conduct of the liquor and other allied interests. At a meeting of said association, defendants appointed a committee to wait upon the advertising customers of complainant for the purpose of inducing them to withdraw their advertising patronage. The committee went about among complainant's customers and intimated to them that if they did not withdraw their patronage from complainant defendants would influence their friends to withdraw trade from said advertising patrons. These threats and intimidations were made in veiled language, but their meaning was clear to complainant's advertising patrons, many of whom did in fact withdraw their patronage from complainant. Held, complainant was entitled to an injunction against defendants to prevent them from further interfering with his advertising patrons and also to damages.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 319. The remedy by injunction is available where employees issue a boycotting circular, and attempt to ruin an employer's business by intimidation and coercion, and in such case actions at law would be inadequate.—Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497.

¶ 320. The distribution of circulars containing false statements and advising persons to boycott an employer is a part of intimidation which may be enjoined.—Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497.

¶ 321. A bill for an injunction to restrain the members of a labor union from interfering with complainants' workmen, showing by general averments that the members of the union picketed complainants' premises, threatened their employees and by intimidation and violence interfered with them going to and coming from their work, establishes a case for granting relief.—Baltic Min. Co. v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 177 Mich. 632.

Restraining interference with hunting rights, see also ante ¶ 50.

Injunction to prevent use of name and picture for advertising purposes, see post § 92.

Civil rights in general, see Civil Rights.

¶ 322. Interference with the right to hunt may occasion an irreparable injury, furnishing a basis for injunctive relief.—Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting & Fishing Club, 153 Mich. 185.

¶ 324. An injunction will not lie by representatives of a deceased person to restrain a manufacturing company from selling cigars with a label bearing the name and likeness of the deceased person, so long as such act does not amount to a libel.—Atkinson v. John E. Doherty & Co., 121 Mich. 372.

G. COMMISSION OF TORTS AND PUBLIC OFFENSES.

[Note. Injunctions against torts are usually based on interference with property or personal rights, and accordingly have been treated ante II, F. When a tort is threatened by an attempt to enforce an invalid law or ordinance, the cases are treated post II, H.]

Restraining acts of private corporations and officers or members, see ante § 53.

Restraining trespass by public officers, see ante § 56.

Enjoining acts of strikers, see ante § 90.

Avoidance of multiplicity as ground for assuming jurisdiction to restrain repeated trespasses, see also Equity ¶ 140.

¶ 325. Courts of chancery have no jurisdiction to restrain the threatened violation of a municipal ordinance unless the act amounts to a nuisance.—Village of St. Johns v. McFarlan, 33 Mich. 72.

¶ 326. The threatened violation of a municipal ordinance, although not expressly declared to constitute a nuisance, will be enjoined where the ordinance provides that its violation may be restrained by injunction, notwithstanding punishable by fine and imprisonment.—Building Commission of Detroit v. Kunin, 181 Mich. 604.

¶ 327. The collection of garbage by an unlicensed person in violation of a city ordinance providing a penalty for its violation, may be enjoined at the suit of a board of health, where the city has let a contract for the exclusive collection and disposal of garbage, and is financially interested in the performance of such contract.—Board of Health Grand Rapids v. Vink, 184 Mich. 688.

Injunction to prevent distribution of libelous, boycotting circular, see ante § 90.

Preventing invasion of right of privacy by wrongful use of name and picture, see ante § 92.

¶ 328. A court of equity as a general rule will not restrain the publication of a libel, but relief by injunction will be granted to restrain the state dairy and food commissioner from placing in the hands of every dealer in the state a bulletin which in effect threatens them with prosecution in case they make use of the complainant's products in the form in which they are lawfully sold to them because the effect would be to absolutely exclude complainant's business from the state.—Pratt Food Co. v. Bird, 148 Mich. 631.

H. EXECUTION OF INVALID LAWS AND ORDINANCES.

¶ 329. Equity will not restrain the enforcement of a criminal statute.—Kleinke v. Oates, 187 Mich. 548.

¶ 331. Interference by officers of a city with the business of a transient trader, whose license has been revoked by the common council, will not be enjoined because of the alleged invalidity of the ordinance under which the license was revoked, where adequate relief may be obtained in a pending prosecution for a violation of such ordinance.—Vernakes v. City of South Haven, 181 Mich. 274.

¶ 332. The fact that the penalties provided by a gas regulation ordinance for a violation of the rates fixed for the gas company are excessive is sufficient to give equity jurisdiction to entertain a bill to determine the validity of the ordinance and to restrain the enforcement of its provisions pendente lite.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 146.

¶ 333. Equity will take jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of ordinances reducing the rates of fare on the various city railways of a street railroad company and providing for transfers of passengers from one route to another on the payment of one fare of 5 cents where thousands of passengers are carried daily over the tracks of the company and the latter, if the ordinances are enforced, will be subjected to a multiplicity of suits, and where no objection has been raised by answer, or otherwise, as to the jurisdiction of the court, and is not insisted upon.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410.

I. ASSERTION OF FORFEITURES.

§ 98. In general; forfeiting conditions in conveyances and land contracts.

Preventing breach of restrictions and conditions in deeds, see ante § 31.

General laws as to forfeitures, see Penalties and Forfeitures.

¶ 334. Under a contract for the purchase of lands the vendee took possession and erected a dwelling. The vendor subsequently declared the contract forfeited for nonpayment of an instalment of purchase money. Pending proceedings to recover possession he applied for an injunction to restrain the vendee from removing the house. Injunction refused on the ground that to grant it would be aiding to enforce a forfeiture.—Crane v. Dwyer, 9 Mich. 350.

¶ 335. Equity will not enforce a forfeiture for breach of the condition in a deed; but if the remedy sought is the enforcement of the condition it will interfere by injunction to restrain the breach thereof. And it will so interfere as against assignees of the persons originally bound by the condition, and notwithstanding the fact that forfeiture is prescribed as the penalty of the breach. —Watrous v. Allen, 57 Mich. 362.

¶ 336. Equity will not enjoin the severing and removing of timber after the expiration of the time reserved by the grantor in a deed for its removal; the legal and equitable title in the timber is in the grantor, and equity will not aid in enforcing a forfeiture.—Hodges v. Buell, 134 Mich. 162.

¶ 337. The assignee of one who had purchased standing timber and had been given an extension of time for the removal thereof will not be restrained from removing the timber because the time for removal had expired; since equity will not aid to enforce forfeitures.—Wallace v. Kelly, 148 Mich. 336.

Injunction to prevent city from interfering with or destroying franchise, see ante § 59.

Relief upon dismissal of bill, see post § 145.

¶ 338. The circuit judge is justified, however large the interests involved, in refusing a preliminary injunction to restrain a city from enforcing a forfeiture of the franchise of a street-railway company, where it appears that the city is proceeding in exact accordance with the terms of its contract with the company.—Union St. R. Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 113 Mich. 694. Writ of error dismissed in 168 U. S. 706, 42 L. ed. 1214, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945.

III. SUITS FOR INJUNCTION.

Estoppel by laches and acquiescence, see ante § 28.

Necessity of plaintiffs doing or offering to do equity, see ante § 24.

Power to restrain proceedings in other courts, see ante § 37.

Power to enjoin proceedings pending in other counties, see ante § 39.

Jurisdiction to issue preliminary injunction without notice, see post § 120.

Retention of suit to grant complete relief, see post § 143.

Venue of suits for injunction, see Venue.

Provisions respecting jurisdiction to restrain proceedings at law, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 20, 21; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12674, 12675.

Effect of appeal to transfer jurisdiction, see Appeal, IX.

Stay of proceedings by appeal, see Stay, II.

Amount necessary to jurisdiction in equity, see Equity § 16.

Provisions as to issuance of injunctions by circuit court commissioners, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 109; chap. XIX, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12178, 12674.

Power to issue injunctions on Sunday, see Jud. Act, chap. XIII, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 12429.

¶ 339. Application by a party or privy to stay a proceeding in chancery must be made to the court itself by petition in that proceeding. An officer out of court has no authority to allow an injunction for that purpose. But where the case was such that an order would have been granted, and the objection was not taken on the argument, the injunction was allowed to stand for such order.—Mason v. Payne, W. 459.

To whom remedy by injunction available, see ante § 20.

Parties to bill for preliminary injunction, see post § 118.

Township as party to bring bill to restrain construction of drain on behalf of landowners of township injuriously affected, see Drains § 107.

Right to injunction against disuse of franchised railroad, proper plaintiff, see Franchises ¶ 20.

¶ 341. A minor, who had purchased in another's name a lot represented on the seller's plat as lying adjacent to land dedicated as a public street, held not a proper party complainant to a suit by his grantee to enjoin the seller from closing the street.—Babcock v. Heenan, 193 Mich. 229.

¶ 342. A grantee of land bought by a minor, the title being taken in the name of an adult and later conveyed to the grantee, held the proper party to enjoin the minor's grantor from closing a public street represented as such on the plat on reliance on which the minor made the purchase.—Babcock v. Heenan, 193 Mich. 229.

Bill by attorney general to protect and preserve franchises, see Franchises ¶ 21.

Retaining bill as one by attorney general on dismissal as private bill on appeal, see Appeal ¶ 2194.

Costs on bill by attorney general on relation of private persons, see Cost § 37.

Practice in suits to restrain county action by attorney general, see Counties ¶ 217.

¶ 345. The attorney general is a proper party to proceedings in the nature of an information asking for an injunction to prevent public officers from violating Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 29, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 9914; known as the Warner-Crampton Law, by approving bonds for licenses for an unauthorized number of saloon keepers.—Hartingh v. Bay Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 289.

¶ 347. The prosecuting attorney of a county is the proper party complainant in a bill to enjoin the operation of a saloon in violation of § 37 of Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, § 5091, How. St., 2nd Ed., within four hundred feet from the entrance of a church.—George v. Travis, 185 Mich. 597.

¶ 348. The commissioner of public works of Detroit is the proper party to bring a suit to restrain the common council and the comptroller from performance of a contract entered into with architects for plans and specifications and for supervision of the work of making alterations in and additions to the city hall where such contract was an encroachment upon the duties of his department as prescribed by law.—Moreland v. Common Council of Detroit, 130 Mich. 343.

Interest entitling taxpayer to maintain injunction, see ante § 21.

Costs in taxpayers' suits, see Costs § 37.

¶ 349. Chancery has power to grant an injunction at the suit of an individual injuriously affected by the ultra vires acts of a municipal corporation.—City of Alpena v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 550; Curtenius v. Hoyt, 87 Mich. 588.

¶ 350a. Taxpayers have a sufficient interest to bring a suit to enjoin the construction of a public improvement and to rescind the sale of bonds therefor without the intervention of the attorney general.—Village of River Rouge v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 204.

¶ 352. If courts of equity have jurisdiction to interfere by injunction to restrain the action of a municipal corporation on a bill filed by a taxpayer on behalf of himself and other taxpayers, the circumstances to authorize such interference must be such as to show that the proposed action will be inequitable and injurious to the public interest.—Chaffee v. Granger, 6 Mich. 51.

¶ 353. A bill against a person in his individual capacity to enjoin proceedings at law instituted by him in a representative capacity is defective but amendable.—Pardridge v. Brennan, 64 Mich. 575.

¶ 354. The person entitled to payment under the contract or his legal successor, if it has passed to a successor, is an essential party defendant to taxpayer's bill to enjoin village from paying money under a contract. —Hoppock v. Chambers, 96 Mich. 509.

¶ 355. Where a complainant purchases from the executors land devised in a will, and buys up certain tax titles to protect his ownership, and a devisee under the will brings ejectment, complainant in a bill to enjoin said suit and to quiet title must bring in as party defendants the grandchildren of the testator, who by the will are devised a sixth interest in the land.—Vincent v. Evans, 165 Mich. 695.

Omission of necessary party as affecting right to preliminary injunction, see post ¶ 408.

In stockholders' suits on behalf of corporation, see Corporations § 347.

¶ 356. A joint maker of a note need not be made a party to a bill by another joint maker to restrain proceedings on a judgment recovered on the note against the latter alone. —Burpee v. Smith, W. 327.

¶ 357. The owners of a water-power canal on the east side of a river, who have agreed with the owner of a canal on the west side of the stream, taking water at the same dam, upon an equal division of the water between them, are not necessary parties to a bill filed by the west side owner to enjoin the use of water by one of his grantees in excess of the amount granted, and for an accounting as to such excess; nor are other separate grantees of water privileges from the complainant necessary parties to such suit.—Powers v. Hibbard, 114 Mich. 533.

¶ 360. Where the complainants, the owners of a dam above that of the defendants, bring a bill to enjoin the defendants from backing water upon the complainants' property, and for damages for backing water into the tailraces of complainants' mills, the fact that the defendants' dam was conveyed to a trustee by a trust deed in the nature of a mortgage to secure the bondholders, providing that the trustee could enter into possession in case of the defendants' default, there being nothing in the trust deed to authorize the trustee to defend such a suit, and no default having occurred, does not render the trustee a necessary party to such a suit, for it is not the purpose of the bill to take property, but only to restrain its wrongful use.—Sheffield Car Co. v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 171 Mich. 423.

¶ 361. Where an interest in land is assigned by contract as collateral for a debt and the assignee seeks to enjoin the recording of the contract, one to whom the assignor subsequently assigned his interest in the contract is a necessary party.—Ranney v. Stoll, 174 Mich. 440.

¶ 362. On a bill to restrain a mill company from lowering the level of a lake by opening its flume, lower riparian proprietors engaged in farming, who have acquired the prescriptive right to have the water flow through the flume in sufficient quantities so that their lands may be fit for husbandry, are necessary parties.—Thompson v. Addison Flouring Mill Co., 193 Mich. 6.

Bill against numerous parties to restrain separate actions at law, multifariousness, see Equity § 75.

¶ 363. Complainants may properly join in an injunction bill where their grievance, though not joint, is common, and the cause thereof and the relief they seek is the same. —Putnam v. City of Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 416.

¶ 364. Several separate owners of distinct property interests that are alike affected may join as complainants, without the attorney-general, in a bill to enjoin the carrying on of a business in the vicinity of their dwellings in such a manner as to create a nuisance, where the grievance stated has one source, and operates in the same general manner against all.—Robinson v. Baugh, 31 Mich. 290.

¶ 365. To avoid multiplicity of suits numerous taxpayers, though not jointly interested, may join in a suit to restrain the collection of an invalid tax that would otherwise be levied on their personal property.—Clee v. Sanders, 74 Mich. 692.

¶ 366. Taxpayers who have a common ground of complaint may join in a bill to restrain injurious actions by a city.—City of Alpena v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 550.

¶ 367. A bill to remove an obstruction from a public street need not join as defendants other parties making encroachments whose rights are not dependent on or connected with those of the person making the obstruction complained of, and who, as far as appears, have not refused to remove their encroachments when requested.—Village of Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 54.

¶ 369. A bill by several landowners to restrain the construction of a street railway in an adjoining street can be maintained only upon the theory that there is some grievance common to all, resulting in a damage common to all.—Nieman v. Detroit Suburban St. R. Co., 103 Mich. 256.

¶ 371. Where certain mill and factory owners brought a bill in equity to enjoin a booming company from various acts tending to render the water power by which the complainants' machinery was operated, of little value to them, and the bill did not ask for an accounting, it was held that the bill was not demurrable on the ground that the complainants had no common interest; and such a bill could be filed by one alone or by any number that felt the grievance.—Middleton v. Flat River Booming Co., 27 Mich. 533.

¶ 372. The owners of a water power and the corporation in which they are the principal stockholders and to whom they have leased it while they may have a common interest in procuring an injunction to restrain the obstruction of the flow of water have no common interest permitting them to maintain jointly a suit for damages for injury to the power by the obstruction.—Andrews v. Weckerman, 144 Mich. 199.

¶ 373. A grantor who covenants against an outstanding mortgage, which he claims to have subsequently paid, and a subsequent grantee, who, if the mortgage lien is not thus extingnuished, has a remedy upon said covenant if obliged to pay the mortgage, are properly joined as complainants in a suit to discharge such lien of record and enjoin the foreclosure of the mortgage.—Dedrick v. Den Bleyker, 85 Mich. 475.

¶ 374. Inasmuch as a widow may maintain an action to enjoin a trespass in cutting timber and wood on land in which she has a dower right but which has not yet been assigned, she need not join the other tenants in the action.—Delaney v. Manshum, 146 Mich. 525.

¶ 375. In a bill to enjoin the building of a dam, brought by complainant landowners, the fact that several complainants withdraw from the suit does not disentitle the others to relief.—Long v. Schroeder, 162 Mich. 690.

¶ 376. Where an injunction is asked to stay proceedings at law it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show in his bill the state of the pleadings, and the court in which the suit is pending, that the officer may judge of the propriety of the allowance and prescribe the terms on which it shall be issued.—Carroll v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, H. 197.

¶ 378. Where an injunction is the only adequate remedy the bill of complaint need not show that there is no adequate remedy at law.—Middleton v. Flat River Booming Co., 27 Mich. 533.

¶ 379. Where a general injunction is sought against obstructions in a stream it is not necessary to give the location and description of the dams in the bill of complaint. —Middleton v. Flat River Booming Co., 27 Mich. 533.

¶ 380. Where an injunction bill is filed against a booming company for acts tending to render the water power of little value to the complainants, an averment in the bill that "the water is detained by dams above complainants' mill," which virtually amounts to the drying up of the stream and destroying its value as furnishing water power, "and that very much is lost by percolation and evaporation, meanwhile," is a sufficient allegation of injury.—Middleton v. Flat River Booming Co., 27 Mich. 533.

¶ 381. Where a bill in equity to enjoin certain acts of a corporation sets forth facts showing direct and unquestionable injury therefrom, it cannot be demurred to on the ground that the acts were authorized by the charter of the corporation, for an incorporation act cannot be understood as intending to authorize the destruction of vested property rights.—Middleton v. Flat River Booming Co., 27 Mich. 533.

¶ 382. In a bill praying that defendant be enjoined from obstructing a certain canal connecting Fox Creek and Lake St. Clair, complainant alleged that he owned land for residential purposes abutting upon Fox Creek; that he could only reach Lake St. Clair by the use of the canal in question; that said canal was a public highway; that complainant had no way of obtaining good drinking water, ice and provisions except to pass by boat through said canal to Lake St. Clair; and that complainant's premises were chiefly valuable for the water privileges afforded by Lake St. Clair. Held, a demurrer to said bill on the ground that it did not sufficiently allege special or peculiar damage separate and distinct from that sustained by the public at large, was properly overruled.—Lepire v. Klenk, 169 Mich. 243.

¶ 383. Where it is not alleged that third persons in possession of the personal property in litigation are insolvent, or transient, or that the fund is in a hazardous condition, an injunction will not be granted to preserve the status quo of the property, as they will be equally responsible to those whose rights to the property or fund should be established, though the property should be converted into money, and the money paid away pending the suit.—Thayer v. Swift, H. 430.

¶ 384. A bill in equity for the removal of an encroachment in a highway should accurately describe the encroachment, and should show the highway commissioner to have ordered removal and authorized the suit.—Township of Lebanon v. Burch, 78 Mich. 641.

¶ 385. A bill which shows, however imperfectly, that complainant has had turned out to him a quantity of No. 1 iron ore, and that an assignee of the debtor has possession of it, and is mixing it with ore of inferior quality and shipping it, makes out an equitable case to which a general demurrer will not lie. —Glidden v. Norvell, 44 Mich. 202.

¶ 387. A foreclosure bill averred that the mortgage was lost without being recorded, and that defendant threatened to sell the land, and it prayed an injunction. On demurrer the bill was dismissed on the ground that it did not show anything to have become due on the mortgage. Held erroneous. The complainant was entitled to be protected in his lien by injunction whether anything was due or not.—Hawkins v. Clermont, 15 Mich. 511.

¶ 388. A bill alleging that defendant "fraudulently and for the purpose of cheating and defrauding complainant from having the benefit of a release," did procure her appointment as guardian of the releasor, on the ground that said releasor was an incompetent, and that she as such guardian did bring a suit at law upon the released claim, does not entitle complainant to an injunction restraining the suit at law, since the appointment of the guardian can have no bearing upon the merits of the controversy involved in the suit at law.—Gallon v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 150 Mich. 621.

Pleading in stockholders' suits on behalf of corporation, see Corporations § 347.

¶ 389. The allegation in a taxpayer's bill to restrain the expenditure of public money by the officials of a municipality that such officials have declared or avowed their intention to expend public money for private enterprises, is not a statement of mere apprehension but of a fact which may be traversed and hence its truth is admitted by demurrer. —Bates v. City of Hastings, 145 Mich. 574.

§ 109. ——Demurrer, answer or other defensive pleading.

As to demurrer, see also ante ¶¶ 385, 387.
Admissions by demurrer to bill to enjoin expenditure of public funds, see ante ¶ 389.
Answer to application for preliminary injunction, see post § 132.

¶ 390. In a bill to enjoin an ejectment suit and to quiet title, defendants may impeach complainant's tax title without specifically stating their objections thereto in their answer.—Vincent v. Evans, 165 Mich. 695.

¶ 391. A demurrer to a bill to enjoin a breach and for specific performance of a contract by the defendants to purchase goods exclusively of the plaintiffs, should be overruled where the bill shows a complete cause of action, even though the court refuses specific performance because of the difficulty of supervising the performance; but equity should retain the bill and grant a conditional injunction to protect both parties.—Peerless Pattern Co., v. Gauntlett Dry-Goods Co., 171 Mich. 158.

¶ 393. In a bill by a purchaser of a lot to enforce an agreement against the owner to impose building restrictions on subsequent buyers, the proof must follow closely and support the main allegations of the bill.—Stott v. Avery, 156 Mich. 674.

¶ 394. Where a bill to enjoin the erection of stores in alleged violation of building restrictions contained in a contract executed by the defendant's predecessor in title claimed to cover the lot in question, contains a prayer that the erection of all buildings thereon be enjoined except those allowed by the contract, the meaning and effect of the agreement is fairly in issue.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457.

General laws of evidence, burden of proof and presumptions, see Evidence.

Proof of adverse possession of street in bill to restrain use, see Adverse Possession § 51.

In aid of bankruptcy proceedings, what court, see Bankruptcy § 16.

¶ 395. On a bill to enjoin a suit to collect interest coupons on a negotiable bond on the ground that the bond was one of an issue that was canceled and destroyed for the maker or else lost or stolen during the process of destruction, it will be presumed that the holder of the bond is a bona fide holder.—Toledo, Saginaw & M. Ry. Co. v. Peters, 177 Mich. 76.

¶ 396. In an action to enjoin on the ground of irreparable injury proposed alterations in a building to which the lessor refuses consent, which the lease requires, offers made by the lessee in connection therewith, may be considered by the court in passing on the equities of the suit.—B. Siegel Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 145.

Sufficiency of evidence on appeal, see Appeal § 432.

¶ 397. Evidence in support of a bill to enjoin defendant from carrying on an ice business in a particular locality, in violation of his agreement with complainant's assignor, that complainant has eleven ice houses, containing 8,000 tons of ice, five wagons for delivery, and many customers, while defendant has four wagons engaged in delivering ice to a large number of customers in direct competition with complainant, constitutes a sufficient showing that complainant is damaged by the continuance of defendant's business to an extent that justifies the interference of a court of equity, if he is otherwise entitled to relief.—Up River Ice Co. v. Denler, 114 Mich. 296.

¶ 398. On a bill to secure a mandatory injunction compelling defendant to remove an artificial dam built upon his land, evidence held to establish that defendant wrongfully constructed the dam thereby diverting the natural flow of surface water to complainant's injury.—Feldkamp v. Ernst, 177 Mich. 550.

¶ 399. On a bill by lot and cottage owners against a summer resort corporation to restrain the erection of an addition to a hotel owned by the corporation on land claimed to be a public park, evidence held sufficient to show that such addition was necessary and that it would in no way interfere with certain driveways.—Weihe v. Macatawa Resort Co., 198 Mich. 334.

¶ 400. Evidence held to sustain allegations of bill for mandatory injunction, entitling complainant to relief prayed for by decree commanding defendants to remove that portion of their building encroaching upon a certain five-foot strip claimed by complainant as a way and to pay certain damages.—Longton v. Stedman, 196 Mich. 543.

¶ 401. A bill by the purchaser of an ice business to enjoin the vendor from again starting up an ice plant in the vicinity, will not lie at the instance of such purchaser, who alleges an oral contract made at the time of the purchase, under which the vendor agreed not to again engage in the business in the vicinity, where the writings make no mention of the claimed agreement, and the testimony does not establish it.—Bunn v. Kernen, 149 Mich. 593.

¶ 402. Where a bill is brought by the city to enjoin encroachment upon a strip of land reserved in the plat as a private way, it is properly dismissed when it appears that the strip is contiguous to a public way, that public use of the greater portion is as consistent with permission as with hostility, that the alleged encroachment is not an interruption of the use of the graded portion of the strip, and that there are other various asserted and recognized rights of the owners, showing that the strip in question is not a public highway.—City of Detroit v. Myers, 152 Mich. 666.

Granting damages or alternative relief, see post § 143.

¶ 403. It is proper practice to take testimony with reference to damages and to assess them at the hearing on the merits of the bill, if the complainant shows he is entitled to relief, when the bill asks for an accounting at the hearing and that the damages of the complainant be determined.—Walton Cranberry Co. v. Seamon, 171 Mich. 98.

¶ 404. The damages suffered by the additional flooding of land caused by the raising of the height of a dam, is a question of fact where a preliminary injunction preventing the raising was dissolved and the dam completed on the giving of a bond by the defendant.—Slote v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 182 Mich. 260.

§ 114. Reference or issues to jury.

¶ 405. Where the owner of a farm outside the limits of a city warns city contractors to desist from using her land to construct a sewage plant, and the sewer is completed and is discharging upon her lands, the injury is irreparable, and under the general prayer for relief in a bill for an injunction the court has no right at the instance of the defendant, to refer the matter of damages to the determination of a jury to act as advisory to the court.—Onen v. Herkimer, 172 Mich. 593.

IV. PRELIMINARY OR TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

A. IN GENERAL; CONDITION OF CASE; BOND, NOTICE AND HEARING.

§ 115. Nature, purpose and grounds.

Grounds for dissolving, see post § 125.
State suit to enjoin receiver of national bank, see Banking § 89, ¶ 285.

¶ 406. The object of preliminary injunctions is to preserve the status quo, so that, upon the final hearing, the rights of the parties may be determined without injury to either.—Gates v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 151 Mich. 548.

¶ 407. A mandatory preliminary injunction may issue to compel a carrier to continue delivering cars as it has delivered them for several years, where it is shown that otherwise complainant will suffer serious, if not irreparable, loss, and defendant can suffer but little injury.—Gates v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 151 Mich. 548.

Power to dispense with bond or security, see post § 124.
Discretion as to modifying, continuing or dissolving, see post § 128.
Restrictions on power of court commissioners to grant injunctions, see 1916 C. C. Rule 54, §§ 2-4.

¶ 410. It is not an abuse of discretion for the circuit judge to reach a different conclusion as to granting an injunction from what the supreme court might have reached.—Detroit & B. P. R. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 98 Mich. 141.

¶ 411. Although as a general rule a preliminary injunction will usually be denied when a defendant answers fully and denies all the allegations of the bill, still it is a matter of judicial discretion whether or not to follow the rule.—Mactavish v. Kent Circuit Judge, 122 Mich. 242.

¶ 412. Where a circuit court refuses a temporary injunction restraining the use of property, the supreme court will not interfere with its discretion except upon very clear and strong grounds.—Township of Wyoming v. Judge Superior Court of Grand Rapids, 158 Mich. 60.

¶ 413. To grant or dissolve an interlocutory injunction is a discretionary order of the trial court with which the courts will rarely interfere, and then only on special application and a strong showing of palpable abuse of discretion.—Freeman v. Mitchell, 198 Mich. 207.

Dissolution of injunction in vacation, see post ¶ 457.
Bond or security as prerequisite to issuance, see post § 124.

¶ 414. It is irregular for injunction to issue and be served before the subpoena, which is the first process.—Peltier v. Peltier, H. 19; and see Sullings v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 36 Mich. 313.

§ 118. Sufficiency of bill and parties thereto.

¶ 415. Where in a bill brought to secure a temporary injunction the allegations are made on information and belief, a preliminary writ will be denied.—Allen v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 612.

See also ante ¶ 415.

¶ 416. A bill asking for a preliminary injunction must be sworn to on personal knowledge of facts that will justify its issue, or reason must be shown for the absence of such verification.—Manistique Lumbering Co. v. Lovejoy, 55 Mich. 189.

Necessity of verified bill, see also Equity § 67.
Positiveness of verification or statement of reasons for belief, see also Equity ¶ 240.

¶ 417. A bill containing no averment of any act or threat by defendants on anything but information and belief, and that is supported by no affidavit or oath upon knowledge, cannot support an injunction.—Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 61 Mich. 9.

¶ 418. Whether injunction should issue on information and belief to interfere with defendant's rights in property already in possession, unless in extreme cases where the facts relied on are within defendant's knowledge, quære.—Caulfield v. Curry, 63 Mich. 594.

¶ 419. A bill for an injunction sworn to positively by seven affiants of their own knowledge, "except as to matters therein stated upon information and belief," the material allegations being stated without qualification, is properly verified.—Baltic Min. Co. v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 177 Mich. 632.

¶ 420. Where in a bill brought to secure a temporary injunction, the allegations are made on information and belief, they are sufficient on an order to show cause, to secure the injunction when established by adequate evidence.—Allen v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 612.

¶ 421. The averments of a bill for an injunction not being denied by defendant are sufficient if charged on information and belief.—Ainsworth v. Munoskong Hunting & Fishing Club, 153 Mich. 185.

¶ 422. An injunction to stay the enforcement of a judgment in legal proceedings cannot be granted without notice to the party to be enjoined. And it makes no difference in this regard that the bill is filed by one not a party to the legal proceedings.—Boinay v. Coats, 17 Mich. 411.

¶ 423. A circuit court commissioner cannot allow an injunction without notice to stay proceedings at law (Chancery Rule 112).—Manistique Lumbering Co. v. Lovejoy, 55 Mich. 189.

¶ 425. The issuance of an injunction and the appointment of a receiver ex parte is an absolute nullity.—Goldman v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 47.

Supporting affidavits on motion to dissolve, see post § 131.

¶ 426. Where a bill for an injunction to restrain public officers from approving bonds for licenses to sell intoxicating liquors in excess of the number authorized by Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 291, How. 2nd Ed., § 5055, known as the Warner-Crampton Act, states many of the matters upon information and belief, it is proper to support the bill by accompanying affidavits of persons having knowledge of the facts, and a temporary injunction may then issue.—Hartingh v. Bay Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 289.

another in resisting an application for an injunction.—Hart v. Baxter, 47 Mich. 198.

See also ante ¶ 428.

Affidavits in support of application, see ante § 121.

Decree or order on final hearing, see post § 140.

¶ 428. On a motion for an injunction the statements in the bill must be taken as true, and the relief sought must be consistent with the case made by the bill.—Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, W. 9.

§ 123. ——Scope and extent of relief.

¶ 429. The rights of parties cannot be finally determined on affidavits or on motion for preliminary injunction.—Ladd v. Flynn, 90 Mich. 181.

¶ 430. Possession of lands is not to be disturbed or changed by means of a preliminary injunction.—People ex rel. Messler v. Simonson, 10 Mich. 335; Arnold v. Bright, 41 Mich. 207; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 61 Mich. 9.

¶ 431. An ex parte injunction depriving the directors of a corporation of the management of the corporate business is void.—People ex rel. Port Huron & G. R. Co. v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 31 Mich. 456.

¶ 432. An order made upon a motion for a preliminary injunction and without a hearing on the merits, commanding the removal of a fence alleged to have been erected maliciously, and enjoining its rebuilding, is invalid.—Ladd v. Flynn, 90 Mich. 181.

¶ 433. A preliminary injunction restraining a railway company from running over its road, except on condition of its carrying lumber at a rate that had been agreed on, is illegal and void.—Tawas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 Mich. 479.

¶ 434. A chancery order permitting a complainant to begin suit at law and to institute garnishment in aid thereof, but restraining all proceedings at law after service of process until further order is unauthorized, as it would impound defendant's funds without giving him the rights conferred by the statute of garnishment.—Foster v. Kent Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 285.

Bonds or security upon issuance of permanent injunction, see post § 147.

Liability on bonds, see post § 155.

Bond or deposit before injunction against proceedings at law, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 8-19; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12662-12673.

¶ 437. The court cannot dispense with the filing of a bond as preliminary to the injunction when it is required by the statute.—Carroll v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, H. 197.

¶ 438. Interference by injunction should not be allowed where the delay may work great damage, without making full provision for redress by an adequate injunction bond.—Torrent v. Muskegon Common Council, 47 Mich. 115.

¶ 440. It is only when a preliminary injunction is issued to stay an action at law, that a bond need be given as required by § 502, Comp. L. 1897, § 12020, How. St., 2nd Ed.—Felton v. Wedthoff, 185 Mich. 72.

¶ 441. Section 507, Comp. L. 1897, controlling the issuing of injunctions to stay proceedings at law, and requiring petitioner to give bond for damages and costs, applies only to suits at law for the recovery of land after verdict, not before verdict.—Skutt v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 158 Mich. 43.

¶ 444. One who claims property that an officer is about to sell under execution against a third person cannot have a preliminary injunction against such sale without filing the bond required by How. St. § 6689.—Hinkle v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 422.

¶ 445. An injunction restraining defendant from proceeding to sell goods seized under a writ of attachment is void if issued without the bond required by How. St. § 6687, which expressly provides that no injunction shall issue to stay a personal action without bond to pay all moneys recovered or the collection of which may be stayed.—Lawton v. Richardson, 115 Mich. 12.

¶ 446. Proceeding to judgment in attachment proceedings with knowledge of another's claim against the property attached is not fraud, and will not therefore warrant a circuit court commissioner, on allowing an injunction, to restrain proceeding to dispense with security.—Manistique Lumbering Co. v. Lovejoy, 55 Mich. 189.

¶ 447. An injunction bond is a perfect obligation as soon as filed with the register in chancery in compliance with the statute.—Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 Mich. 436.

B. DISSOLUTION, MODIFICATION, CONTINUANCE OR REINSTATEMENT.

Right of successors in interest to revive suit in order to dissolve injunction, see Abatement ¶ 102.
Effect of death of husband in bill for divorce with injunction against him and codefendant, see Abatement ¶ 8.
Appearance to law action, effect on injunction staying law action after service of process, see Appearance ¶ 55.

§ 125. Grounds for dissolving.

Grounds for preliminary injunction, see ante § 115.
Dissolution upon plea or answer, see post § 132.
Failure to appear and contest motion, see post § 133.
Dissolution of injunction granted by supreme court, see post § 139.
Dissolution of injunction suspending banking corporation, see Banking § 76.

¶ 448. An injunction will not be dissolved on the ground that no prayer for an injunction was contained in the prayer for process.—Duncomb v. Richards, How. N. P. 274.

¶ 449. A temporary injunction was issued by the circuit judge enjoining relator street railway from running and switching its interurban cars upon the tracks on certain streets within the city. On mandamus to force the judge to dissolve his order, held, that the writ should be granted, since it did not appear that the city would in any way be injured by waiting until a hearing on the regular bill could be had.—Michigan United Rys. Co. v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 399.

¶ 450. Defendant labor council was composed of representatives sent by the various unions of a city. A certain Local Union, No. 123, including many of complainant's employees, went on a strike, and its members committed illegal acts of interference with the nonstrikers. Said Union No. 123 was not represented in the defendant council, and there was no evidence that defendant as a body had in any way advised or aided said illegal violence. Held, an injunction against defendant should be vacated.—Escanaba Mfg. Co. v. Trades and Labor Council of Escanaba, 160 Mich. 656. (Hooker, McAlvay and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 451. A court of equity will not further suspend an injunction against the maintenance of a dam whereby the lands of another would be overflowed, on the ground that by such injunction the one who constructed the dam would suffer damages greatly in excess of those caused by such overflow, in that he would thereby be prevented from flowing his logs to his mill, where two suspensions of 60 days each, during the season of the year most favorable for getting out timber, have already been granted, of which suspensions the builder of the dam has negligently failed to take advantage.—Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. Cleveland Sawmill & Lumber Co., 109 Mich. 164.

¶ 453. An injunction will be dissolved on motion if it is shown by special plea that there is no equity in the bill.—Eldred v. Camp, H. 162.

¶ 454. Where the equity of a bill is denied by answer the injunction will be dissolved on motion—Eldred v. Camp, H. 162.

¶ 455. Where the bill prays an injunction, but it is omitted in the prayer for process, it is good ground for refusing the injunction, but not for dissolving it when it has been allowed.—Taylor v. Snyder, W. 490.

¶ 456. The granting and continuance of injunctions rest in the discretion of the court; and they will not always be dissolved when the equity of the bill is fully denied. If by a dissolution the complainant is likely to be deprived of all benefits he might otherwise derive by succeeding in the suit, it will not be dissolved as a matter of course on the coming in of an answer denying the equity of the bill.—Attorney General v. Oakland County Bank, W. 90.

¶ 457. Without answer or plea the defendant may move to dissolve an injunction for want of equity in the bill, and this in vacation.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

See also ante ¶ 456.
Discretion to refuse injunction entailing disproportionate injury to defendant, see ante § 19.
Discretion as to issuance of preliminary injunction, see ante § 116.
Mandamus to compel dissolution of injunction, see Mandamus.

¶ 458. The dissolution of a preliminary injunction is largely within the discretion of the circuit court.—Hulan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 605.

¶ 459. The rule that the court will dissolve a preliminary injunction upon the coming in of a sworn answer fully meeting the allegations of the bill is not so rigid as to deny any discretion in the court to continue the injunction.—Chicago, K. & S. Ry. Co. v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 246.

Provisions as to subsequent applications for injunction after refusal, see Jud. Act, chap. IV, § 15; chap. II, § 109; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12178, 12262.

¶ 460. Prior to the Judicature Act of 1915, it was proper to combine a contingent application for dissolution of a preliminary injunction with a motion to dismiss the bill as insufficient on questions raised by demurrer.—Freeman v. Mitchell, 198 Mich. 207.

§ 130. ——Issues and questions on motion.

¶ 461. On motion to dissolve an injunction before answer the allegations in the bill are to be taken as true.—Schwarz v. Sears, H. 440.

¶ 462. On a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction, in the absence of answer or opposing affidavits, the allegations in the bill are to be taken as true.—Baltic Min. Co. v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 177 Mich. 632.

Affidavits in support of application for preliminary injunction, see ante § 121.
Form and entitling of affidavits for use, see Affidavits §§ 3, 4.
Insufficiency of affidavits to stand as amendments on motion to dissolve, see Equity ¶ 575.

¶ 463. Permitting complainants in a chancery suit to file additional affidavits upon a hearing of a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction is contrary to the usual practice, but there are exceptions where it may be permitted.—Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 132 Mich. 126.

¶ 464. Affidavits will not, as a general rule, be allowed to be substituted for an answer for the purposes of a motion to dissolve an injunction. Exceptions in case of waste or irreparable mischief and partnership.—Sacket v. Hill, 2 Mich. 182.

¶ 465. On motion to dissolve an injunction before answer an affidavit is admissible which goes to show that the injunction was irregularly issued, or that the officer allowing it was misled and induced to grant it contrary to law.—Carroll v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, H. 197.

Answer to bill for permanent injunction, see ante § 109.
Discretion of court, see ante § 128.
Dissolution upon motion in absence of answer, see ante § 129.
Affidavits in lieu of answer, see ante § 131.
Discretion of court, see ante ¶ 411.

¶ 466. An answer must be positive, full and satisfactory in meeting and denying the equity of the bill, or an injunction will not be dissolved upon it.—Attorney General v. Oakland County Bank, W. 90.

¶ 467. An injunction will not be dissolved on an answer admitting the equity of the bill and setting up new matter as a defense.—Attorney General v. Oakland County Bank, W. 90.

¶ 468. A temporary injunction to restrain public officers from approving bonds for licenses to sell intoxicating liquors in excess of the number authorized by law, will not be dissolved on the ground that the answer denied the material allegations of the bill, where the answer denies that defendants threatened to approve of the applications for licenses, but does not state that they do not intend to approve the applications and proceeds to state that such course would not be a violation of the statute.—Hartingh v. Bay Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 289.

¶ 469. Where complainant, having had due notice of a motion to dissolve an injunction, neglected to appear and oppose the motion, the defendant was permitted to take his order dissolving the injunction with costs.—Kellogg v. Barnes, H. 258.

¶ 470. Where a bill to restrain certain expenditures by trustees under a will, and an appeal from the order of the probate court approving the account of the trustees, are both pending, and by consent of the parties the bill is dismissed, all the incidents of the bill fall with its dismissal, and the parties are left in the position they would have occupied if the injunction suit had not been instituted.—In re Ward's Estate, 152 Mich. 218.

Upon default of complainant to oppose motion for dissolution, see ante ¶ 469.

Retention of bill for further relief, see post § 143.

¶ 471. An interlocutory order dissolving an injunction against obtaining possession does not adjudicate the right of possession when that is in issue, so as to anticipate the final decree.—Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 32 Mich. 285.

Modification of decree for final injunction, see post § 149.

Modification of injunction enforcing building restrictions, see Buildings ¶ 118.

Provision in final decree for modification of injunction against violation of restrictions in deed, see post ¶ 483.

¶ 472. A circuit judge, who has issued an injunction restraining a plank-road company from using upon its road material other than that prescribed by the terms of its charter, may modify such injunction, if he is satisfied that to do so will be advantageous to the public, and will not result in the creation of a public nuisance.—Detroit & E. P. R. Co. v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 109 Mich. 371.

¶ 473. Where, after the issue of an injunction restraining a plank-road company from using upon its roadbed any material except that authorized by the existing statute, an act is passed permitting the use of other materials, the injunction should be modified accordingly.—Township of Erin v. Detroit & E. P. R. Co., 115 Mich. 465.

¶ 474. On mandamus to compel the modification of an injunction issued upon the filing of a creditor's bill alleging fraud and conspiracy of the debtors and a third person in placing real estate and a printing business of debtors out of the reach of creditors by forming a corporation, by which injunction the corporation was restrained from disposing of its property or paying salaries to one of the judgment debtors and another person, and a mortgagee from foreclosing a chattel mortgage given by the corporation, held that the injunction should be modified so as to permit the payment of the salaries by the corporation until the final determination of the case in the trial court.—Maple Press Printing Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 191 Mich. 526; Goodman v. Wayne Circuit Judge, Id.

¶ 477. A preliminary injunction granted notwithstanding bill's failure to allege requisite facts upon complainant's oath, and allowed to stand until hearing, when sufficient equity appears on the proofs, should be perpetuated.—Smith v. Blake, 96 Mich. 542.

Revival of preliminary injunction by appeal, see Appeal § 135, ¶ 599.

¶ 478. A preliminary injunction which has been dissolved on the coming in of defendant's answer, upon motion or upon the final hearing, is not revived by the appeal. If further order is desired or is needed application should be made to the appellate court. Hulan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 605.

¶ 479. An injunction granted by a justice of the supreme court, in cases where the statute authorizes it, stands upon the same footing, in regard to motion for dissolution, as if granted by the chancellor.—Cooper v. Alden, H. 72.

V. DECREE OR ORDER, AND TERMS OF RESTRAINT OR COMMAND.

Review of discretion in allowing injunction, see Appeal § 411.

Order on application for preliminary injunction, see ante § 122.

Passing upon merits on application for preliminary injunction, see ante § 123.

Extent of relief against use of streets by street railways, see ante § 82.

Scope of decree of injunction in relief against drain proceedings, see Drains § 111.

Rules for awarding costs to parties, see Costs, II, B.

Mandamus to compel issuance of injunction, see Mandamus.

¶ 480. Where, instead of ejectment, a bill to restrain the defendant from removing a house he had built on land claimed in part by complainant but conceded to be owned in part by the defendant was sought, the only appropriate decree would be one to restrain waste pending a determination of the title in the appropriate action of ejectment.—Cromwell v. Hughes, 144 Mich. 3.

¶ 481. A mandatory injunction was proper against the active individual defendants, other than a township, where it appeared that they in conspiracy filled up plaintiffs' ditch enjoyed by prescription, doing so under color of void proceedings to abate a nuisance and to condemn the right to lay a highway in its former location; and they were adjudged to restore the original conditions at their own expense within a time specified, or in the alternative that plaintiffs recover specific sums for the cost of doing the work, an injunction was allowed against all defendants' interfering in any way with the drainage through the ditch as so restored.—Chase v. Middleton, 123 Mich. 647.

¶ 482. A complainant lot owner by bill sought to enjoin an abutting lot owner from stopping up an alley, and claimed the right to use its entire width on the ground that it was a public highway, or, if not so, that the complainant had acquired an easement to pass over it. He failed to sustain either contention. Held, the court would not enjoin the defendant from interfering with the part of the alley to which defendant had no title, since the bill had proceeded upon complainant's claim of right to use all the alley.—Le Roy v. Collins, 154 Mich. 77.

¶ 483. A decree in a bill to enjoin violation of a restriction in a deed against the erection of anything but dwellings, which provided that the decree might be modified on the application of either party in the event that in the opinion of the court circumstances and conditions had so changed that equity and justice required such modification, sufficiently protected the defendant's rights.—Frink v. Hughes, 133 Mich. 63.

¶ 484. On a bill for an injunction by the board of water commissioners of the City of Detroit to enjoin the Village of Highland Park from interfering with or molesting the water supply in that village, which complainant had been furnishing through defendant's water system, which complainant claimed to own, and with which complainant had made connections, held that it was proper to incorporate in the decree for defendant provisions requiring that, upon request of complainant, the village should grant a right of way through its streets for a supply main for the purpose of furnishing city water to residents of the city north of the village who had previously been supplied through the village mains with city water and that the village should supply water to such consumers until the mains were laid, especially as the village had practically consented to such a provision of the decree in its answer and had not appealed from the decree.—Board of Water Com'rs City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 192 Mich. 607.

¶ 485. Complainants filed a bill asking that defendants be enjoined from building a new dam to a height twenty inches greater than an old dam. Later they filed a supplemental bill, asking that the defendants be required to take down the new dam to the height of the old one. Held, the relief asked in the supplemental bill was not inconsistent with that asked in the original bill.—Long v. Schroeder, 162 Mich. 690.

Terms of injunctions against misuse or pollution of waters, adjustment of decree to relative rights of parties, see Waters, II-V.

¶ 486. Where a sale and agreement in restraint of trade that were sustained as reasonable, and enforced by an injunction, had been made by a firm of two persons, who afterward violated the agreement, one by going into the business alone, and the other as a partner of a third person who was made defendant, the injunction was limited to the third person simply to prevent him from engaging in the business as a partner with either of the other defendants, but did not restrain him individually.—Hubbard v. Miller, 27 Mich. 15.

¶ 487. On a bill to restrain a plank-road company from using gravel in construction of its road on the ground that a nuisance would result, and on the further ground that the corporate franchise did not allow it, the nuisance being disproved equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin a misuser of corporate franchises, or to compel the performance of corporate duties. So held where a township and its highway commissioner sought to restrain a plank-road company from using upon its roadbed material other than that prescribed by its charter.—Township of Erin v. Detroit & E. P. R. Co., 115 Mich. 465.

¶ 488. Where a city appropriated a strip of farm land from two to three feet wide outside the corporate limits and erects the retaining wall of a sewer thereon, and builds a sewage plant at great expense, and casts upon the land the entire sewage of a city, an injunction will issue but the decree may be made inoperative for six months in order that the defendants may take such steps as seem advisable to protect the rights of the city.—Onen v. Herkimer, 172 Mich. 593.

¶ 489. It is immaterial whether an injunction against trespassing upon a private fishing pond is perpetual, and it should continue until such time as the defendants, or some of them, have secured the right to invade the property and will not prevent them from securing or exercising the right when obtained.—Winans v. Willetts, 197 Mich. 512.

Hearing on question of alternative relief, see ante § 113.

Retention for further relief of bill to restrain collection of taxes, see Taxes.

General law as to retention of bill to grant complete relief, see Equity § 219.

Propriety of compensation as relief in equity, see also Equity § 217.

Equity jurisdiction to direct lands of estate to be sold in inverse ratio of alienation by devisees on bill to restrain representative's sale, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 817.

Propriety of conditional decree requiring refund by widow of allowance made when estate was solvent, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 346.

¶ 490. The jurisdiction of equity having attached to enjoin improper sale by executors, sufficient cognizance of the whole matter may be taken by the court to declare for what purpose a sale may be ordered.—Ireland v. Miller, 71 Mich. 119.

¶ 491. A bill whereon an injunction was dissolved on giving a bond for damages may be retained, notwithstanding an issue of damages only remains as to that trespass which is past, where it also appears that it is threatened in the future and that a perpetual injunction is necessary to adequate relief.—Hall v. Nester, 122 Mich. 141.

¶ 493. A court of chancery which acquires jurisdiction of an action by the issue of an injunction to restrain a premature sale under an instrument in the nature of a chattel mortgage, may retain jurisdiction and require an accounting between the parties.—Lehnen v. Ryan, 185 Mich. 246.

¶ 494. Where defendants have placed upon record void tax deeds, have claimed to serve the required notices of sale, have attempted to convey away a part of the timber, and have commenced to denude the land of valuable timber, a court of equity has power to restrain the continued trespass, and, having obtained jurisdiction for such purpose, will retain it to give such full relief as will finally dispose of the controversy.—Fitschen v. Olson, 155 Mich. 320.

¶ 495. In a suit to enjoin the carrying out of a contract with an electric company to furnish a plant for a city, the court decreed that the contract was void, and enjoined further payment thereunder. There was no dispute as to the amount of money which the city had paid on the contract. Held, that as complete relief the court should have required the electric company to account to the city for the money it had received, and to refund the same into the city treasury, thus disposing of the entire controversy.—George v. Wyandotte Electric Light Co., 105 Mich. 1.

General law of damages, see Damages.

Award of compensation as at law for complete relief in equity, see also Equity § 222.

¶ 497. Where equity has acquired jurisdiction for the purpose of granting an injunction, it may retain the suit for the purpose of awarding damages to complainant.—Brown v. Gardner, H. 291.

¶ 498. Where facts exist giving equity the right to intervene by injunction, a court of equity will dispose of the entire controversy and award damages.—Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor Dealers' Ass'n, 165 Mich. 98.

¶ 499. Where a bill for abatement contains no equity to an injunction, past and future damages may be allowed for the injury to lands caused by maintaining a dam at an improper height or by interference with rights of flowage.—Blake v. Cornwell, 65 Mich. 467; Cornwell Mfg. Co. v. Swift, 89 Mich. 503.

¶ 500. One who had stood by and allowed the owners of a right of flowage to enlarge their mill and to raise the height of their dam, he knowing that increased flowing would result, was granted compensation for past and future damage instead of an injunction.—Blake v. Cornwell, 65 Mich. 467.

¶ 501. Defendants built a dam at large expense supposing that the mill-site condemnation law was constitutional, and complainant sued at law for damages for flooding his land, but after an agreement to arbitrate the question, which, without any apparent reason, he refused to carry out, he filed his bill for abatement more than four years after the construction of the dam, showing no reason for the delay except the pendency of a suit by another party involving the same question. Held, that the case was one for pecuniary compensation only.—Miller v. Cornwell, 71 Mich. 270.

¶ 502. Continuing trespass was enjoined but having been dissolved on bond damages were awarded where the defendant had seized complainant's improvements constructed along a river and stream for logging purposes, and had flooded its timber lands, and had retained such improvements for several weeks, and proposed to continue such acts for an entire season, without payment. —Hall v. Nester, 122 Mich. 141.

¶ 503. Upon a bill by a lower riparian proprietor to enjoin the diversion of water by an upper proprietor, where complainant's rights have been infringed, but he has not shown himself entitled to an injunction, equity will award him damages in gross for the injury he has suffered.—Stock v. City of Hillsdale, 155 Mich. 375.

¶ 504. When, in a proceeding for an injunction against interference with the drainage of a cranberry marsh, complainant's damages from the loss of one crop and part of another, and the thickening up of the marsh with grass, was estimated by witnesses to be from $1,000 to $3,000, the defendant has no reason to complain of a decree fixing the damages at $1,000.—Walton Cranberry Co. v. Seamon, 171 Mich. 98.

Dismissal of suit to enjoin cutting and removing trees, see ante ¶ 263.

Dismissal of bill to enjoin defendant from opening a way, see ante ¶ 270.

Dismissal of bill as dissolution of preliminary injunction, see ante ¶ 470.

Dismissal without prejudice, see post § 146.

Dismissal of bill for injunction as res adjudicata at law, see Former Adjudication ¶ 48.

¶ 506. Where complainants in a bill to enjoin execution have been required to file a bond to pay the judgment in case they should fail to invalidate it, the final decree dismissing the bill may properly require payment of the judgment.—Hatheway v. Weeks, 34 Mich. 237.

¶ 508. Where a decree has been entered dismissing a bill for an injunction to restrain a foreclosure by advertisement sale of real estate, and there is no basis apparent from the record for the action of the court in stopping the running of interest upon the amount bid at the sale and awarding to complainant's solicitor a certain fee, both of such matters should be eliminated from the decree.—First State Bank of Decatur v. Day, 188 Mich. 228; O'Dell v. First State Bank of Decatur, Id.

Dismissal where remedy at law adequate, see also ante §§ 8, 9.

Dismissal upon terms and conditions, see ante § 145.

¶ 510. Where the evidence was too vague and conflicting to warrant a decree settling the right in controversy, and the case was proper for a jury, an injunction bill was dismissed without prejudice to any proceedings at law, or any equitable proceedings based upon a verdict.—Christ v. Kusterer, 25 Mich. 354.

¶ 511. An injunction to abate a dam which had existed about thirty years and had been erected under permission to raise the water to a certain height was denied where the proofs did not conclusively show that the height agreed upon had been exceeded. But, as the case contained facts that might properly be submitted to a jury, the denial was without prejudice to any proceedings at law, or to proceedings in equity, if these facts

Bonds or security upon issuance of preliminary injunction, see ante § 124.
Liability on injunction bonds, see post § 155.

¶ 513. Where a bill was filed by a village against defendants, to enjoin the negotiation of certain village bonds, and for the surrender and cancellation of the same, and lack of bona fides on the part of defendants in purchasing said bonds is alleged, defendants may, by cross-bill, claim affirmative relief under the statute, to the end that the bonds be declared legal and valid, and plaintiff be decreed to buy the same.—Village of Frankfort v. Schmid, 151 Mich. 85.

¶ 514. In a bill by a village to enjoin a defendant from interfering with a drainage system, the defendant is not entitled to the affirmative relief of a decree ordering the removal of a drain, where he asks no such relief in his answer.—Village of Trenton v. Rucker, 162 Mich. 19.

Modification of preliminary injunction, see ante § 136.

¶ 515. A decree which enjoins the inventor and patentee of an article which has been sold to a corporation for its manufacture from using his own name in such a way as to lead the public to believe that a firm of which he is a member is manufacturing the patented article is too broad where he is in fact manufacturing the named article under letters patent issued subsequently to those protecting the original article and the decree will be modified so as to permit the defendant the right to state in his advertisements the fact that he manufactures the article provided he further states in an equally prominent manner that his concern is distinct from and has no connection with the plaintiff company.—Gordon Hollow Grate & Blast Grate Co. v. Gordon, 142 Mich. 488.

¶ 515a. An injunction against the diversion of water by the making of road improvements ought not to be so broad in terms as to be susceptible of a construction that would restrain the defendants from making highway improvements of a lawful character within their powers and not affecting the surface drainage; and on appeal may be modified to prevent such a construction.—Smith v. Township of Eaton, 138 Mich. 511.

¶ 516. In restraining proceedings at law equity does not assume jurisdiction over the court in which they are had, but restrains the proceedings by controlling the parties thereto by injunction.—Burpee v. Smith, W. 327.

¶ 517. A decree enjoining the prosecution of an action at law to recover damages occasioned an abutting owner by the construction of a railroad track in a public street, held not to prevent the maintenance of an action for the negligent or careless operation of trains.—Felton v. Wedthoff, 185 Mich. 72.

¶ 518. An injunction staying proceedings at law in a pending case does not devest a court of law of jurisdiction, nor affect the validity of a judgment obtained therein in disobedience of the injunction.—Geddis v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 151 Mich. 122.

¶ 522. An injunction against a street-railway company's entering upon a street to construct an electric railway track or incumbrance of any kind upon said street, or to prepare in any way to lay such track, does not prohibit operating or repairing a track previously built and used, although repairs in paying the street had required the temporary removal of a part of the track.—Detroit & B. P. R. Co. v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 97 Mich. 583.

¶ 523. Where on settlement of decree, complainant secret benevolent society, which had been enjoined from interference with defendant secret benevolent society, contended that as the basis of the decree was complainant's own exclusive rights in this state, an injunction should issue protecting those rights, the claim was denied, as such rights were conceded and had never been denied.—Great Hive L. O. T. M. of Michigan v. Supreme Hive L. O. T. M. of the World, 135 Mich. 392.

¶ 524. One who seeks by suit in equity to establish his rights in a way, and to have its obstruction enjoined, may have relief whether the way be public or private. Nor is it material that the court erroneously found it to be private instead of public, so long as the public was not a party to the suit; its rights could not be destroyed by the decree.—Nye v. Clark, 55 Mich. 599.

¶ 526. An injunction against the city is binding upon the members of the Board of Public Works of the city where they have notice even though they may not have been parties to the bill nor served with the writ.—Phillips v. Detroit, 2 Flip. 92, Fed. Cas. No. 11,101.

¶ 527. In general, a party is bound by an order for injunction of which he has notice, though no writ is taken out.—Sullings v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 36 Mich. 313.

VI. COMPLIANCE OR VIOLATION AND PUNISHMENT.

¶ 529. Complainant, claiming to be in the actual possession of certain premises, obtained a preliminary injunction enjoining respondents from trespass of a nature likely to injure the buildings, and the writ also enjoined them from in any way interfering or meddling with the possession and from entering into the premises; and it appearing that respondents were actually in possession at the time the injunction was issued, it was held that they could not be punished as for contempt in maintaining this possession by force.—People ex rel. Messler v. Simonson, 10 Mich. 335.

¶ 531. A bill was filed for specific performance of a contract for certain lands, the legal title to which, subject to said contract, was in L., who had executed a deed for said premises leaving the grantee's name in blank, and sent the same to his agent, who filled in the name of a purchaser. Defendants were enjoined from making any conveyance of, or creating any lien upon, said premises, or in any way changing the apparent title. Subsequently one of the defendants obtained from L. a deed confirming the previous one. Whether this was a violation of the injunction, quære.—Romeyn v. Caplis, 17 Mich. 449.

¶ 533. Poverty, sickness and unfavorable weather may sufficiently excuse the failure to promptly comply with a decree requiring the removal of a building.—Scott v. Layng, 59 Mich. 43.

§ 154. Enforcement and punishment for violation.

Disobedience or evasion amounting to contempt, see Contempt, I.

Persons liable or participant in contempt, see Contempt § 13.

Burden of proof of violation in contempt proceedings, see Contempt § 34.

¶ 534. Injunctions, issued by courts of competent jurisdiction, must be fairly and honestly obeyed, and it would be unbecoming the dignity and self-respect of the court if it should permit them to be evaded by mere subterfuges or tricks.—Wilcox Silver-Plate Co. v. Schimmel, 59 Mich. 524.

¶ 536. Where one is enjoined from selling chattles covered by two mortgages in one of which he is mortgagee, being assignee of the other, and from foreclosing the mortgages, the restraint placed upon his attorney extends to render such attorney guilty of contempt if he, claiming that the assignment of the other mortgage was void, proceeds as the attorney of the assignor to sell the goods covered by such mortgage.—Wilcox Silver-Plate Co. v. Schimmel, 59 Mich. 524.

¶ 538. Where a creditor has obtained an injunction against the transfer of his debtor's property, any interference with or sale of the assets thereafter by the debtor is punishable as for contempt of court.—Saginaw County Sav. Bank v. Duffield, 157 Mich. 522.

¶ 539. The president of a trade union is guilty of a contempt of court for having violated an injunction restraining the officers and members of the union from intimidating the employees of the complainant against whom a strike is in progress where he says to a workman being escorted through a crowd of strikers by an officer "I see you are still doing your dirty work."—Ideal Mfg. Co. v. Ludwig, 149 Mich. 133.

¶ 540. Where defendants disobey a temporary injunction forbidding them to build a dam above a certain height, complainants may ask for a decree ordering them to reduce the height of the dam, and they are not confined to proceedings for contempt.—Long v. Schroeder, 162 Mich. 690.

VII. LIABILITY AND DAMAGES FOR SUING OUT.

§ 155. In general; liability on bond.

Bonds or security on preliminary injunction, see ante § 124.

Necessity of bond upon issuance of permanent injunction, see ante § 144.

Injunction preventing performance as breach of contract, see Contracts § 223.

Sufficiency of the bill for injunction as foreclosed question in contempt for violating it, see Contempt § 33.

Damages assessable in contempt for breach of injunction, see Contempt § 42.

Stipulation for dissolution as relieving party from duty to obey, see Contempt § 11.

Liability for damages for wrongful suing out of writ as reason to retain bill for award of such damages, see Equity ¶ 882.

¶ 541. Where a mortgagor, under an order of court, and as a condition to the granting of an injunction against proceedings by a foreclosure purchaser to get possession, gives a bond conditioned to prosecute his bill to redeem to final decree, and, if the decree should be adverse, to pay a fair rental value for the premises, and to pay all taxes and all legal costs, and not to commit waste, it cannot operate, in the absence of any showing of an acceptance of the bond by the obligee, or of any action taken or claim made under it, to deprive the purchaser of any of his substantial rights in the premises or the crops growing thereon.—Scriven v. Moote, 36 Mich. 64.

¶ 542. Where an injunction is allowed on condition that the petitioner therefor give the defendants a bond to indemnify them for any damage which the injunction may cause them, the bond remains valid and will sustain a recovery even though the injunction bill is dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Kimm v. Steketee, 44 Mich. 527.

¶ 543. Where action is brought upon an injunction bond without procuring it from the files, and without obtaining an order of the circuit judge to take it from the files for prosecution, the want of such order is no defense to the suit.—Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 Mich. 436.

¶ 544. The surety in an injunction bond who has undertaken to abide the decree of the court of chancery and pay such damages as may be awarded against his principal by reason of the issuing of the injunction is bound by such decree, and can raise no question of its correctness in an action upon the bond.—Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 Mich. 436.

¶ 545. A decree of the supreme court vacating an order of the circuit court for the appointment of a receiver, on a bill to foreclose a mortgage, which decree also restrains a corporation mortgagor from doing business, merely disposes of the propriety of the injunction and the receivership pendente lite, upon the pleadings alone, and cannot be considered final upon the merits. Accordingly such decree does not amount to a final adjudication of illegal interference with the business of the corporation so as to be a legal wrong, releasing surety on its bonds.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Lansing Lumber Co., 121 Mich. 438.

¶ 1. In order to make one liable as innkeeper at the common law, for goods lost at his inn, it must appear that he was acting in the capacity of innkeeper on the occasion when the goods were received, and that the owner was his guest. In other words, that the latter visited the inn for purposes which the common law recognizes as the purposes for which inns are kept.—Carter v. Hobbs, 12 Mich. 52.

¶ 2. A ball was given by a fire company at the inn of defendant, the defendant furnishing dancing room, supper and dressing room, and being paid therefor by the company at the rate of one dollar for each supper taken. The ball tickets were sold by the fire company at two dollars each, and these were taken up at the door of the dancing room by a person employed by the fire company, and supper tickets given in their stead. The plaintiff, who was a guest at another inn in the town, went to the ball, purchased a ticket therefor at the baggage room, delivered his overcoat, fur collar and gloves at the office of the hotel to the clerk, and registered his name, and remained at the ball until it broke up in the morning, when, on calling for his overcoat, collar and gloves, they could not be found. During the night the plaintiff had spent some money, for liquor and cigars, at a saloon kept by defendant in connection with the hotel. It was held that these facts did not show the relation of innkeeper and guest to exist between the defendant and the plaintiff; that the former did not receive the goods in his capacity as innkeeper, but merely as an ordinary bailee. —Carter v. Hobbs, 12 Mich. 52.

¶ 3. Whether steamboat proprietors who furnish staterooms and lodging for their passengers are liable to them for the loss of baggage, etc., to the same extent and on the same grounds as innkeepers to their guests, quære; the court being divided.—McKee v. Owen, 15 Mich. 115.

¶ 4. The relation of guest and innkeeper continued after a guest had departed, where an agreement was made for the receipt and forwarding of goods consigned to such guest; as in such case the contract was made with one while he was a guest and not after he had ceased to be a guest, and the contract continued until the innkeeper complied with his contract for forwarding.—Baehr v. Downey, 133 Mich. 163.

¶ 5. The status of one who came to a hotel as a guest, was not changed to that of a boarder, in relation to an innkeeper's lien, where no special arrangements as to length of stay or as to rates were made, excepting that after he had remained one week he was given weekly rates.—R. L. Polk & Co. v. Melenbacker, 136 Mich. 611.

¶ 6. As a general principle innkeepers guarantee the good conduct of all when they admit under their roofs, provided their guests themselves are guilty of no neglect to forfeit the guarantee; beyond this their liability does not extend to losses through purely accidental casualties, riots or acts of force from without, and accidental fires.—Cutler v. Bonney, 30 Mich. 259.

¶ 9. A guest at a hotel has a reasonable time to remove his property, and the innkeeper's extraordinary liability would remain until the expiration of such reasonable time, which would vary according to the circumstances.—Baehr v. Downey, 133 Mich. 163.

¶ 10. An innkeeper is liable for the loss of goods received by the office clerk pursuant to his agreement with a departing guest, to receive and forward them.—Baehr v. Downey, 133 Mich. 163.

Contributory negligence, see post § 4.

¶ 12. Where money, deposited by a regular boarder at a hotel in a drawer in the office safe, of which drawer he had been given the use and to which he had the only key, was taken therefrom by an employee of the hotel who forcibly opened the drawer, it was held that the proprietor of the hotel, being, at the most, only a bailee for hire, was not liable for the loss of the money if ordinary care and diligence had been used in hiring the employee.—Taylor v. Downey, 104 Mich. 532.

¶ 14. An Elk emblem attached to the chain of a watch is properly a part of such equipment and recovery can be had therefor in an action against a hotel keeper for theft from a room.—Weadock v. Swart, 178 Mich. 80.

¶ 15. The duty of an innkeeper to forward articles to a departed guest pursuant to agreement is the same no matter what the value of the article, but circumstances may exist which would require extraordinary precautions on the part of the guest.—Baehr v. Downey, 133 Mich. 163.

¶ 16. The duty of an innkeeper to forward articles to a departed guest pursuant to agreement is the same no matter what the value of the article and hence the failure of a guest to notify the innkeeper of the contents of a package did not relieve the innkeeper from liability for its loss.—Baehr v. Downey, 133 Mich. 163.

Liability of hotel keeper for loss of guest's valuables, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 686-695.

Burden of proof and evidence, see post § 5.

¶ 17. An innkeeper's liability for a guest's baggage is not diminished, but rather increased, by the fact that the guest has got too drunk at his bar to take care of it himself.—Rubenstein v. Cruikshanks, 54 Mich. 199.

¶ 18. One who occupies a room in a hotel with another is not chargeable with the negligent acts of the other in leaving the door unlocked.—Weadock v. Swart, 178 Mich. 80.

§ 5. ——Evidence and jury questions and instructions.

Evidence to show what was custom of guests as to keeping of valuables, see Customs § 7.

¶ 19. In an action by a guest against an innkeeper for the loss of goods consigned to the guest and agreed to be forwarded by the innkeeper, the burden of exoneration was on the innkeeper after plaintiff had made out a prima facie case by showing the property in the defendant's possession and refusal or neglect to return on demand.—Baehr v. Downey, 133 Mich. 163.

¶ 20. In an action against a hotel keeper for loss of property taken from a guest's room, evidence of what was said after the robbery with reference to other robberies held admissible as bearing on the negligence of the hotel employees in not informing the guests as to the workings of the lock.—Weadock v. Swart, 178 Mich. 80.

¶ 21. In an action against a hotel keeper for loss of property taken from a guest's room where the kind of lock on the door was in evidence, and where there was but one key though two guests were assigned to the room, evidence was properly excluded as to how the guests could come and go, such fact being for inference for the jury.—Weadock v. Swart, 178 Mich. 80.

¶ 22. Plaintiff and one Loranger took a room together in defendant's hotel. They were informed by the clerk that there was only one key. In the morning Loranger arose first and went for a walk, leaving the door open so that plaintiff could get out, since if he had locked it, plaintiff would have been locked in. Plaintiff's watch and other jewelry were stolen. The evidence as to the number of locks on the door and their kind was conflicting. In a suit to recover for the loss of said valuables, held, that under Act No. 42, Pub. Acts 1905, governing an inn-keeper's liability for stolen valuables, the question of the adequacy of the locks should have been submitted to the jury.—Weadock v. Swart, 163 Mich. 602.

¶ 23. In an action against a hotel keeper for valuables lost while a guest at the hotel, where the evidence showed that the same room had been robbed a few weeks previously, and the defendant insisted that the thief had entered through a window and it was made possible by the neglect of the plaintiff to fasten it, it was proper for the court in his charge to refer to the fact that the defendant had failed to inform the plaintiff of the other robbery as a reason for not requiring extraordinary care, or such as the actual (but unknown) conditions demanded. —Kerlin v. Swart, 143 Mich. 228.

Boarding-house keepers' statutory liens, see post § 7.

Agisters' liens for keeping animals belonging to guests or boarders, see Animals § 24.

¶ 24. The proprietor of a hotel has not an innkeeper's lien for boarding a horse under an express agreement with a person not a guest.—Elliott v. Martin, 105 Mich. 506.

¶ 25. A person keeping an inn has a lien under How. St. § 8399, for the keeping and care of a horse if the person who delivered the animal to him and who made the agreement though not the owner of the horse had authority from the owner to make such agreement.—Elliott v. Martin, 105 Mich. 506.

¶ 26. An innkeeper has a lien for the amount due for the keeping and accommodation of a guest, upon property in possession of such guest who had been intrusted therewith by his principal for the purpose of carrying on the business of the principal.—R. L. Polk & Co. v. Melenbacker, 136 Mich. 611.

Nature of relation of hotel keeper to guests at banquet or ball, see ante ¶ 2.

When guest at inn becomes mere boarder, see ante ¶ 5.

¶ 29. One who keeps one or two boarders all the time and has done so for a period of years, but makes no pretense of generally accommodating the public, is not a boarding-house keeper within Comp. L. 1915, § 6947, How. 2nd Ed., § 4308, giving a lien for charges to the keeper of any hotel or inn or "boarding or lodging house" on the baggage and effects of a guest or boarder.—Friedrich Music House v. Harris, 200 Mich. 421.

¶ 2. The test of the mental competency of a grantor to make a deed is whether, at the time he executes the deed in question, he has sufficient mental capacity to understand the business in which he is engaged, to know and understand the extent and value of his property, and how he wants to dispose of it, and to keep these facts in his mind long enough to plan and effect the conveyances in question without prompting and interference from others.—Terry v. Terry, 170 Mich. 330.

¶ 3. The test for competency of a grantor to execute a deed is not whether he was eccentric and occasionally did unusual or even foolish things, but whether, at the time he executed the deeds, he had mental capacity sufficient to understand and fully appreciate the business on which he was engaged.—Demerse v. Mitchell, 187 Mich. 683.

¶ 4. In determining the mental competency of the insured to substitute a new beneficiary, the test followed is whether, at the time in question, he had sufficient mental capacity to understand the business in which he was engaged, to know and understand the extent of his property, and how he wanted to dispose of it, and to understand what persons are dependent upon him.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Brown, 160 Mich. 437.

¶ 5. In determining the mental competency of the insured to substitute a new beneficiary in a policy, the same rules of law should be applied to the case as are applied to bequests by will or deed.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Brown, 160 Mich. 437.

¶ 6. The rule applied in an action to set aside certain deeds in reference to the mental competency of a husband who was 72 years old when he married his second wife, and who conveyed his property shortly after the marriage to her to the exclusion of his children, was whether at the time of the execution of the deeds he had sufficient mental capacity to understand the business in which he was engaged, to know and understand the extent and value of his property, and how he wanted to dispose of it, and to keep such facts in mind long enough to plan to effect the conveyances without prompting or interference from others.—Hayman v. ¶ 12. A petition and accompanying affidavits alleging the insanity of a person accused of crime, held sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court to appoint a committee under § 19 of Act No. 238, Pub. Acts 1905, § 15408, How. St., 2nd Ed., to inquire into his sanity.—People v. Hall, 185 Mich. 54. (Stone, Bird, Moore, Ostrander, Steere and Kuhn, JJ., concurring in result only.)

§ 5. ——Notice of hearing and service thereof.

¶ 13. Where an order of the probate court requiring twenty-four hours' notice to be given a person charged with insanity before the time set for hearing, and setting the time for hearing at four o'clock on the following day, was returned by the sheriff as personally served on such person on the day when issued, it may fairly be presumed that the service was made in time to give the court jurisdiction to make the order of commitment in accordance with section 16, Act No. 217, Pub. Acts 1903.—In re Schnapka, 149 Mich. 309.

Certificate of examining physicians, see post § 7.

¶ 14. Physicians and other witnesses called in a proceeding under § 19 of Act No. 238, Pub. Acts 1905, § 15408, How. St., 2nd Ed., to determine the sanity of a person accused of crime, must be sworn.—People v. Hall, 185 Mich. 54. (Stone, Bird, Moore, Ostrander, Steere and Kuhn, JJ., concurring in result only.)

¶ 16. It cannot be contended that an insane defendant's rights have not been sufficiently guarded where the record shows that the proceedings were regular and nothing was done unless he was duly represented, even though no answer was filed for him and a default was entered, but there was a hearing upon the merits, participated in by his attorneys who produced witnesses in his defense, and his guardian ad litem was present and assisted in his defense as a witness.—Eggert v. Eggert, 144 Mich. 182.

¶ 18. A report of an investigation under § 19 of Act No. 238, Pub. Acts 1905, § 15408, How. St., 2nd Ed., into the sanity of a person accused of crime, based on unsworn testimony, does not confer jurisdiction on the court to commit the respondent to an asylum.—People v. Hall, 185 Mich. 54. (Stone, Bird, Moore, Ostrander, Steere and Kuhn, JJ., concurring in result only.)

¶ 19. Under Pub. Acts 1903, No. 217, § 16, which makes it the duty of the probate judge, upon petition for an order admitting an insane person to an asylum, to fix a day for hearing and to appoint two reputable physicians to make an examination and file a certificate on or before the day of such hearing, and section 14 which provides that no person shall be admitted to an asylum except upon certificates of insanity, and section 15, which provides that such certificates must be made by two reputable physicians, a judge of probate cannot be compelled by mandamus to proceed with the hearing where the physicians appointed have reported that the person is not insane.—Grinky v. Wayne Probate Judge, 137 Mich. 49.

¶ 20. Every person is presumed sane, and the burden of establishing insanity is upon the party asserting it.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592.

¶ 24. The burden of showing mental incompetency is upon one who seeks to set aside his contract on that ground.—Gates v. Cornett, 72 Mich. 420.

¶ 25. To set aside the act of an insured person in changing the beneficiary of his policy, it is incumbent upon the appellant not only to prove insanity, but also to prove that the act of the alleged insane person was not done during a lucid interval.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Brown, 160 Mich. 437.

¶ 26. Sanity is the normal condition of the human mind, and where insanity or mental incompetency is claimed, it should be proved by a preponderance of evidence.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Brown, 160 Mich. 437.

¶ 28. On a bill to set aside a deed for the grantor's incompetency, the burden of proving incompetency is upon the complainant, and where the case is left in doubt the complainant must fail, as conveyances when made and acted upon should not be set aside upon slight and uncertain evidence.—Gibbons v. Dunn, 46 Mich. 146.

¶ 30. Sudden irritability, moroseness and unprovoked profanity, indicating a complete and radical change of disposition, may be shown, in connection with other facts, as tending to prove mental derangement.—Conely v. McDonald, 40 Mich. 150.

¶ 31. Where there is no evidence tending to show that an insured person was not sane at the time the policy was issued, or that he had had mental trouble for a period of twenty years, it was proper to exclude evidence that he had been insane some twenty years before the issue of the policy.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592.

¶ 32. The conduct of relations and others towards an individual is better evidence of what they think of his mental soundness than any term they can use to express it, especially when, without being experts, they recognize in him a condition of mental disorder without thinking it amounts to insanity.—Jacox v. Jacox, 40 Mich. 473.

§ 10. ——Adjudication as evidence in subsequent action or proceeding.

Weight and sufficiency of adjudication of insanity as evidence, see post § 15.

Divorce decree as res adjudicata, of defendant's competency, see Former Adjudication § 85.

¶ 33. A determination by the probate court that a man is mentally incompetent to have the charge and management of his estate is admissible to prove that he was mentally incapable to execute a deed some years later, especially when there is testimony to the effect that his condition, whatever it was, was continuing from boyhood to death.—Chase v. Spencer, 150 Mich. 99.

¶ 34. An order of commitment, void because made on proceedings improperly noticed, is not admissible as evidence of insanity in a subsequent proceedings for an adjudication of insanity.—In re Phillips, 158 Mich. 155.

¶ 35. Respondent was committed to an asylum and petitioned for an order of restoration of soundness of mind. The proceedings under the petition were discontinued. Held, in a subsequent adjudication of insanity, it was improper to admit in evidence the petition and discontinuance as estopping

¶ 36. Evidence held not to show that the grantor in a deed of trust was not, when he signed such deed, in such a state of mind as fully to understand the import and effect of the instrument.—Liesemer v. Burg, 102 Mich. 20.

¶ 37. In an action to set aside a deed the weight of testimony was held to be in favor of a grantor's competency and of the validity of his conveyance.—Gibbons v. Dunn, 46 Mich. 146; Case v. Bogart, 188 Mich. 297.

¶ 38. Evidence held sufficient to show that a husband who, after his second marriage, transferred large bank accounts to an account made payable to either or to the survivor, was mentally competent.—Powell v. Pennock, 198 Mich. 573.

¶ 40. Where evidence was presented showing that one who had executed a conveyance of real estate was imbecile and foolish, but other evidence was presented showing that he was afflicted with an impediment of speech and, as a result of this fact, shy and difficult to engage in conversation, but in fact was observing, intelligent, apparently able to read, a good farmer, skilful with cattle, and a voter at elections, the court was justified in concluding that he was capable of understanding and did understand that he owned the property in question, and could dispose of it as he pleased, notwithstanding the fact that some years before a guardian had been appointed for him by the probate court, on the ground that he was incompetent to have the charge and management of his estate.—Chase v. Spencer, 150 Mich. 99.

¶ 41. On a bill to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land to a railroad company for a right of way the vendor cannot be said to have been incompetent where the evidence showed that his two sons-in-law were present when the negotiations were had and assisted in staking out the strip to be conveyed, and the chief controversy was over the price of the land and afterwards the vendor went to his house and met the agents of the company, and signed the contract in the presence of his son who also signed as a witness, whereupon the company graded the road at a considerable expense, with no protest or claim other than that made by some of the defendants that the road was not being built according to contract, and no one asserted the invalidity of the contract, though witnesses believed him incompetent.—Detroit United Ry. Co. v. Smith, 144 Mich. 235.

¶ 42. A flighty old man deeded his homestead to his daughter and her husband and they gave him back a life lease of it and agreed orally to support him. They all lived together, quarrelled frequently, and finally the son-in-law committed assault and battery upon him and drove him out. The old man consulted a lawyer, to whom he promised to deed the land if the lawyer would get it back for him and take the old man into his home. Whereupon, the lawyer succeeded in inducing the daughter and her husband to deed the land to such lawyer direct, so that the old man's wife should not acquire dower interest in it; the prosecution of such son-in-law for the assault he had committed being thereupon dismissed, and the lawyer giving his note and a mortgage on the land to secure it for a certain sum which such son-in-law claimed to have paid the old man's first wife to induce her to join in the deed to his wife and himself. The old man then went to live with the lawyer but on the next day left him. In an action brought by him and his daughter and son-in-law to set aside the deed to the lawyer as having been obtained by fraud, it was held, that as on the evidence the old man was, and was known to be incompetent to do business, all the deeds in the premises should be set aside and the note and mortgage declared void, and the land deeded back by the lawyer to the old man.—Raynett v. Baluss, 54 Mich. 469.

¶ 43. The deceased, shortly before his death at the age of seventy-five, executed deeds to his lands. The evidence showed that he voluntarily sent for his brothers to assist him; that he remembered all the details of his lands even to their legal description, and had clearly in mind those entitled to his bounty; and that he selected his brother, an expert draftsman, to prepare the deeds. Held, the evidence established that the deeds were not invalid for lack of mental capacity, despite the fact of occasional fainting spells and hallucinations suffered by the deceased.—Beadle v. Anderson, 158 Mich. 483.

¶ 44. Where, in a case involving the mental competency of a grantor, witnesses are found to testify upon both sides of the controversy, and the opinions seem evenly balanced, courts will look to the circumstances surrounding the transaction, its fairness, the history and character of the grantor and the probability that one in the possession of his faculties would make a transfer of his property in a given case.—Hemphill v. Holford, 88 Mich. 293.

¶ 45. On a bill to set aside a deed on the ground that the grantor was incompetent because of insanity, held that the grantor had acted deliberately and in the full possession of her faculties, although the evidence showed she was a timid and nervous woman but there was no evidence of any insanity until many months after she had signed the deed, and there was no testimony as to her condition at the time the deed was executed, nor for some time prior or subsequent thereto.—Stewart v. Curtis, 85 Mich. 496.

¶ 46. A finding that an old woman was incompetent to make a deed is not sustainable on evidence that she made it when sick to a grandson about to leave her home as a consideration for his remaining, which he did, where he made back to her a life lease and they lived together on the premises for some years pursuant to the agreement, and where no disinterested witness testifies to any impairment of mind but only to weakness caused by sickness, and the interested witnesses testify to opinions without any facts on which to base them, and all the facts in the record show her to be possessed of unusual mental vigor for her age and to have had no difference with the grantor until selfish interference by others caused her to seek annulment of the deed.—Arnold v. Whitcomb, 83 Mich. 19.

¶ 48. A mother deeded her land to her daughter, reserving a life estate. In a bill brought by her guardian to set aside the deed on the ground of mental incompetency. the lower court found that there was no direct evidence of incompetency on the day the deeds were executed, but that she was incompetent shortly before and shortly after that time; that while she was not insane, she did not understand the legal import of the deed and did not intend to pass title to the land; and that the legal import of the deed was not explained to her. Held, the decree for complainant should not be disturbed.—McGraw v. Muma, 164 Mich. 117.

¶ 49. Where a decedent had conveyed land to his sons so as to provide a home and to protect himself against his intemperance, and where after the death of one of the sons such decedent delivered in escrow for the benefit of a widowed daughter-in-law, a deed to the proportion which came back to him through the death of his son, with directions for delivery at his death, and where the attorney who drew the deed testified that the father was then of sound mind and knew perfectly what he was doing and that the deed was executed and delivered to such attorney in escrow after he had endeavored to dissuade the decedent from his purpose; the conveyance was sustained.—Williams v. Williams, 133 Mich. 21.

¶ 50. A showing of business incapacity which consists of evidence of inability to learn to read beyond the alphabet, or to count more than twenty, and of a preference for large coins over small ones, regardless of value, is largely counterbalanced by proof of industrious habits, moral living, exercise of the electoral franchise, and the occasional transaction of business in buying, selling and giving security.—Shoulters v. Allen, 51 Mich. 529.

¶ 51. An objection to draft of will which was read to testator was evidence tending to show mental competency at the time of the execution of a deed which is sought to be set aside on ground of the testator's mental incompetency.—Stuyvesant v. Wilcox, 92 Mich. 228.

¶ 52. In a suit to set aside deeds on the ground of the grantor's incompetency, the evidence was not sufficient to show mental incompetency where the testimony indicated that the grantor, although aged, was a person of unusual vigor and activity of mind and that the deeds in question carried out a previously expressed and long delayed purpose.—Reagan v. Murray, 176 Mich. 231.

¶ 53. Evidence held to show that complainant's deceased grandaunt executed certain deeds conveying to him certain property and transferred to him certain money in consummation of an agreement so to do upon certain conditions on the part of plaintiff which he had fully performed or offered to perform, and that decedent was mentally competent at the time she executed such deeds.—Guntzviller v. Gitre, 195 Mich. 695.

¶ 54. A bill by the heirs of a decedent to set aside deeds on the ground of mental incompetency, was properly dismissed, where it appeared that the decedent's relatives, knowing of his ownership of the property, permitted him to deal with it unrestrained for a long term of years and took no steps to have a guardian appointed to care for his estate; that the decedent dealt with others, and among other transactions gave mortgages to two reputable members of the bar, and also that the value of the property conveyed exceeded the price paid but slightly, if at all, and there was no overreaching by way of driving a hard or unconscionable bargain.—Corby v. Moran, 119 Mich. 272.

¶ 57. Incompetence to make a deed is not shown by evidence that the grantor was 80 years old with physical strength somewhat impaired by sickness, where the draftsman and others testify that on the day it was executed he appeared bright and intelligent as ever and talked with them on various matters with customary clearness of mind, and where witnesses who knew him testified that mentally he was a strong man.—Hodges v. Cook, 93 Mich. 577.

¶ 59. Where the record discloses no reason why the aged and infirm father of two children, two months before his death should have made a deed of practically all his property to one child, and shows that he regretted his act almost immediately after he made the deed, and there was little doubt that his mental condition was far from normal, a decree of the trial court setting the deed aside will not be reversed on appeal.—Noban v. Shoup, 171 Mich. 191.

¶ 59a. In an action to set aside a deed on the ground of mental incompetency induced by the excessive use of liquor the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, and cannot be said to have been met where the evidence is very conflicting and largely given by interested witnesses, and where the draftsman and the family physician who witnessed the deed testified that they would not have done what they did had they doubted grantor's competency.—Behrns v. Qualman, 147 Mich. 635.

¶ 60. Evidence that a grantor 76 years old was worn out and had all the symptoms of senile decay and was paralytic will support a finding that he was incompetent to make a discharge of a mortgage to his son the effect of which was to impoverish the aged wife of the grantor and his other children without any natural reason for it.—Smith v. Gardner, 147 Mich. 670.

¶ 61. On a bill to set aside a deed from an uneducated man 86 years of age to his daughter, evidence held insufficient to establish mental incompetency at date of execution of the deed.—Akers v. Mead, 188 Mich. 277.

¶ 62. On a bill by heirs at law of a deceased person to set aside a deed by deceased to defendant, her brother, evidence held insufficient to show that deceased, who died from hyperæsthetic pneumonia, had passed into a coma or was otherwise mentally incompetent at the time of the execution of the deed.—Luce v. Luce, 197 Mich. 465.

¶ 63. Evidence of the nature of pneumonia in an advanced stage and of the stage of the disease to which a person had progressed, including the fact that she was in a state of coma, held sufficient to show that she had ceased to have that mental activity necessary to an understanding of the nature of a release of her mortgage to her brother in lieu of a will, it constituting her entire property and the other relatives being thus cut off.—Worthington v. Major, 94 Mich. 325.

¶ 65. On a bill by the guardians of an alleged incompetent person 75 years old to cancel a contract whereby the ward agreed to turn over to defendant over $2,000 and his monthly pension and the sum of $6,000 at his death in consideration of board, lodging and care for life, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the ward was mentally incompetent at the time of signing the contract.—Aull v. Peterson, 200 Mich. 99.

¶ 66. Evidence held to show that complainant's deceased father was mentally competent at the time he executed certain deeds in question, notwithstanding he was at the time sick in bed and had been prior to that time under a high fever and delirious or in an apathetic condition from typhoid.—Noble v. Hunter, 195 Mich. 713.

¶ 69. A deed by an aged father to one of his daughters in consideration of her agreeing to support him during his lifetime was set aside because of the grantor's mental incompetency, it appearing that he did not know what sort of an instrument he had made, and that he was not competent to make a sale of his land for money and protect his interest therein.—Sponable v. Hanson, 87 Mich. 204.

¶ 69a. Where the evidence shows that the insured at the time of making a change of beneficiary on his policy took counsel and in stating his purposes seemed to understand and fully comprehend what he was doing, his act will not be set aside on the ground of mental incompetency though he was sick and depressed.—Andrews v. Lavery, 159 Mich. 26.

¶ 70. Where a grantor makes a deed of property preparatory to committing suicide, the fact that the provision therein is partial to some of his children and is unwise and unnatural, is not proof of his mental incompetency, where it appears that he had a reason for so acting, made the deed pursuant to his settled judgment, and not under a delusion.—Cooper v. Cooper, 162 Mich. 304.

¶ 71. Evidence that a decedent did not give equal amounts of property to those whom he apparently held in equal regard is not sufficient to show mental incapacity as a ground for setting aside his deeds.—Beadle v. Anderson, 158 Mich. 483.

¶ 72. While an improvident business transaction may be competent evidence in support of an application for guardianship it becomes cogent proof of mental incompetency only as it is reinforced and explained by other facts and circumstances.—In re Chappelle's Estate, 189 Mich. 526.

¶ 73. A man who on his death bed assigned, without the knowledge of his wife—she having retired for the night—notes and mortgages amounting to more than $16,000, was held to have been mentally incompetent to transact business of that nature, there being testimony of his mental condition evincive of incompetency.—Peters v. Peters, 101 Mich. 291.

¶ 74. On a petition to have a guardian appointed for a woman seventy-five years of age who had made some improvident business transactions, evidence held insufficient to establish mental incompetency so as to authorize the appointment of a guardian under Comp. L. 1897, § 8709, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11565.—In re Chappelle's Estate, 189 Mich. 526.

§ 14. ——Testimony by expert or physician.

Opinion evidence and conclusions as to sanity and competency, see Evidence §§ 239, 244, 259.

¶ 75. Mental incapacity of the deceased is not shown where the expert testimony to establish such incompetency was based on hypothetical conditions not supported by the weight of the evidence but based on the extreme testimony of interested witnesses opposed by other credible evidence.—Beadle v. Anderson, 158 Mich. 483.

¶ 76. One who has always managed his own business affairs, owning houses and lots and lending money on notes and mortgages, must be regarded as having sufficient intelligence to make a contract for the purchase of an interest in a patent, although his physician testifies that he is of weak mind.—Davis v. Phillips, 85 Mich. 198.

¶ 77. Mental incompetency is not made out by testimony of a physician and others that the promisor was physically ill and her mind was clouded at times where her own testimony shows that she fully understood the nature of her obligation at the time she signed it.—Milks v. Milks, 129 Mich. 164.

¶ 78. Insanity must for legal purposes be judged of by manifestations in conduct or language and not by symptoms which only physicians can perceive and which have no apparent effect upon one's ability to transact business.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 80. In a suit to set aside a deed for mental incompetency evidence that the grantor was able to describe the land from memory, testimony by two physicians who were there to ascertain his mental condition, that they found him competent, as also the attorney who drew the papers who testified that the grantor stated that he made the deed to his son knowing that the son could turn him out but trusting him, is sufficient, in spite of previous and subsequent insanity to show mental capacity sufficient to reverse a decree for the complainants.—Ramsdell v. Ramsdell, 128 Mich. 110.

Admissibility of adjudication of insanity as evidence in subsequent suit or proceeding, see ante § 10.

¶ 81. A determination by the probate court that a man is mentally incompetent to have the charge and management of his estate does not necessarily prove that he was mentally incapable to convey real estate some years later.—Chase v. Spencer, 150 Mich. 99.

§ 16. Instructions and questions for jury.

Instructions on insanity in prosecution for crime, see Indictment § 409.

¶ 83. Evidence tending to show that one who had disappeared had been for a considerable time laboring under a severe and dangerous disease of the brain and spine, which, in the opinion of his physician, must have proved fatal in a short time, and must probably have rendered him insane, with evidence of its effect on his feelings and conduct, indicating that his mind was affected by the disease, is sufficient to warrant the submission of the question of his insanity, in a case where it was material, to the jury as one of fact.—John Hancock Mut. Life. Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41.

¶ 84. If there is evidence that a man of good mind and education, genial and pleasant disposition, full of life and vigor, talkative and apparently happy, having pleasant domestic relations and being under no strain for their support and maintenance, becomes moody, nervous and restless, cannot sleep at night, and by day walks the floor, is abstracted and fails to respond to the salutation of friends, complains of pains in the head and looks haggard and sick, and, a few weeks after this change sets in, takes his life at the age of fifty-five, such evidence is sufficient to go to the jury on the question whether, as an insured person who committed suicide, the man was insane.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Co. 74 Mich. 592.

¶ 85. The deceased in 1904, at the age of seventy-two, gave to the claimant, her son, a paper in which she stated that she had received $450 from him in 1889, to pay off a mortgage, and $50 in 1904 to pay off taxes on her property, and requested that these sums be repaid to him out of her estate after her death. On the question of her mental competency at the time of executing the paper, a doctor, called by the defendant executor, testified that he treated her in 1905 and 1906, but did not know of her mental condition in 1904. Another physician stated that he had treated her for several years, and found her perfectly rational at times and perfectly irrational at other times. A neighbor testified that the deceased was sometimes a "little off"; other times she was not. The defendant executor was acting under a will executed by the deceased one year after the paper in question. Held, there was no evidence to go to the jury of mental incompetency to execute the paper, and a verdict was properly directed for claimant.—McGregor v. McGregor's Estate, 156 Mich. 487.

¶ 86. On a petition by a woman 83 years of age to be relieved of guardianship on the ground of incompetency where it appeared that petitioner was old, physically infirm, and not tidy about her person and home and that she had developed an unfriendly attitude towards two of her children owing to the fact that they had originally procured the appointment of a guardian for her and had otherwise acted contrary to her wishes, but that she possessed a memory remarkable for a woman of her age in remembering names, dates and events, held that a direction of a verdict in behalf of petitioner was correct.—In re Stroebel, 194 Mich. 634. Appeal of Runge, Id.

Conclusiveness of probate orders and decrees in general, see Probate Courts, III.

General principles of res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication.

Special findings on sanity in criminal verdicts, see Indictment § 470.
Adjudication of insanity as evidence on issue of testamentary capacity, see Wills, II.

¶ 87. Complainant heirs of the deceased brought a bill to set aside on the ground of mental incompetency the interest of defendant in certain real estate conveyed by a third person to the deceased and defendant as joint tenants. The deceased had been found mentally incompetent by the probate court under a petition filed by one of complainants prior to the date of said conveyance, but not decided until after his contract was made. Defendant cograntee, a sister of decedent, was not a party to said proceeding in the probate court. Held, the decree of the probate court was evidence but was not a final and conclusive adjudication that the deceased was mentally incompetent with respect to the rights of defendant under said conveyance.—Hale v. Harris, 169 Mich. 172.

¶ 88. Jurisdictional defects which appear upon the face of the proceedings for the ascertainment of insanity may be raised at any time between the parties, even in a collateral proceeding, when the rights of innocent third persons are not concerned.—In re Phillips, 158 Mich. 155.

Consideration of errors affecting persons non sui juris on appeal without complaint by them, see Appeal § 224.
Dismissal of appeal from commitment, where subject has been discharged, see Appeal ¶ 687.
Appeals from probate orders and decrees in general, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 89. The remedy for redress of an erroneous order adjudging one incompetent and appointing a guardian for him is by appeal from the decree of the probate court within the time allowed and not by petition for rehearing addressed to the probate court.—Jaquith v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 142 Mich. 174.

Institutions for care of insane persons to be fostered and supported, see Const. art. XI, § 15.
Confinement of insane convicted of crime in Ionia state hospital, see Comp. L. 1915, § 1346.

¶ 91. An order of commitment made by the judge of probate of Lenawee county of a woman to the Michigan asylum for the insane at Kalamazoo, which recites that it is made upon a hearing on a petition on file which alleges that the woman is a resident of the industrial school for girls in said county, and is insane, and prays that she may be admitted to said asylum, there to be supported at the expense of said county, recites sufficient facts to give the probate court jurisdiction on the basis of her being such resident.—Palmer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 528.

¶ 92. An order of commitment is void where record shows that a petition to have a person declared insane and committed to an asylum was filed May 21st; that it was set for hearing at four p. m., May 23rd, but was actually heard and decided at four p. m., May 22nd.—In re Phillips, 158 Mich. 155.

¶ 94. It seems that Laws of 1883, Act No. 190 (How. St. §§ 1943a-1943g5), relating to the commitment of insane persons to asylums applies to insane criminals confined in the state industrial home for girls.—Palmer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 528.

St., 2nd Ed., must contain a judicial determination of his insanity.—People v. Hall, 185 Mich. 54. (Stone, Bird, Moore, Ostrander, Steere and Kuhn, JJ., concurring in result only.)

¶ 101. An order of commitment to the insane asylum which states that the female committed was a resident of the state industrial home for girls does not show upon its face that she was serving a term of imprisonment at that home, and does not, therefore, exclude the jurisdiction of the probate judge to make the order under How. St. § 1930c2.—Palmer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 528.

¶ 107. The law protects those who from any cause are mentally incompetent; and while in some cases it permits them, if not under guardianship, to make contracts, such contracts are binding only so far as they rest upon adequate consideration, and are free from fraud or overreaching.—Gates v. Cornett, 72 Mich. 420.

¶ 108. Bargains cannot be made with a person who is an imbecile; but where a man is merely weak and helpless, and in the exclusive care of his children, there is no legal impediment to their dealing with him if he retains legal capacity, though their bargains should be closely scrutinized.—Mason v. Dunbar, 43 Mich. 407.

¶ 109. A deed of a mentally incompetent person to her brother in March will be set aside as invalid when the property in question was deeded to the sister in January by her father and the deed then recorded though in March a deed of other property was made by the father to her brother contemporaneous with her deed to the brother in expressed consideration of his promise to support both her and her father for life; the deed to her and the subsequent deed by her to her brother cannot be regarded as one transaction.—Domling v. Domling, 128 Mich. 588.

Statutory provisions as to property held in trust by insane person, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 39, 40; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12693, 12694.

¶ 110. A deed left unconditionally with a third person for the use of a grantee who is not under guardianship, and received by the grantee under circumstances indicating acceptance, is sufficiently delivered, and conveys title even although the grantee be of unsound mind.—Campbell v. Kuhn, 45 Mich. 513.

§ 29. Invalidity or voidableness of conveyances.

Mortgages, see post § 30.
General law of rescission, see Rescission.

¶ 111. A conveyance made by an insane person not under guardianship is not void but voidable only.—Wolcott v. Connecticut General Life Ins. Co., 137 Mich. 309.

¶ 112. The deed of a mentally incompetent person, executed before he had been adjudicated to be such, is not void but voidable only.—Moran v. Moran, 106 Mich. 8.

¶¶ 113, 114. An insane person's deed is not merely voidable, but is void as against third persons, if he never recovers his reason, nor so conducts himself when he does so as to ratify the deed.—Rogers v. Blackwell, 49 Mich. 192.

¶ 115. Mortgages given by a weak-minded person and bought up by one who knew of his condition and habits should be allowed to stand only for the amount of benefit, if any, conferred by the work for which the mortgage notes were given.—Gates v. Cornett, 72 Mich. 420.

¶ 116. The lien of a mortgage taken with notice that the mortgagor's grantor was an incompetent person was sustained to the extent of the money received by such grantor on account of the mortgage.—Sponable v. Hanson, 87 Mich. 204.

¶ 117. A mortgage by an insane person may be set aside even though at the time of its execution the mortgagor may have been not so manifestly insane as to make fraudulent the conduct of the mortgagee in making the bargain it was meant to secure.—Curtis v. Brownell, 42 Mich. 165.

¶ 118. The mortgagees of an insane person's grantee cannot be considered bona fide purchasers in order to uphold the deed.—Rogers v. Blackwell, 49 Mich. 192.

Avoidance or rescission of contracts, see post § 32.

¶ 120. Where a grantor was incompetent to make a contract, and has suffered in consequence, courts will set the transaction aside without regard to actual fraud.—Reason v. Jones, 119 Mich. 672.

¶ 121. A contract for the purchase of land made by a person mentally incompetent is not necessarily void; if found to be for his interest a court of equity will protect him in the premises.—McWilliams v. Doran, 103 Mich. 588.

¶ 124. A contract made during a lucid interval by one who at times was mentally incompetent as the result of disease, is valid.—Griffith v. Fuller, 181 Mich. 553.

¶ 125. Even if the seller of a business is suffering from a nervous disorder which affects his mind when he makes a contract providing that he will not engage in the same business, such contract is valid where the buyer pays all the business is worth and no attempt to overreach the seller is shown and the seller's own testimony shows that he is satisfied with the sale and has never complained of its unfairness but only wants to go into the business again.—Weickgenant v. Eccles, 173 Mich. 695.

¶ 126. A bond made by an insane person is void, and a claim thereon should not be allowed against his estate.—Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 379.

Equitable relief to set aside contracts or conveyances, see post § 86.

Right of representative to recover money paid to defendant by decedent when mentally incompetent, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 268.

Grounds for rescission generally, see Rescission, II.

Mental incompetency coupled with fraud, duress, undue influence or other circumstances as grounds for rescission, see Rescission, II.

Delay in suing for rescission until death of incompetent grantor, see also Equity ¶ 183.

¶ 127. A suit by a person previously temporarily insane to set aside a deed made in pursuance of his voidable contract will be treated as an avoidance of the contract.—DeVries v. Crofoot, 148 Mich. 183.

¶ 128. Contracts which are voidable because of the weakness of intellect of a party can be enforced or repudiated in a court of equity upon equitable grounds.—Gates v. Cornett, 72 Mich. 420.

¶ 129. Ratification of a conveyance made by an insane person not under guardianship is shown by evidence that he knew of the conveyance when restored to reason and did not bring any action to set it aside for one and one-half years thereafter, that he talked of the matter to various persons, admitting the conveyance, and that he treated it as being valid.—Wolcott v. Connecticut General Life-Ins. Co., 137 Mich. 309.

¶ 130. Where an agreement ratifying a prior quitclaim deed is made by a person pending guardianship proceedings in which he is adjudged to be mentally incompetent such ratification is not binding.—Longenecker v. Graham, 176 Mich. 84.

¶ 131. Where a mentally incompetent person, making a conveyance of realty, later becomes competent, she may ratify or repudiate the grant, and if she continues incompetent until her death that right passes to her heirs.—King v. Sipley, 166 Mich. 258.

¶ 132. Persons making a contract for the sale of real estate with a person mentally incompetent cannot assert his mental incapacity to avoid the performance of the contract where a court of equity finds that the contract is for the interest of the insane person.—McWilliams v. Doran, 103 Mich. 588.

¶ 133. One who has had extensive business dealings with a woman extending over a long period of time without ever questioning her mental competency, cannot on that ground, after her death, as her administrator, attack a contract made with a third person during the time the administrator was dealing with her, where there is nothing to show that he then believed her to be or that she was mentally incompetent.—Hannan v. Larsen, 181 Mich. 595.

¶ 134. Those who permit a third person to purchase land from their father in the belief that he is mentally competent and without giving purchaser knowledge or information to the contrary, and whose acts in that transaction amount to an assertion that he was competent, are estopped from asserting incompetency in a suit brought by them as heirs to set aside the deed on that ground.—Burt v. Mason, 97 Mich. 127.

¶ 135. A bill to set aside a deed as against a subsequent bond, on the ground that it was made by a person who was insane at the time, and continued so until he died, establishes no equity greater than that of the grantee, and should be dismissed.—Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 379.

¶ 136. Where the deceased, being mentally incompetent from the use of liquor, conveyed real estate to a son, and the other children refrained from doing anything out of consideration for the miserable condition of the deceased, they are not thereby estopped to question the competency of the deceased, in a bill to set aside the conveyance.—Troub v. Thorp, 152 Mich. 363.

V. ACTIONS.

Equitable relief to set aside contracts or conveyances, see post §§ 36, 37.
Actions and proceedings for adjudication of insanity, see ante I.
Necessity for appointment of next friend or guardian ad litem for insane litigants, see Guardian ad Litem § 3.

Action by insane persons in justice court, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVII, §§ 22, 23; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14199, 14200.

¶ 137. There is no distinction at law between sane and insane persons, as to the proceedings for obtaining jurisdiction of their persons, and the same rule obtains in suits in equity.—Erwin v. Fay, 165 Mich. 503 (reported sub nom. Love v. Merrill).

¶ 140. The circuit court has jurisdiction of a suit by superintendents of the poor to recover money paid by the county for the support of a poor insane person, who acquires property after commitment, as the statute (How. St. § 1930dl) makes every insane person supported in the asylum personally liable for his maintenance therein; and when he has come into possession of property sufficient to reimburse the county or the state, and to maintain him thereafter in the asylum, such estate or the income thereof must be applied to his support, and there is no express provision of the statute conferring exclusive jurisdiction upon the probate court.—Simons v. Van Benthuysen, 121 Mich. 697.

Persons entitled to relief, see post § 37.
Burden of proof in action to set aside conveyance, see also ante ¶¶ 27, 28.
General principles of equity, see Equity.

¶ 141. After the death of a mentally incompetent person his heirs may have a deed made by him during his insanity declared void by a court of equity.—Rogers v. Blackwell, 49 Mich. 192.

¶ 142. Where plaintiff's incompetent ward has conveyed real estate, plaintiff's remedy is in a court of equity, where the rights of all parties can be protected.—King v. Sipley, 166 Mich. 258.

¶ 144. On suit to set aside for mental incompetence, the fact that the father had previously deeded property to all of the other children and that in this instance he relied on the grantee son for care and protection takes it out of the rule as to equities laid down in Hemphill v. Halford, 88 Mich. 293, where all of it went to the one grantee.—Ramsdell v. Ramsdell, 128 Mich. 110.

See also ante ¶ 141.

¶ 145. The deed of an insane person can be avoided only by privies in blood and legal representatives of the grantor.—Hunt v. Rabitoay, 125 Mich. 137.

¶ 1. The purpose of a charge to the jury is (1) to explain the issues; (2) to notice the claims of the parties and suggest, so far as necessary, the principles of evidence and their application; (3) to declare what rules of law will apply to any state of facts which may be found on the evidence.—Souvais v. Leavitt, 50 Mich. 108.

¶ 2. The object of a charge is not to teach law to the jurors, but to direct their conduct in the controversy they are called on to decide.—Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Mining Co., 75 Mich. 84.

§ 2. Duty to instruct and scope and nature of charge.

Inference from failure to attend trial, see post § 85.
As to inference from failure to produce evidence or to testify, see post §§ 86, 87.
Charging upon credibility of witnesses, see post § 89.

¶ 3. The trial judge should present the substantial issues of the case to the jury and state the principles of law that govern the rights of the parties.—Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622.

¶ 4. Where the trial court does not instruct the jury as to the issues before them, and does not properly state to them the law governing the case, the judgment will be reversed on writ of error.—Carney v. Ionia Transp. Co., 165 Mich. 620.

¶ 5. If the court instructs the jury upon all the essential features of the case, that is sufficient.—Brown v. McCord & Bradfield Furniture Co., 65 Mich. 360.

¶ 6. Where instructions have been given on all the facts that arise under the testimony, defendant cannot object that the case was submitted without instruction as to what facts would warrant a verdict for him. —Eldredge v. Sherman, 79 Mich. 484.

¶ 7. Where there is a conflict of evidence, and the jury, by weighing it, are to find facts, it is the duty of the court in instructing the jury to propound the law and direct its application to the facts as they may be found.—Wisner v. Davenport, 5 Mich. 501.

¶ 8. The failure to instruct the jury in a civil case as to matters common to all cases is not, in general, error requiring reversal. So held where no explicit instruction was given that the verdict must be based "upon the testimony," or that the amount and value of property involved must be determined "from the evidence."—Isaacs v. McLean, 106 Mich. 79.

§ 3. Relative functions of judge and jury.

Questions of law and fact distinguished, and issues as one or the other, see generally Trial, VI; but see topics involving the particular issue for decisions as to whether it is for the court or jury, e. g., Agency §§ 11, 17, 42, 69; and corresponding portions of other specific topics.

Review of findings as affected by relative provinces of court and jury, see Appeal, XII, E, 2.
Weight and effect of evidence as jury question, see Trial, VI.
Credibility of particular witness as jury question, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 9. The judge and jury are respectively independent in determining questions of law and fact; and neither can invade the other's province.—Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

¶ 10. The case must be reversed where the judge interferes with the lawful province of the jury.—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

Instructions invading jury province, see post V.
Instructions coercing jurymen, see post § 105.

¶ 11. The jury are bound to take the law from the court, and to find the facts from the evidence.—Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 123.

¶ 12. A jury cannot disregard the duty to receive the law from the court and return whatever verdict may seem to them right.—People v. Gardner, 143 Mich. 104.

¶ 13. One accused of violating an ordinance has no right to have the jury instructed that they might disobey the instructions of the court if they should choose to do so, because the jury must receive the law from the court, and it is their duty to follow instructions in that regard.—People v. Gardner, 143 Mich. 104.

II. FORM AND PHRASING.

A. ORAL OR WRITTEN.

Effect of reading statutes to jury, see post § 12.
Necessity that requests for instructions be in writing, see post § 24.
Delivery of instructions to jury, see post VII.
Provisions as to writing and filing instructions, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 58; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12630, 14573.

¶ 14. Comp. L. 1871, § 5034, providing a stenographer for Wayne county, is valid, and controls sections of the law concerning the charging of juries, so that the Wayne circuit judge has the same power that he had before the enactment of the last-mentioned sections as to charging fully and orally.—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

¶ 17. The statute requiring instructions to be in writing (Laws 1869, Act No. 67) does not require that they be signed.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96.

B. WORDING, TERMS AND MANNER OF STATEMENT.

Scope and nature of instructions generally, see ante § 2.
Giving substance of requested charges, see post § 9.
Construction of charges, see post § 18 et seq.
Rule that instructions construed as a whole, see post § 19.
Necessity that requested charges be clear, concise and accurate, see post § 25.
Refusal of abstract, obscure and ambiguous requests, see post §§ 30, 31.
Necessity of requesting fuller or more explicit instructions, see post § 22.
Refusal of requested instruction where substance given in court's own language, see post § 39.
Remarks made on refusing requested instructions, see post § 41.
Remarks and statements made in giving instructions, see post § 107.
Following approved instructions on retrial, see Appeal § 556.

¶ 18. A charge should be as direct, distinct and explicit as the circumstances will permit and as far as practicable in popular language.—Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 Mich. 482.

¶ 19. Even though the language used in a lengthy charge is not absolutely accurate, and though the best method of expression is not chosen, yet if the language used is such as to warrant the assumption that it was correctly understood by the jury, it is enough.—Davidson v. Kolb, 95 Mich. 469.

¶ 20. Where the case is a close one from a legal viewpoint, the trial judge should state the law applicable to the case clearly and without ambiguity.—Chabert v. Russell, 109 Mich. 571.

Prefatory remarks and statements, see post § 107.

§ 21. Where a charge does not mislead the jury as to their powers or duties, its style or spirit will not be reviewed as bearing with severity upon the party complaining of it.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

¶ 22. The trial judge has a large discretion in regard to the style of his charge so long as the judgment of the jury is in no degree subordinated to his opinion on the facts.—Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

¶ 23. The manner or inflection of the circuit judge in addressing the jury, or the emphasis used, is not reviewable where the words employed are not prejudicial or misleading.—Gibbs v. Johnson, 63 Mich. 671.

¶ 24. An exception to a charge on the ground that the manner in which the judge submitted the case and his comments on the evidence gave undue prominence to whatever would tell in favor of plaintiffs in error, and thereby unfairly prejudiced their case, cannot have weight if the bias of the judge is not manifest in the charge so that there is reason to believe the jury were improperly influenced.—Merchants' Bank of Canada v. Ortmann, 48 Mich. 419.

¶ 25. The charge will be much less liable to misapprehension, and less difficult of application to the facts when submitted complete and entire, upon all points requiring notice, than when made to consist of a series of isolated propositions of opposing counsel.—Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 Mich. 482.

¶ 26. It is commendable for a court to cover the ground by a continuous and intelligible charge; and the multiplication of separate points and requests which the jury can only hear once, and must act upon from a single oral exposition, is apt to lead to confusion and uncertainty, and is not to be favored.—Kimball & Austin Mfg. Co. v. Vroman, 35 Mich. 310.

¶ 27. Charges made up of selections from the requests of both parties, supplemented by general judicial observations, are disapproved as incoherent, obscure and sometimes ambiguous.—Marquette, H. & O. R. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 433.

¶ 28. Concise charges are not only commendable, but essential to a good understanding of the case by the jury, and it is a proper practice to extract from requests to charge such matters as should be explained to the jury, weaving them into a charge which, from its continuity and harmony, will be better understood than a succession of abstract propositions could be.—Kinney v. Ferguson, 101 Mich. 178.

¶ 29. The method of giving verbatim to the jury requests to charge is criticized; the safer method suggested being a connected and logical charge, in which so much of the various requests as can be properly and profitably used is included without reference to the fact that they are requests for either party.—La Barre v. Grand Trunk W. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 192.

¶ 30. In charging a jury it is preferable for the court to give the substance of the requested charges in a clear and well connected manner than to read each specific request.—Stouffer v. Fletcher, 146 Mich. 341.

¶ 31. A charge should be connectedly given embracing in their proper connection the requests that the court sees fit to give, and should not be made up of requests given, verbatim, or substantially so, and in disjointed sequence.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

Refusal of abstract and irrelevant requests, see post § 31.

Necessity that charges be applicable to the case, see post IV.

¶ 32. An instruction that the jury should find which side is in the right is too general, as it allows them to enter the domain of morals, and measure the liability of the parties by the individual notions of the jurors as to whether the conduct of the parties was right or wrong.—Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517.

¶ 34. In a personal injury case where the accident happened while alighting from a train an instruction that it was plaintiff's duty to be observant and to heed what was going on about her, to notice whether or not the train was stationary, and to observe when it started, and when alighting, it was her duty to protect herself and assist herself by the handrails running down the steps of the car, which were prepared for that purpose, and to be vigilant and see that no sudden movement would trip or throw her if she could prevent it; and that if plaintiff failed to use due and ordinary precaution that a prudent person would under such circumstance, and was injured in consequence thereof then she cannot recover, is argumentative.—O'Dea v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 265.

¶ 35. A charge stating the respective theories of the parties with regard to positions and distances and closing with a statement that it is undisputed that deceased was found under a car at a certain distance from a sidewalk and that he must have come there in some way and that it is for the jury to say which of the conflicting theories is the more probable, is not argumentative, the fact as stated being obviously true and there being no bias towards either theory apparent.—Davis v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 147 Mich. 479.

¶ 36. In an action against a druggist for the death of a child alleged to be due to negligence in furnishing a poisonous drug instead of a harmless one in filling an order for drugs for internal use a requested instruction held properly refused as being argumentative.—Wood v. Standard Drug Co., 190 Mich. 654.

¶ 37. It was held no violation of 1 Sess. L. 1869, p. 113, How. St. § 6481, requiring the whole charge to the jury to be in writing, when a judge read to the jury, without making it part of his written charge, a section of the general railroad law of the state. A proper reference to a general law protects a party as fully as if the statute had been copied into the charge.—Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 Mich. 389.

¶ 38. In an action against a liquor seller, by a woman aggrieved by his selling to her husband, it is not error for the court to read to the jury the statute prohibiting sale of liquor to an intoxicated person or to a habitual drunkard, such sale being a ground for exemplary damages.—Johnson v. Schultz, 74 Mich. 75.

¶ 39. A trial court has a right, when adopting the language of the supreme court, to add such consistent explanations as may be proper to adapt it to the facts of the case under consideration.—Freeman v. Weeks, 48 Mich. 255.

¶ 40. In charging a jury it is not error to read to them the language used by the supreme court in disposing of the same case on a former trial, if the language read merely lays down a rule of law as applicable to the one case as to the other.—Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107.

¶ 41. It is error for the court, in an action for negligent injury, to read to the jury the full text of the report of an earlier case of a similar kind.—Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Mining Co., 75 Mich. 84.

¶ 42. Language used in the opinion of the supreme court in a precedent case is not necessarily suitable for the phrasing of an instruction.—Bush v. Delano, 113 Mich. 321.

¶ 44. Where a charge to a jury illustrates the case by an analogy, but so cautions the jury against applying it fully that they could not have been misled by it, there is no error. So held where the analogy was between a wife's authority to buy necessaries on her husband's credit, and the power to purchase supplies exercised by one who is hired to run a hotel.—Beecher v. Venn, 35 Mich. 466.

¶ 45. An instruction as to a method of obtaining the present worth of a sum of money payable in the future, given merely as an illustration and so understood, was not error when taken in connection with the whole charge.—Gullickson v. Gjorud, 82 Mich. 503.

¶ 46. Where a story told by the court in its charge to the jury was of doubtful propriety, but had no tendency to injure the party complaining, it was not considered ground for reversal.—Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 69 Mich. 363.

¶ 47. An evident inadvertence in a judge's charge is not ground of error if it could not have misled and was not noticed at the time. So held where he said that probable cause could not be inferred from malice, when he meant to say the want of it could not.—Labar v. Crane, 56 Mich. 585.

¶ 49. In an action to recover for the number and price of trees sold it was not error for the court to instruct that it devolved on the defendant to show that the trees were not healthy and "unless the evidence was strong on her side that they were unhealthy you will find that they were healthy"; where the court evidently meant to say "stronger" instead of "strong" and the jury would thus understand it, the effect being simply to impose upon the defendant the burden of proving the trees unhealthy.—Smith v. Pickands, 148 Mich. 558.

Order of giving instructions, see post § 108.
Additional instructions repeating charges already given, see post § 109.

¶ 50. Where the charge has clearly and properly stated the effect of defendant's negligence, such statement need not be repeated in connection with every other portion of the charge upon which it has any bearing, unless it appears that the jury might be misled if it were not.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113.

¶ 51. The trial judge cannot be expected, in giving a charge, to reiterate every qualification and condition with every clause.—Watson v. Watson, 58 Mich. 507.

¶ 53. It is not reversible error for the court to repeat in different language an instruction that has already been given.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

¶ 54. In an action on a building contract, after the court had stated that the jury would be charged the next day, and after counsel had made the arguments to the jury, it was agreed that certain specifications should go to the jury, counsel for defendant stating that he should want instructions that the specifications did not constitute the whole contract, the court replying "Certainly this writing is not the complete contract. The jury will so understand it." Counsel also stated that he would ask an instruction that there was an implied provision that the work must be done in a workmanlike manner, the court replying, "The jury will so understand it." The next day the jury was sent out without instructions, the court declining to give the requests to charge. Held that the colloquy was not a sufficient compliance with Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10243-10246, which requires that the trial judge instruct the jury as to the law of the case.—Simons v. Haberkorn, 139 Mich. 130.

C. CONFLICTS AND AMBIGUITIES; CONSTRUCTION OF CHARGE AS A WHOLE.

See also ante § 7 et seq.; post § 27.
Duty to make charges direct, distinct and explicit, see ante § 7 et seq.
Construction of charge as a whole, see post § 19.
Refusal of ambiguous and obscure requests, see post § 30.
Presumption on error that jury took erroneous view of ambiguous or conflicting instructions, see Appeal § 380.
Charge in breach of promise case, see Breach of Promise to Marry § 6.
Error or ambiguities in parts of charge as harmless, see Harmless Error § 50.

¶ 55. An ambiguous, inconsistent and misleading charge is erroneous.—Dodge v. Brown, 22 Mich. 446; Comstock v. Smith, 26 Mich. 306.

¶ 56. A charge which, as a whole, is inconsistent and impossible to be reconciled or understood by the jury is erroneous.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274.

¶ 58. Defendant vendor of a threshing machine seized the same under a clause in the mortgage authorizing vendor to take possession if it should deem itself insecure at any time. Plaintiff sued to recover in an action of trover. The court in one portion of the charge instructed the jury that the plaintiff could not recover if defendant acted in good faith. Later in the charge the jury was instructed that defendant must show by a fair preponderance of the evidence that it believed and had good reason to believe that its security was in danger of being impaired. Held, said instructions were contradictory and therefore constituted error.—Truman v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 169 Mich. 153.

¶ 59. The objection that the charge of the trial court was contradictory fails where the apparent contradiction disappears upon examining the charge as a whole.—West v. Hudson, 171 Mich. 669.

¶ 60. The danger of a misapprehension from an inaccurate or ambiguous charge may be increased by what is said in giving it to the jury upon its request for further instructions after retirement and deliberation for a time.—Bouga v. Township of Weare, 109 Mich. 520.

¶ 61. A judge charged the jury that the existence of negligence was a question of fact for them to determine from the evidence, and that in the determination of it they were to apply to the facts the instructions they received from the court, but he added, "You will receive but little aid from the court in this line." Held, that the last clause unmistakably related to their deliberations on the facts and was not objectionable.—Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co., 53 Mich. 322.

Construction of charge in false imprisonment joined with malicious prosecution as to applicability of various portions, see False Imprisonment ¶ 160.

Construction of instructions as set forth in record on error, see Appeal § 334.

¶ 63. An instruction that defendant had no right to terminate a contract after he had notice that C. had purchased an interest "and" defendant had consented to that arrangement, if plaintiff and C. were in good faith preparing to carry it out, does not by use of the word "and" assume that the defendant had in fact consented.—Wreggitt v. Barnett, 99 Mich. 477.

Effect of apparent inadvertences and mistakes, see ante § 14.

Inconsistent and contradictory charges, see ante § 17.

Instruction as to method of obtaining present worth of money, see ante ¶ 45.

Error in modifying request cured by charge as a whole, see post § 28.

Requests coupling proper and improper instructions, see post § 36.

Instruction read as a whole in regard to presenting theories and claims, see also post § 44 et seq.

Instruction taken as a whole not erroneous as charging upon weight of evidence, see post § 58.

Instructions as to degree of proof, see post § 83.

General law as to harmless error in instructions, see Harmless Error § 125 et seq.

Construction as a whole of charge in action for broker's commission, see Brokers ¶ 241.

Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73; Harrison v. Grier, 198 Mich. 672.

¶ 65. Where the whole charge is based on the theory that the question of negligence is for the jury, it is not error to omit to state that rule.—Joslin v. Le Baron, 44 Mich. 160.

¶ 66. An instruction must be considered as a whole, and the portion excepted to must be read and considered in connection with all other portions bearing on the subject.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

¶ 67. A judgment will not be reversed because the court, in giving a requested instruction, added thereto an explanation which was not very clear, where the charge as a whole presented the issues in such a way that the jury could not be misled.—Wilder v. Sanche, 120 Mich. 345.

¶ 68. A party requested a charge that the measure of damages was the cash value of the property in question. The court struck out the word "cash." Held not error where the record did not show that any two standards of value were placed before the jury.—Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201.

¶ 69. In a personal injury case, where plaintiff claimed damages for a rupture, and the defendant city claimed that the rupture was not caused by the accident but had existed since plaintiff's childhood, an instruction stating if plaintiff was somewhat ruptured before the accident, then the previous condition was to be taken into consideration in passing upon how much or how little his earnings would be diminished, was not prejudicial to the defendant when taken in connection with the charge, that plaintiff could not recover at all unless his evidence was believed, the obvious purpose of it being a caution against giving excessive damages.—Litten v. City of Detroit, 119 Mich. 495.

¶ 70. The court was requested to charge that plaintiff cannot recover for any aggravation of any disease or condition that existed prior to the day of the accident, inasmuch as the declaration does not count thereon. He assented to it, adding "I do not understand the testimony on the part of the plaintiff is that she was [not] suffering from any of the injuries complained of prior to that time, and that the injuries which she now suffers are the direct result of the accident." Held that the addition of the quoted words told the jury that such damages could not be recovered because not pleaded and also because it was not claimed in evidence; and accordingly the further addition, "Therefore there can be no question of aggravation to be presented to you" was a mere repetition and did not take wholly from the jury all aggravation of injury and assert that there was none but only disallowed recovery for it.—Remey v. Detroit United Ry., 141 Mich. 116.

¶ 71. Prejudicial error arising from the incorrect statement of a rule of damages in one portion of the charge to the jury is not cured by a correct statement in another portion of the charge of the rule involved.—Pearson v. Schoenburg, 167 Mich. 255.

¶ 72. An instruction that a party is not bound by the testimony of a witness called for cross-examination under Act 307, Public Acts 1909 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12865), without permitting the opposite party the benefit of portions favorable to him, is not erroneous, where the jury were further instructed that the defense should be determined from all the testimony left it for consideration.—City of Kalamazoo v. Standard Paper Co., 182 Mich. 476.

¶ 74. In an action upon notes given for corporate stock an instruction that it was not disputed that the same representations as to the financial condition of the corporation were made by the holder of the stock as were made by one actually selling the stock, and that such person was the agent of the owner held not prejudicial error in view of other portions of charge to the effect that the jury were the sole judges as to the facts, and the almost conclusive evidence substantiating the instruction.—Loud v. Solomon, 188 Mich. 7.

¶ 75. Where the testimony is brief and pointed and limited to the two parties as witnesses, an instruction that if the jury believes the testimony of the defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover, is not reversible error in view of the correctness of the remainder of the instructions.—Laviolette v. Alberts, 126 Mich. 96.

¶ 76. An instruction by the court in one portion of a charge that complainant is entitled to recover for all the labor and fuel expended by it during an interference by defendant with complainant's water power, when in fact such interference caused only a portion of such expenditure, does not constitute reversible error where other instructions and the charge as a whole state the true rule of damages.—Eesley Light & Power Co. v. Commonwealth Power Co., 172 Mich. 78.

¶ 77. An instruction to the jury that "You have heard the arguments of counsel and I refer you to those for a statement of the respective parties" held, in connection with other portions of the charge, not to permit the jury to take counsel's statement as evidence.—Vultee v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 186 Mich. 523.

¶ 78. Although an instruction in an ejectment case stating that it was for the jury to say whether the defendant should be disturbed in his possession and should surrender the strip in question or not, was, standing alone, subject to the objection that it indicated the court's view as to the merits, the objection was removed where, taken in connection with the rest of the charge and the evidence in the case, it was clear that the jury were not misled.—Henry v. Henry, 122 Mich. 6.

¶ 79. In an action where there was a claim of $500 loaned and admission of loans of $350 coupled with production of notes for that sum as evidence that it had been paid, and a new note given for $350 on which suit was brought, an instruction as to compromises of disputes could not have been prejudicial to defendant, where the jury were also charged that if it should be found that he gave notes to deceased for the $350 which he borrowed of her, and that he paid these notes, he would not be liable in the case.—Schulz v. Schulz, 113 Mich. 502.

¶ 80. An instruction in an action for the balance due on a contract was not injurious to the defendant, which stated that there could be no recoupment unless the recovery was on the quantum meruit; where the jury was also told that there could be no recovery unless the work had been fully performed and accepted, and where defendant's claim for damages for breach of an express warranty was also fairly submitted.—Mosaic Tile Co. v. Chiera, 133 Mich. 497.

¶ 81. In an action on a claim by the widow against her husband's estate, an instruction that if the jury find, after collecting all the evidence, that there is more of it tending to support the claim, they must find for the claimant, is not erroneous because all the testimony on certain questions was introduced by the claimant; where the instruction is construed in connection with the remainder of the charge in which the jury were told that their verdict should be for the claimant if there was more testimony, that is, a preponderance of testimony tending to establish the claim, if not their verdict should be for the defendant.—Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658.

¶ 82. In an action involving the truthfulness of a statement made in application for life insurance, a charge that "You have heard the testimony of the physicians on that point. You have heard the testimony of Mr. Wilson (the plaintiff). You know all of the attendant circumstances, and it is for you gentlemen to say what the real facts were with reference to that matter. You have heard her statement as given in the application. If you find that she had consulted a physician," etc., is not when considered as a whole open to the objection that the jury might consider the application as evidence of its own truthfulness.—Wilson v. Royal Neighbors of America, 139 Mich. 423.

¶ 83. To charge that, if one accused of "fighting or quarreling" contrary to the provisions of an ordinance was engaged in fighting and quarreling with another, he would be guilty "without regard to who was the aggressor" was not error; where the remainder of the charge fully and fairly gave to consideration of the jury the right of self-defense and told them that if he was simply defending himself against that other he would not be guilty as charged.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 102 Mich. 551.

¶ 84. An instruction in an action in which defendant claimed that he dealt with plaintiff and a third person as partners, stating that one of the circumstances and facts of a partnership is the fact of general agency exercised by the parties in conducting their business, and that if they found that from the general agency exercised by such third party he was in fact a partner, etc., they should find for defendant, was not error when read in connection with the remainder of the charge in which a partnership was defined correctly.—Weeks v. Hutchinson, 135 Mich. 160.

¶ 85. Where the amount of commissions due from the defendant to the plaintiff is in dispute, and the court instructs that there is no material difference between the evidence on this point offered by the plaintiff and that offered by the defendant, when in fact there is a material variance, this is not reversible error, if another instruction sets out fully the defendant's claim.—Duford v. Parliament of the Prudent Patricians of Pompeii, 152 Mich. 151.

¶ 86. In an action for failure to deliver coal, in which defendant claimed a deduction of the balance due for coal delivered, it was not error to refuse a request directing the jury to deduct such amount, where the jury could not have failed to understand from what the court did say, that the deductions claimed were to be allowed to the defendant.—Benton Fuel Co. v. O. W. Shipman Co., 136 Mich. 523.

¶ 87. In an action for damages for fraud and misrepresentation in the sale of land, an instruction that sometimes it becomes impossible or impracticable to bring an action to rescind the contract because of fraud, because the property may have changed ownership, held not prejudicially erroneous, where, considered in light of the rest of the charge, it amounted only to a statement that plaintiffs were properly in court under the form of action selected by them.—Hutchinson v. Westbrook, 191 Mich. 484.

¶ 88. In an action of ejectment, in which the boundary line between two tracts of land was in dispute, the charge of the court dealing with the manner of making government surveys and their conclusiveness, the establishment of boundary lines by adverse possession, and the burden of proof, held to be sufficient because correct when taken as a whole.—Wilcox v. Jenison, 198 Mich. 182.

¶ 92. Where the charge of the court, taken as a whole, correctly states the law as applicable to the particular case, and clearly defines the issue, the fact that sentences are objectionable when considered independent of the context does not constitute error.—Provost v. Brueck, 110 Mich. 136.

¶ 93. Though isolated sentences in the charge to the jury may, when considered separately, be erroneous, such error is harmless where the charge as a whole shows that the issues were submitted fairly.—Smalley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 131 Mich. 560.

¶ 94. A particular instruction will not be held error where a consideration of the charge as a whole shows that the jury could not have been misled.—Beatty v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 319.

¶ 96. Where a portion of a charge is objectionable, but fairly presents the case when read in connection with the entire charge, no reversible error has been committed.—Frohlich v. Independent Glass Co., 173 Mich. 428.

¶ 97. A judgment will not be reversed because part of the charge was open to misinterpretation, where it is apparent that no one was misled thereby. So held of a charge respecting a deduction "from these losses of three-fourths of one per cent., according to the terms of the policy" of credit insurance, where the amount of sales was clearly meant as the basis of such percentage and not the amount of losses, which would have been error.—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

¶ 98. The charge and refusal to charge, held not erroneous, notwithstanding a few sentences in the charge by themselves might be subject to criticism, where the charge was lengthy and when read in its entirety was a fair and impartial statement of the law applicable to the facts of the case.—Hall v. City of Flint, 195 Mich. 638.

III. REQUESTS AND MODIFICATIONS OR REFUSALS.

Denials and modifications of requests as harmless errors, see Harmless Error §§ 60, 61.

Sufficiency of request for directed verdict, see Directing Verdict § 28.

Presumption on error as to effect of oral charge not set forth, see Appeal § 381.

Provisions as to requests for instructions, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 59; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12631, 14574.

Power of court to instruct of its own motion, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 58; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12630, 14573.

¶ 99. Whether any specific instructions are requested or not the trial judge should charge the jury as to the principles of law governing the rights of the parties.—Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622.

¶ 100. Unless specially requested it is not error for the trial court to omit to charge the jury upon a point to which attention is not called, although it is raised by the pleadings.—Copas v. Anglo-American Provision Co., 73 Mich. 541.

¶ 101. If a charge is deemed necessary to correct the effect of error in admitting evidence in addition to the striking out of it, the court should be moved by a request.—Barnett v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 247.

¶ 102. Where the defendant presents no requests to charge, it is not error that the court did not specifically point out to the jury that he withdrew from their consideration evidence improperly admitted on a certain point, where the general trend of his charge accomplished that purpose.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 104. Where, in a suit to recover for professional services, plaintiffs relied either upon an express contract covering the entire services or upon an implied one of the same extent, and their testimony related to the value of the entire services, the charge of the court, following such theory and proofs, is not open to the objection that the trial judge did not, of his own motion, introduce a theory supported only by defendant's testimony, which was denied by plaintiffs, and which, if suggested, might have entitled plaintiffs to a verdict of $30, whereas their claim was for nearly $1,900.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521.

¶ 105. Where, in an action to recover for services rendered, payment of part of the account is admitted, the court's failure to mention the subject of payment in its charge is not error where its attention is not called to the matter, and where no request is made. —Crowell v. Truax, 94 Mich. 585.

¶ 106. In ejectment, it was not error to fail to charge that if plaintiff's grantor knew that defendant asserted a hostile claim for the statutory period, defendant was entitled to a verdict; where no such charge was requested.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 107. In an action for fraud where evidence of unperformed promises has been admitted, if defendant desires a specific instruction that the breach of such promise was not in itself evidence of the fraud alleged, he should make a request for such instructions.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 108. Where, after charging the jury in a suit by a broker for commissions for securing a loan, the court asks counsel if he has omitted anything and counsel sits silent, and there is evidence on the matter of damages, the failure to charge as to the measure of damages does not call for reversal of a judgment in plaintiff's favor.—West v. Hudson, 171 Mich. 669.

¶ 109. The failure of the trial court to present to the jury a defense of set-off is not error, where no request to do so was submitted by the defendant.—Karwick v. Pickands, 181 Mich. 169.

¶ 110. An instruction as to the measure of damages in an action for personal injuries, which substantially conforms to the pleading and proof, is sufficient in the absence of a request to instruct as to some special issue.—Walters v. Detroit United Ry., 183 Mich. 549.

¶ 111. A charge is not objectionable solely because it did not go farther and pass upon an additional point to which the judge's attention was not called, and upon which no request was preferred.—Rankin v. West, 25 Mich. 195.

¶ 115. Error cannot be assigned upon an exception to the sufficiency of a charge to cover the substantial issues of the case upon particular points of law if the charge as given did in fact cover all branches of injury under the issues made by the pleadings, and if no special request was made for more specific instructions.—Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622.

¶ 116. It is the duty of counsel to proffer desired fuller or more specific instructions, especially where the court asks counsel if there are any changes they desire to be made, or anything further that they desire instructions to be given on.—Hartwig v. Kell, 199 Mich. 603.

¶ 117. The failure of the trial judge to define according to its legal meaning a phrase in an agreement, and his charging the jury in the language of the agreement cannot be regarded as error where his attention was not called by counsel to the subject, and where a more specific instruction was not asked for.—Turner v. Muskegon Machine & Foundry Co., 97 Mich. 166.

¶ 118. The court was not in error in refusing to give instructions requested by counsel for defendant, in an action for the violation of a contract of employment; where the charge given, according to the evident understanding of the court, contained the substance of counsel's request; and where such charge presented fairly the question involved; since such counsel should have corrected by proper requests any evident misapprehension of his position on the part of the court.—Proctor v. Hobart M. Cable Co., 145 Mich. 503.

¶ 119. Instructions in an action for assault and battery and ravishment are not erroneous because not elaborated where they are correct though favorable to one party and where no request for elaboration was made, especially where attention was called to the subject by requests by the opposite party before the charge.—Totten v. Totten, 172 Mich. 565.

¶ 120. In an action to recover damages for breach of a marriage promise, aggravated by a claimed seduction, where the theories of the parties are simple and are stated in their essentials by the court in its charge, it is the duty of a party desiring a more explicit statement of his claims to present requests to the court.—Bischoff v. Harris, 198 Mich. 59.

¶ 121. Where the court, in an action involving the validity of a chattel mortgage given by a corporation to its vice president and its secretary, charged that in determining the question of fraud, the jury "should consider the relation of the parties," it cannot be urged that the charge was not sufficiently explicit on the point in the absence of any request to charge more definitely and explicitly.—Crossette v. Jordan, 132 Mich. 78.

Order in which instructions given, see post § 108.

¶ 122. Until defendant has announced that he rests his case, he cannot insist upon the court's instructing the jury.—Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210; Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387; Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535; Clow v. Plummer, 85 Mich. 550; Kelso v. Woodruff, 88 Mich. 299.

¶ 123. Counsel should submit their requests to charge in time to allow them to be examined by the judge; but if the charge as made omits anything essential the judge should allow proper requests to be submitted at any time before the jury retires.—Crippen v. Hope, 38 Mich. 344.

¶ 124. In a civil case one cannot complain of the court's failure to give instructions that counsel did not suggest until after verdict.—Record Pub. Co. v. Merwin, 115 Mich. 10.

¶ 125. It is not prejudicial error to refuse to instruct the jury that the burden of proof is on the defendant to show settlement, when asked for at a time when they have been called into court to find out whether they are likely to agree and where a previous instruction had covered the point.—Stevens v. Beardsley, 134 Mich. 506.

Form of instructions, see ante II.

§ 25. ——Length, clearness and accuracy.

Wording and phrasing of instructions, see ante § 7 et seq.

Giving substance of requests in clear, concise language, see ante § 9.

Refusal of lengthy, obscure and ambiguous requests, see post § 30 et seq.

¶ 127. The practice of preferring long requests to charge that involve elaborate arguments not calculated to keep the supposed points distinct and intelligible is criticized.—Hulin v. People, 31 Mich. 323.

¶ 128. Requests to charge covering 17 pages of printed record criticized as too long and likely to cause confusion.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 129. Where a party requests a multitude of charges, of so complex a nature as to make it impracticable for the trial judge to analyze and sift them, the court may refuse them, and proceed to instruct in its own way.—Welch v. Jackson & B. C. Traction Co., 154 Mich. 399.

¶ 130. A requested instruction which is very long, which is practically a statement of counsel's argument, and which contains many statements of disputed facts, is properly refused by the court.—Wendt v. Village of Richmond, 164 Mich. 173.

Duty of court to instruct, see also ante § 2.

Giving equivalent requests in language of court, see post § 39.

Duty to instruct upon theories and claims of parties, see post § 44 et seq.

Discretion of court as to instructions upon weight or credibility, see post § 54.

As to burden and degree of proof, see post §§ 81, 82.

¶ 132. It is error to refuse to give requests that correctly state the law applicable to the facts, unless such requests are covered by the general charge in a manner not so disconnected as to impair their force.—Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 59 Mich. 257.

¶ 133. A witness having testified to a conversation with plaintiff, wherein the latter made statements inconsistent with the rights he set up in his suit, and which, if true, precluded his recovery on his own theory, and this testimony being corroborated by other evidence, the refusal to charge, as requested, that if such a conversation as testified to was held the plaintiff could not recover, is held error, in the absence of any equivalent charge.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502.

¶ 134. An instruction, which by repeating the language of an inadmissible request, leaves the impression that such request was adopted by the court is prejudicial.—Sweeney v. Devens, 72 Mich. 301.

¶ 135. A party has a right to have the law of his case presented to the jury in its plainest, simplest form; and if it is properly embodied in that form in requests to charge, their refusal is error unless the substance of such requests is as well given by the court in the general charge.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 136. The refusal to give a request to charge, where there is evidence in the case to support it, is erroneous, unless it is fairly covered by the general charge.—Carrel v. Kalamazoo Cold Storage Co., 112 Mich. 34.

¶ 137. Requested charges correctly stating the law should be given or their substance incorporated in the charge when not already covered by the general charge.—Gurden v. Stevens, 146 Mich. 489.

¶ 138. In action on a policy it is error to refuse to charge that a particular item is not covered by the policy, such being the law, though the charge has repeatedly told the jury that items of that class were not covered.—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

§ 27. Modification of requests.

Giving substance of requests in connected logical form, see ante § 9.

Modification harmless where instruction correct when construed as a whole, see ante § 19.

Requested instruction given in court's own language, see post § 89.

Modification conveying an impression as to court's opinion of evidence, see post ¶ 399.

Modification of request to charge upon degree of proof, see post § 83.

Modification of requested instruction as to effect of false testimony, see post § 91.

¶ 139. A request to charge embracing a double proposition stated distinctively must be correct throughout, or it may be refused as a whole; and a modification of it that is supported by the evidence as to one branch or element of such proposition is not erroneous though as to the other it be not supported by any evidence.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 140. It is erroneous for the court to give a requested instruction in a manner so modified as to obscure its vital point.—Parrish v. Bradley, 73 Mich. 610.

¶ 141. Where a request to charge bearing upon an important feature of the case at issue correctly states the law, it is error for the court, in instructing the jury, to add to the statement words which render it of doubtful meaning.—Chabert v. Russell, 109 Mich. 571.

¶ 142. Where the alteration of a request to charge might have confused the jury if made with their knowledge, it was not treated as error where the request, as modified and given, was not erroneous, and there was nothing to show that the jury knew that the request had been modified.—Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201.

¶ 143. Where a request for an instruction began "there is evidence tending to show," the substitution by the court of the words "Does the evidence tend to show" could not be complained of.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 144. An instruction in a will contest stating that if the person who drew the will testified truthfully the will must stand, was properly modified by telling the jury to take all the testimony in the case which they believed credible and then say whether such person testified truthfully.—Spencer v. Terry's Estate, 133 Mich. 39.

¶ 145. A requested instruction in an action for breach of a contract of purchase, charging the jury to consider the appearance of witnesses, the situation of the parties, the condition of the markets at the time of the making of the contract, and its breach, the subsequent action of the parties and the written documents in the case, and also charging the jury to "bear in mind that written documents are more reliable than human recollections," is properly modified by omitting the last clause as to the written documents, it appearing that the contract did not rest in written documents. The claims of the parties being in sharp conflict, and the jury being advised to consider all the evidence, the court did not err in declining to say that some of the evidence was more reliable than other evidence.—Blitz v. Roach, 121 Mich. 135.

¶ 146. Giving a request that if the jury found that the contract sued on was made on Sunday it is void, and adding a charge, with illustrations, that if one party to such a contract performed his part of it on week days and the other accepted the benefits of such performance he must pay for them, is not error.—Bollin v. Hooper, 127 Mich. 287.

Construction of charge as a whole, see ante § 19.

¶ 149. In a suit to recover freight charges a request was made for an instruction to the jury that there must be direct proof of negligence, or want of care in the transportation, to warrant a recoupment. Held, that the modification of this instruction by dropping the word "direct" was no error, where the questions of negligence and burden of proof were otherwise correctly presented.—American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. v. Phillips, 29 Mich. 515.

Refusal of argumentative requests, see also ante § 11.
Refusal of belated requests, see ante § 23.
Requests to charge upon weight or effect of evidence, see post § 58 et seq.
Requests requiring inferences to be drawn from evidence, see also post § 62.
Positive instructions upon matters as to which evidence is conflicting, see post § 63.
Instructions giving undue prominence to evidence or witnesses, see post § 76.
Erroneous requests as to burden and degree of proof, see post §§ 81, 82.

¶ 150. A requested instruction that does not state correctly the facts, which it assumes, is properly refused.—Conely v. Wood, 73 Mich. 203.

¶ 151. An instruction is properly refused where it contains improper matter, and where the general charge covers all that is proper to go to the jury.—Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367.

¶ 152. It is not error for the trial court to refuse to give requested instructions where he properly charges on the point involved and where the requested instructions omit necessary qualifications included in the said charge given by the court.—Van Leuvan v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 167 Mich. 355.

¶ 153. A request for a charge that the presumption is very strong, where something remains to be done to determine the sum to be paid, that title does not pass, is properly rejected if the thing remaining to be done is not also properly embodied in it.—Wilcox v. Young, 66 Mich. 687.

¶ 154. Where the wife of the defendant had been a witness and there was testimony to show that she had made certain statements regarding the collision such testimony is competent to show that these statements were inconsistent with her testimony at the trial, and it was not error to refuse an instruction to disregard all evidence in the case tending to show what she had said about the collision in the absence of her husband, such a request being too broad.—Herbeck v. Germain, 144 Mich. 157.

Necessity for clearness, conciseness and accuracy in instructions, see ante § 7 et seq.
Conflicting, misleading and ambiguous instructions, see ante § 17.
Necessity that requests be concise, clear and accurate, see ante § 25.

¶ 155. It was held not to be error to refuse a request for a charge which may have been meant to be hypothetical, but which the court understood to be positive.—Dodge v. Brown, 22 Mich. 446.

¶ 156. The refusal to give a requested charge which is so framed as to be misleading is not error.—McKercher v. Curtis, 35 Mich. 478.

¶ 157. The rejection of a request to charge that is so obscure as not readily to have been understood by the jury is not error.—Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 Mich. 310.

¶ 158. Requests technically proper and correct in the abstract, if likely to puzzle and mislead the jury, are properly refused if the charge as given covers the points.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

Necessity that instructions be concrete, see ante § 10.
Necessity that instructions be applicable to the case, see post IV.

¶ 160. A request to charge is properly refused if there is no evidence to support it, even though it is abstractly correct.—Seitz v. Miles, 16 Mich. 456; In re Smith's Appeal, 52 Mich. 415; Rasch v. Bissell, 52 Mich. 455; Weaver v. Bechtel, 53 Mich. 516; Van Hoesen v. Cameron, 54 Mich. 609; Lane v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 Mich. 63; Wilson v. Bowen, 64 Mich. 133; Gould v. Sanders, 69 Mich. 5; McNetton v. Herb, 158 Mich. 525; Karwick v. Pickands, 181 Mich. 169.

¶ 161. The court cannot be required to charge upon abstract propositions of law not having a bearing upon the evidence submitted.—Doyle v. Stevens, 4 Mich. 87.

¶ 162. Refusal of an instruction is not error where it is asked without reference to any particular circumstances and there is no testimony on either side of any such state of things as it contemplates.—Van Deusen v. Cathcart, 43 Mich. 258.

¶ 163. An instruction not pertinent to the facts of the case as developed by the testimony on either side is properly refused.—Wilcox v. Young, 66 Mich. 687.

¶ 165. Refusal of an instruction in a case of personal injury caused by collision between a train and a team, to the effect that the company was not negligent as to speed, as trains were not limited in the rate of speed they might run in the country and across public highways where travel was limited, although stating a correct proposition of law, held not error, as it was not applicable to the facts.—Grenell v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 124 Mich. 141.

¶ 166. In ejectment where there is no claim by the plaintiff based on adverse possession and no evidence introduced, it is not erroneous to refuse to instruct "that there is no evidence that the plaintiff has title by adverse possession."—Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club, 125 Mich. 433.

¶ 167. Refusal to instruct that both parties must have been fairly dealt with by a common agent is not error where there is no evidence of unfair action by the agent.—Slingerland v. Kayser, 127 Mich. 7.

¶ 168. It is not error to refuse to instruct in a passenger's action for personal injuries against a street railway company that there was no evidence of incompetency of the street car conductor where there was evidence tending to show incompetency and it is urged on appeal for the first time that the declaration was not based on the fault of the conductor.—Leach v. Detroit Elec. Ry., 129 Mich. 286.

¶ 169. It is not error to refuse a requested instruction that parties dealing with manufacturing corporations upon the strength of their reports filed with the Secretary of State, have a right to rely upon such reports, where there was no evidence to indicate that the parties had any knowledge of, or relied upon, such reports.—Crossette v. Jordan, 132 Mich. 78.

¶ 170. It is not error to refuse requests merely stating abstract propositions of law, without anything to indicate to the jury their application to the case.—Mosaic Tile Co. v. Chiera, 133 Mich. 497.

¶ 172. In a personal injury case where there was some evidence to show that the plaintiff had recovered her health entirely the court properly refused a request to instruct that she was suffering from neurasthenia.—Herbeck v. Germain, 144 Mich. 157.

¶ 173. Where defendant requests instructions upon statements which misrepresent what the plaintiff claims, the instructions are properly denied.—Beaurele v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 152 Mich. 345.

¶ 174. Is it not error to decline to give instructions upon abstract questions which can in no way aid the jury in coming to a conclusion as to the fact.—Fors v. Fors, 159 Mich. 156.

¶ 175. An instruction to disregard the financial condition of plaintiff or of the defendants, in an action for personal injuries, is properly refused where not based upon any evidence.—Bilakos v. Kelley, 200 Mich. 125.

§ 32. ——Requests invading jury province.

Right to instruct upon the weight and effect of evidence, see post § 58.

Instructions invading province of jury, see post V.

¶ 176. A request to charge which requires the court to pass upon the facts of the case as presented in the evidence is properly refused, as being an invasion of the province of the jury not warranted by the law.—Jones v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 59 Mich. 437.

¶ 178. A request that ignores the possibility of the correctness of the testimony of the opposing party is properly rejected.—Wilcox v. Young, 66 Mich. 687.

¶ 179. A refusal to charge that there was no evidence of notice is not error where the testimony of a certain witness fairly tended to prove it, even though such testimony was shaken by cross-examination. It is for the jury and not the court to give the proper effect to all the testimony taken together.—Hayes v. Homer, 36 Mich. 374.

¶ 180. In an action on a claim for services by a nephew against the estate of his uncle, the court properly refused an instruction that the services have not been shown to have been rendered under an agreement for remuneration where the claimant testified that there was such an understanding with the deceased.—Van Slambrook v. Little's Estate, 127 Mich. 61.

¶ 181. Refusal to define a gift, which the charge assumed was made if the testimony was believed, is not error where the whole question was one of credibility with no question that there was a gift if the facts were as testified.—Parke v. Nixon, 141 Mich. 267.

¶ 182. Where the evidence as to a breach of contract is conflicting, instructions requiring the court to find as a matter of law that the contract had been broken by one party, are properly refused.—G. S. Blakeslee & Co. v. Reinhold Mfg. Co., 153 Mich. 230.

¶ 183. The rejection of requests to charge which simply embody propositions of fact, and convey no instruction in point of law, or which are not applicable to the case, is not error.—Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 Mich. 310.

¶ 184. Instructions upon the evidence involving no question of law, but relating only to the weight and credibility of the proofs, should not be asked.—Watson v. Watson, 53 Mich. 168.

Instructions ignoring evidence, see post § 53.
Necessity that instructions be applicable to and conform to evidence, see post § 49 et seq.
Instructions erroneous as ignoring evidence, see post § 53.

¶ 185. Instructions based upon a partial view of the evidence should be refused, as the jury must decide from all the facts.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408; 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 186. A request asking the court to pass upon a part of the facts which should not be considered except in connection with the rest of the testimony upon the same subject is properly rejected.—Kieldsen v. Wilson, 77 Mich. 45.

¶ 187. Requests for instructions that certain evidence is undisputed are properly refused when there is in fact a dispute as to the facts.—Seitz v. Starks, 144 Mich. 448.

§ 35. ——Requests assuming facts, claims or theories.

Necessity of instructing upon theories and claims, see post § 44.
Necessity that instructions be confined to matters in evidence, see post § 50.
Instructions erroneous when based on matters not in evidence, see post § 50.
Necessity that instructions conform to theories, claims and issues, see post IV.
Refusal of requested instruction in assault and battery, see post ¶ 298.
Instructions assuming or misstating facts in question, see post § 72.

¶ 188. Requests to instruct which assume facts not established by the evidence, are properly refused.—Hunter v. Village of Durand, 137 Mich. 53.

¶ 189. A request on the subject of estoppel is properly refused, where there is no evidence that the acts urged as estoppel were acted on by the requesting party's predecessor through whom title is claimed.—Parke v. Nixon, 141 Mich. 267.

¶ 190. When a charge requested assumes a certain state of facts to be held as existing, it should seldom be given and never if there is any room for a different finding by the jury.—Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97.

¶ 191. A request to charge, which implies a claim by the opposite party which had not in fact been made by him is properly refused.—Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 Mich. 310.

Rule that instructions construed as a whole, see ante § 19.

¶ 192. Where a request to charge contains two independent and abstract propositions, one of which it is proper to give and the other not, the proper course is not to refuse it as a whole, but to refuse the erroneous proposition and grant the correct one.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 193. Where a proper request to charge is not separate, but is coupled with another that is erroneous, the refusal of the whole is not error.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

¶ 194. The refusal of a request to charge, of which a portion states a rule improperly, is not error.—Courtemanche v. Supreme Court I. O. F., 136 Mich. 30.

¶ 195. Where a proper instruction is requested, but it is coupled with an improper one, it is correct for the court to refuse both.—Williams v. City of Lansing, 152 Mich. 169.

¶ 196. A requested instruction containing proper matter may rightfully be refused by the court if it also contains erroneous matter.—Rivers v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 164 Mich. 696.

¶ 197. An instruction otherwise correct as to the duty of defendant railroad at an unsettled place where it had no reason to expect the presence of children on the track was properly refused, where it coupled a fact of which there was no evidence, to wit, that defendant was but recently organized and but recently in possession of the road.—Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 Mich. 390.

¶ 198. A request to charge that failure of a landlord to obtain a permit for the making of alterations on a building as required by an ordinance "is no evidence of negligence," even if not erroneous in law, was properly refused where it was made too broad by adding, "The question * * * is whether there was in fact negligence on the part of" the landlord, thus excluding his responsibility for the negligence of those whom he suffered to do the work.—Blickley v. Luce's Estate, 148 Mich. 233.

¶ 199. A request to charge which begins with a recital of facts as undisputed and closes with several propositions which the court is expected to charge "upon these undisputed facts" must be considered a single request; and if any part of the statement of facts is incorrect the whole request must fail, and the judge is right in refusing to give it.—Bedford v. Penny, 58 Mich. 424.

Refusal of instructions already given, see post § 40.

Requested instruction as to burden of proof covered by previous instruction, see ante ¶ 125.

Improper refusal of request to charge as to what items covered by insurance policy, see ante ¶ 138.

Duty of court to give proper requests, see ante § 26.

¶ 200. There is no error in refusing specific instructions asked, if the charge given correctly and clearly covers them, or all of them that are proper.—Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145; Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32; Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181; Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247; Lott v. Sweet, 33 Mich. 308; Wright v. Irwin, 35 Mich. 347; Hurd v. Newton, 36 Mich. 35; Van Den Brooks v. Correon, 48 Mich. 283; Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107; Sloman v. Goebel Brewing Co., 118 Mich. 442; Renaud v. City of Bay City, 124 Mich. 29; Lincoln v. Felt, 132 Mich. 49; Sweet v. Western Union Tel. Co., 139 Mich. 322; City of Battle Creek v. Haak, 139 Mich. 514; Simon v. Detroit Ry., 196 Mich. 586.

¶ 204. It is not error to refuse requests for instructions where the subject-matter is fully covered in substance by the charge given.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 205. Where, in an action for negligently allowing fire to spread, the jury is instructed to consider only the appliances kept in a mill to prevent fires, the omission to give a special instruction not to consider irrelevant testimony as to use of liquor by engineer and fireman of mill is not error.—Cowley v. Colwell, 91 Mich. 537.

¶ 206. A judgment will not be reversed because of the refusal of the circuit judge to give all of the instructions requested by plaintiff in error, if those given fully presented his theory of the case, and covered the entire controversy.—Harris v. Stewart, 112 Mich. 82.

¶ 207. In an action to recover for the wrongful flooding of plaintiff's land, the giving of an instruction which covered the entire ground and stated the law correctly, made the giving or discussion of defendant's refused requests unnecessary.—Finkbinder v. Ernst, 135 Mich. 226.

¶ 209. It is not error to refuse requested charges where the substance of the instructions requested is correctly stated in the court's charge as given, and this despite the fact of a general want of clearness and certainty of expression in said charge of the court.—Board Water Com'rs City of Detroit v. Butler Bros. Const. Co., 168 Mich. 137.

¶ 210. A failure to charge on making alterations in a building without filing plans or getting a permit required by ordinance, as evidence of negligence, is not harmful to defendant charged with the negligence, where the charge as a whole repeatedly stated what facts would constitute negligence without mentioning among such facts the failure to obtain a permit or to file plans.—Blickley v. Luce's Estate, 148 Mich. 233.

¶ 211. Where the substance of several requests to charge is contained in the charge as given, there is no error.—American Seed Co. v. Cole, 174 Mich. 42.

¶ 212. In an action by a shipper operating a factory to recover demurrage charges paid under protest on a claim that delay was due to the failure of defendant to "spot" cars at the plaintiff's plant and withdraw loaded ones, there was no error in refusing to instruct the jury that the switching service on the spur running to plaintiff's plant was "plant switching" which defendant was not bound to do where the court instructed the jury that no delay arising by a failure to switch cars after they were placed in the spur should be allowed for.—Mt. Clemens Sugar Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 200 Mich. 33.

¶ 213. Requests to charge as to matters fully covered by the general charge are properly refused.—Shearer v. Middleton, 88 Mich. 621; International Fair & Expo. Ass'n v. Walker, 97 Mich. 159; Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., 94 Mich. 607; Westra v. Westra's Estate, 101 Mich. 526; Darling v. Thompson, 108 Mich. 215; Canfield v. Jackson, 112 Mich. 120; Brundaga v. Shelly, 113 Mich. 20; Pittsburgh & Conneaut Dock Co. v. Detroit Transp. Co., 122 Mich. 445; Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541; Smith v. Nixon, 145 Mich. 593; In re Morse's Estate, 146 Mich. 463; Parkey v. Galloway, 147 Mich. 693; Schweyer v. Jones, 152 Mich. 241; Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115; Chapman v. Strong, 162 Mich. 623; Bouma v. Dubois, 169 Mich. 422; Houser v. Carmody, 173 Mich. 121; Conroy v. Haffner, 182 Mich. 289; Feist v. Root, 189 Mich. 595; Laskowski v. People's Ice Co., 190 Mich. 331; Tiley v. Detroit United Ry., 190 Mich. 7; Wood v. Standard Drug Co., 190 Mich. 654; Miller v. Du Val, 191 Mich. 386; Baker v. Mohl, 191 Mich. 516; Parnell v. Pungs, 190 Mich. 638; Thompson v. W. W. Kimball Co., 190 Mich. 579; Harmon v. Parker, 193 Mich. 542; Pool v. Township of Montague, 194 Mich. 476; Amley v. Saginaw Milling Co., 195 Mich. 189; Kasprzak v. Chapman, 197 Mich. 552; Anderson v. Kendrick, 199 Mich. 240; In re Hewitt's Estate, Id.; Burtis v. Davison, 199 Mich. 14; Whittemore v. Walter, 193 Mich. 365.

¶ 214. It is not error to refuse a specific instruction where the contention of the parties is fully explained in a general charge.—Jarvis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 128 Mich. 61.

¶ 216. It is not error to refuse a request covered generally by the charge, especially where the record is silent as to a contention that would have made the request pertinent.—Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513.

¶ 217. Refusal of a request for an instruction as to set-off which is fully covered by the general charge given, is not error.—Bates v. Kuney's Estate, 124 Mich. 596.

¶ 219. While a party is ordinarily entitled to have his proper requests given as proposed by him, or nearly so, yet if they are substantially given in the general charge, though in somewhat different language, error cannot be claimed.—Stevens v. Pendleton, 94 Mich. 405; Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408.

¶ 221. The rejection of requests to charge is not error where the court in a connected charge of its own covers the whole case and lays down the law correctly, and responds to all such requests as are relevant or are based on any evidence.—Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215; Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 222. It is not error to substitute for express requests to charge, equivalent instructions in the language of the court, if the ground is fully and correctly covered. But counsel have a right to a clear formulation of every important view of the law either as they drew it up or in some equally proper form.—Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

¶ 223. The refusal of a charge is not error where it is substantially given in an instruction of greater scope and more favorable to the plaintiff in error.—Clark v. Rice, 46 Mich. 308.

¶ 224. Requests to charge are properly refused if the judge, instead of giving the request, fully and correctly instructs the jury as to the law applicable to the case.—Pound v. Port H. & S. W. R. Co., 54 Mich. 13.

¶ 225. It is not error to refuse to give an instruction in the language of the request if it is substantially given in the charge and in such a manner that the jury could not be misled by the refusal.—Kendrick v. Towle, 60 Mich. 363.

¶ 226. Error may not be imputed to a trial judge for instructing a jury in his own words rather than those of a request, when the substance is the same.—Kendrick v. Towle, 60 Mich. 363.

¶ 227. Specific charges need not be given in the exact form asked, if all that is proper and pertinent is contained in the charge actually given.—Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97.

¶ 228. It is proper to refuse a request to charge which differs from the charge actually given only in being more verbose and less clear.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

¶ 229. It is not necessary to give instructions in the very language of a request for them, even though it can be done; and if the oral charge by the court is correct and applicable to the case the requests may be refused.—Westra v. Estate of Westra, 101 Mich. 526.

¶ 230. Although a party is entitled to have specific charges upon the law applicable to each of the various hypotheses or combinations of facts which the jury, from the evidence, might legitimately find, and which have not been covered by other instructions, he is not entitled to have requests given in the precise language in which they are framed, if the points they raise are sufficiently covered by the instructions actually given.—Alton v. Meeuwenberg, 108 Mich. 629.

¶ 233. The practice of asking numerous slightly varying instructions in an abstract form, or substantially the same instruction in various forms, condemned.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32; Michigan Cent. R. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 235. General requests to charge cannot be used to cover some pretended omission that is not specifically pointed out. And where the questions of fact have been properly submitted to the jury in a general charge to which no exception was taken, and general requests were made to charge that plaintiff must prove every material allegation, and that the burden of proof was on him, etc., the judge's remark "that these requests were law, but that they had no application to the case that he could perceive," was held not to be error, where there was no real conflict in the evidence.—Herbstreit v. Beckwith, 35 Mich. 93.

¶ 236. After giving an instruction, the court read a request which covered the precise point in different language, and said: "I think I will decline it. It is good law, but I do not think it necessary for that language." Held, equivalent to saying that he did not deem it necessary to repeat an instruction already given.—Schulz v. Schulz, 113 Mich. 502.

¶ 237. A statement by the judge that he was requested to give certain instructions, but that they were inapplicable and a further explanation of why they were not controlling cannot be considered as to the giving of the instructions.—Wheeler v. Detroit Electric Ry., 128 Mich. 656.

¶ 238. In an action for false representations as to the value of certain corporate stock, plaintiff relied upon a letter stating that the corporation was paying net 12 per cent on the capital, and submitted a request to charge, relating to the receipts and disbursements of the corporation at the time the letter was written, which drew as a conclusion from the accounts as stated the falsity of the representations. The circuit judge, in refusing the request, remarked that to give it would be to usurp the province of the jury, and that he could not say affirmatively that the figures as set forth therein were correct. The jury was then carefully instructed that the whole question of the truth or falsity of the letter was for its determination, and that, if it should find that the letter was substantially true, there could be no recovery. Held, that, in view of the whole charge, the remarks of the court in refusing the request were not open to the criticism that they allowed the jury to infer that, if the figures in question were found to be accurate, the conclusion set forth in the instruction must follow.—Coombs v. Radford, 110 Mich. 192.

¶ 239. It is not held error to remark on the nature of an estoppel, in reply to a request, the court at the same time stating that it was unnecessary to consider that.—Dodge v. Brown, 22 Mich. 446.

IV. APPLICABILITY AND CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS, EVIDENCE AND ISSUES.

Necessity of avoiding abstract charges, see ante § 10.
Necessity and sufficiency of requests for charges, see ante § 21 et seq.
Refusal of requests misstating facts and issues, see ante § 29 et seq.
Refusal of requested instructions that are inapplicable to the case, see ante § 31.
Charges assuming or misstating facts, see post § 72.
Conformity to law of the case as announced on error, see Appeal § 467.
Applicability of instructions in trover, see Conversion §§ 41-43.
Applicablity of instructions on damages to issues and evidence, see also Damages § 382.
Necessity for instructions to conform to evidence and issues in ejectment, see also Ejectment ¶ 199.

§ 240. Irrelevant questions should not be submitted to the jury.—Lange v. Perley, 47 Mich. 352.

¶ 241. Instructions to the jury outside of the issues made by the pleadings are improper.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387.

¶ 242. Where, in a suit to recover for services rendered and expenses incurred in negotiating a loan and perfecting the applicant's title, each party relies upon the existence of an express contract, and the sole question of fact is as to its terms, it is not error for the court to refuse to submit to the jury the question of plaintiff's rights under an implied contract.—Swarthout v. Lucas, 101 Mich. 609.

¶ 243. Although an oral charge might have been criticized as referring to matters not in the case, yet where it was a simple issue and the court submitted the issue involved clearly, it will not warrant a reversal.—Reiser v. Portere, 106 Mich. 102.

¶ 244. In an action where title to certain mining property is in issue, it is not misleading to instruct the jury that the fact that the title was in the name of one person was a circumstance to be considered, but not controlling, "for we know that frequently titles to mining property are taken by one person and held by him in trust for the others," where it appeared in the record that others were interested in the property in question, though the title was in one only.—Shouldice v. McLeod's Estate, 130 Mich. 444.

¶ 245. It is not error to refuse to charge that no recovery can be had on a certain count to which a demurrer had been sustained, where there was no occasion for reference to the several counts and the issue was clearly stated to the jury without such reference.—City of Battle Creek v. Haak, 139 Mich. 514.

¶ 246. Where one of the issues of fact in a case is the consent or nonconsent of a stockholder to an agreement made by the other stockholders in a corporation, and there is testimony tending to support both sides of the issue, an instruction on that subject should call attention to both classes of testimony.—Wilbur v. Stoepel, 82 Mich. 344.

¶ 247. A jury is not to be instructed to find what the undisputed facts show when there are other facts to be considered in connection with them.—Morris v. Osterhout, 55 Mich. 262.

¶ 248. Instructions phrased, "I charge you, if you should find from all the evidence in the case, and the circumstances surrounding the same," etc., are objectionable as suggesting that surrounding circumstances in addition to the evidence might be considered.—Derham v. Derham, 125 Mich. 109.

¶ 249. An instruction that the sole question for the jury to determine was the truth of plaintiff's story and that if they were not satisfied that it was substantially correct there was no other testimony in the case upon which a verdict could be based in his favor, was improper, as involving the dangerous consequences of a difference of opinion regarding such testimony; the proper method is to point out what was necessary to be proven to justify a verdict.—Hastings v. Boland, 136 Mich. 240.

¶ 251. In an action on an account it was proper for the court to instruct the jury that there was no dispute as to the amount earned on certain contracts but there was a dispute as to whether it had been paid, although there was in evidence a receipted statement upon which payment was admitted, including these items in dispute.—Snyder v. Patton & Gibson Co., 143 Mich. 350.

§ 43. Applicability to cause of action and issues.

See also ante § 42.

Instructions erroneous as ignoring or assuming issues, see post § 48.

¶ 252. It is error to submit to a jury a question based on a cause of action not counted on; as where action was brought for diverting a stream of water, and the question was whether defendant had not diminished its flow by using it for his own farming purposes.—Pettibone v. Smith, 37 Mich. 579.

¶ 253. In an action for personal injuries to a brakeman declared to have been caused by his getting his foot caught between a bolt projecting through the rail and a spike driven in the tie, it is erroneous to instruct that he may recover if the injury was caused by a coupler being out of repair.—Culver v. South Haven & E. R. Co., 138 Mich. 443.

¶ 254. Where the evidence tends to show a promise by way of guaranty, to make good the obligation of others, it is error to submit the case to the jury as one of an absolute and original promise to pay.—Hall v. Woodin, 35 Mich. 67.

¶ 255. Where in an action for wages the ownership of the mill in which plaintiff was employed was not in question, it is proper to refuse an instruction that the jury should consider all the evidence touching the ownership of the mill.—Bonner v. Runals, 76 Mich. 136.

¶ 256. The lessee of a farm made a settlement with his lessor in which he conveyed to him his undivided interest in certain personal property. The lessor immediately sold the personal property to the lessee's wife, giving her also a lease of the farm; and the husband gave him back a mortgage upon his own interest in the crops which, under the first lease, he and the lessor were to divide equally. Creditors of the husband levied upon the crops grown while the wife held the lease, and upon some of the personal property transferred to her, and she brought replevin against the sheriff, who claimed that the transfers of personal property were void as against creditors. But the validity of the mortgage was not questioned, though in submitting the case to the jury it was left for that body to pass upon, and their verdict was for the defendant. Held error.—Richardson v. Coddington, 45 Mich. 338.

¶ 257. Where a man brings replevin in his own name and as owner for a pony sold by his minor daughter, and does not sue in her behalf as guardian or next friend, it is error to treat the case, in charging the jury, as one of a sale by an infant, conveying no title.—Ash v. Mathes, 52 Mich. 615.

Argumentativeness of charge stating diverse theories, see ante ¶ 35.

Necessity of requesting charges presenting party's theory, see ante § 21.

Duty of court to give proper requests, see ante § 26.

Refusal of abstract or inapplicable requests as to theories or claims, see ante § 31.

Instructions favorable to one party's theories or claims, see post § 65.

Invading jury province by emphasizing theories or claims, see post § 77.

Province of judge and jury as to theories of expert witnesses, see post ¶ 377.

Submitting question of license or sale where transaction a license as a matter of law, see post ¶ 346.

¶ 258. Each party is entitled to have a charge applicable to his theory of the case if there is evidence supporting it, and to have the evidence submitted to the jury on that theory.—Comstock v. Norton, 36 Mich. 277; Fletcher v. Bradford, 45 Mich. 349; Winchester v. King, 46 Mich. 102; Ludlow v. Pearl's Estate, 55 Mich. 312; Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

¶ 259. A party is entitled to have specific charges upon the law applicable to each of the various hypotheses or combinations of facts which the jury might legitimately find from the evidence, and which have not been covered by other instructions.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 260. If a party's theory of the case is supported by testimony he is entitled to have it submitted to the jury with proper instructions in relation to the law should the testimony preponderate in favor of such theory.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656.

¶ 261. Where there is testimony tending to support the theory upon which a party has tried his case, it is error to refuse to instruct the jury upon such theory, unless the instruction asked for is covered by the general charge.—O'Callaghan v. Boeing, 72 Mich. 669; Cooper v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 374.

¶ 262. Where there is evidence tending to support a party's claim the case should be submitted on his theory as well as upon the theory of his opponent.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17; Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151.

¶ 263. Where there is evidence tending to support a party's claim, the case should be submitted upon his theory as well as upon that of his opponent.—American Cushman Telephone Co. v. Noble, 98 Mich. 67.

¶ 264. Where, in an action against a street railway company, plaintiff testifies that the injury complained of was received while she was alighting from one of the defendant's cars, by stepping upon a ridge of earth which defendant had negligently suffered to remain in close proximity to the track, and defendant contends, and introduces evidence tending to show that the accident was caused by some one stepping upon plaintiff's dress as she was in the act of alighting from the car, thereby throwing her to the ground, it is error to refuse to instruct the jury, at defendant's request, that if it finds that the contention of defendant is correct plaintiff cannot recover; and the error is not cured by a general instruction that if the jury finds that the injury was caused by accident or misadventure, without fault of either party, there can be no recovery.—Poole v. Consolidated St. R. Co., 100 Mich. 379.

¶ 265. Where there was a conflict of testimony as to whether an assignment to a creditor to satisfy himself and pay over the surplus included or did not include an old debt then partly represented by a note, and the assignee testified that the note was to be renewed if possible, otherwise was to be paid, that new notes were given, that thereafter the bank refused to renew them; it was error misleading to the jury for the court to charge on the duty of the assignee to wait until maturity "if he could have renewed that paper * * * easier" in that way, the result being to convey to the jury the idea that the assignee was bound to await maturity, though his theory was that he was entitled to apply the money realized on the order assigned to the payment of that note. —Valin v. McKerreghan, 104 Mich. 213.

¶ 266. It is proper for the court to tell the jury what the theory of each party is, and that his evidence tends to support it.—Rogers v. Ferris, 107 Mich. 126.

¶ 267. It is not error for the court to state the theories or claims of the respective parties, leaving it to the jury to say whether the claims were proven by evidence adduced. —Beecher v. Ferris, 124 Mich. 9.

¶ 268. A party is entitled to a specific charge to the jury, hypothetically stated, of his theory of the case when it is supported by evidence, even though the court may have correctly charged upon the general proposition of law applicable to the case.—Slater v. Walter, 148 Mich. 650.

¶ 269. Plaintiff sued for money due him under a contract for towing logs. Defendant claimed a recoupment for a certain lot of logs lost by the breaking of plaintiff's boom. The court instructed the jury that plaintiff would be excused for the loss if the boom broke in a great cyclone, or the like, when plaintiff had set up no such excuse. Held, the instruction was erroneous.—McLean v. Sandusky Lumber & Box Co., 160 Mich. 324.

¶ 270. Each party to an action has the right to have the case submitted to the jury on his theory, and a correct charge which submits these conflicting theories to the jury should be approved.—Baker v. Kamantowsky, 188 Mich. 569.

¶ 271. Where the court, after finishing his charge to the jury, asks counsel if there is anything he has overlooked, and there are only two theories of the case, plaintiff's and defendant's, and plaintiff's theory has been presented to the jury, and defendant's counsel orally requests that his theory of the case be presented to the jury, the court should either at once instruct the jury as to defendant's theory or give counsel time to present a written request, if that is desired.—Harnau v. Haight, 189 Mich. 600, 13 N. C. C. A. 566.

¶ 273. A charge that "If you believe the plaintiff's side of the case and the plaintiff's witnesses, taking them in sides now, then the plaintiff has made out his case" and a similar statement with reference to defendant's side, does not constitute reversible error where the issue is squarely raised and each side of it supported by its witnesses.—Wilder v. Sanche, 120 Mich. 345.

¶ 274. An instruction that "if you believe the plaintiff's side of the case and the plaintiff's witnesses, taking them in sides now, then the plaintiff has made out a case," is prejudicial and erroneous, where many of the facts testified to by plaintiff might be true, and yet no liability exist.—Henderson v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 116 Mich. 368.

¶ 276. An instruction based upon a theory not asserted by either party, and not supported by any evidence, is erroneous.—Iler v. Baker, 82 Mich. 226.

¶ 277. It is error for the court to submit a case to the jury upon a theory entirely different from that claimed in the declaration and upon which the case has been tried.—Reed v. Gould, 93 Mich. 359.

¶ 278. A cause should not be submitted to a jury upon a theory not germane to the pleadings, or merely on account of certain equitable considerations which the trial may have disclosed.—Reed v. Gould, 93 Mich. 359.

¶ 279. Instructions to the jury which submit to their consideration a hypothesis different from that maintained by either side to wit, the invalidity of a contract under the statute of frauds where one side claimed an original promise and the other denied any promise at all, and which is not supported by the evidence are misleading and erroneous. —Comstock v. Norton, 36 Mich. 277.

See also post §§ 49, 75.

¶ 280. The charge cannot allow the jury to consider a theory that is unsupported by testimony.—Comstock v. Norton, 36 Mich. 278; Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 60 Mich. 267; Iler v. Baker, 82 Mich. 226; Schneider v. C. H. Little Co., 200 Mich. 361.

¶ 281. Judgment must be reversed for the error of the judge in submitting the case to the jury upon a theory which the evidence does not justify.—Nelson v. Dutton, 51 Mich. 416.

¶ 282. There is no error in refusing to submit a party's theory of the case to the jury where the court holds, as a matter of law, that such party's theory is untenable.—Banks v. Strong, 197 Mich. 544.

¶ 283. In the absence of evidence tending to show that a bill of sale, under which plaintiff in replevin claimed the property, was taken as security, and not as an absolute transfer of the property, in payment of a debt due the vendee, as claimed by the plaintiff, a request to charge based upon that theory may properly be refused.—Partlow v. Swigart, 90 Mich. 61.

See also ante ¶ 257, post ¶ 448.

Necessity of requesting instructions presenting theories, claims and defenses, see ante §§ 21, 22.

Assuming truth of uncontested facts, see post §§ 55, 74.

Refusal of requests assuming claims or theories, see ante § 35.

¶ 284. In charging the jury in an action for fatal negligence, it is improper for the judge to abandon the grounds relied on in the declaration and direct their attention to other considerations as tending to support the action.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 488.

¶ 285. An instruction that if a given state of facts is found by the jury plaintiff is entitled to a verdict is erroneous if it ignores defendant's theory, which is supported by his testimony and which is a complete defense if accepted by the jury.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656.

¶ 286. Where suit is brought for the value of goods delivered under a contract, a charge which ignores the plaintiff's showing that he had fully performed his obligations, except in certain respects assented to by defendants, and which assumes that he had not made a full performance, is misleading and erroneous.—McKay v. Evans, 48 Mich. 597.

¶ 288. An action for lumber sold was defended upon the ground that plaintiff and another, as copartners, had agreed to furnish the lumber and build a house for defendant for a gross sum, which had been paid. Held, that it was proper to refuse an instruction that plaintiff was entitled to recover if defendant bargained for the lumber, and if it was used in his house, and had not been paid for, as the request eliminated defendant's theory.—Reiser v. Portere, 106 Mich. 102.

¶ 289. A charge cannot be said to have excluded defendant's theory where seven of his nine requests were given (error not being assigned upon the refusal to give the other two), and where one of those given was that if the jury believed defendant's testimony and that of his witnesses verdict must be for him.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 290. The refusal of the court to present defendant's theory of the case after he has finished his charge in which he has presented plaintiff's theory and has asked counsel if there is anything that he has overlooked and is then requested by defendant's counsel to present defendant's theory, is error, especially when the court, in reply to counsel, states to the jury that he has charged them fully on the law on the case.—Harnau v. Haight, 189 Mich. 600, 13 N. C. C. A. 566.

¶ 292. In a suit against a street-railway company for injuries sustained by reason of the defective condition of the flooring of the car, where plaintiff testified that the floor was broken and rotten, an instruction that "it is not claimed by plaintiff or any of her witnesses that the floor was broken" is error, although her cross-examination tended to shake her own testimony on this point, and none of the five witnesses who testified saw any broken floor.—Plefka v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 53.

case to the jury, without stating defendant's claim in connection therewith, was not error where the court subsequently referred to defendant's claims.—Chase v. Ainsworth, 135 Mich. 119.

¶ 294. It is not prejudicial error for a judge to state to the jury the claims of one party, if there is testimony tending to support such claims.—Schweyer v. Jones, 152 Mich. 241.

¶ 295. It is not error for the court to state to the jury, in his charge, the claim of the plaintiff, when supported by the evidence, notwithstanding that it is disputed.—Ranta v. Newport Min. Co., 180 Mich. 459.

§ 48. Ignoring or assuming part of issues.

Refusal of requests ignoring evidence, see ante § 34.
Necessity that instructions conform to issues, see ante § 43.
Invasion of jury province by assumption of facts, see post V, B.

¶ 296. Error cannot be predicated upon a statement to the jury that the only issue in the case was one of defective machinery, where a reading of the entire charge makes it clear that the jury could not have understood that they should disregard any of the claims made by defendant.—Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 137 Mich. 279.

¶ 297. The charge of the court in an action for assault and battery and malicious prosecution, that the action was founded upon certain occurrences taking place at or about the time alleged in plaintiff's declaration, which had been detailed to the jury on the one hand by the plaintiff, and on the other hand by defendant and certain witnesses, and that plaintiff's right to recover depended upon whether plaintiff's version of that transaction was true, or that of defendant and his witnesses, was sustained; since the only occurrences testified to by these witnesses were connected with the assault and battery, and the jury had no right to understand the court to be referring to anything concerning the malicious prosecution, and plaintiff's testimony relative thereto.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

¶ 298. A request to charge the jury that plaintiff is entitled to damages for assault and battery and imprisonment, and that, it being presumed that such assault and battery were unlawful, the burden of proof was upon defendant to justify such acts, was properly refused, in an action for assault and battery, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, since such request was predicated upon an admission by the defendant of assault and battery and imprisonment, not justified by the record.—Lansky v. Prettyman, 140 Mich. 40.

Necessity that requests conform to issues and evidence, see ante § 29 et seq.
Refusal of abstract and irrelevant requests, see ante § 31.
Refusal of requests which ignore evidence, see ante § 34.
Evidence to support theories and claims, see ante § 46.
Invasion of jury province by singling out facts, see post § 76.
Charging upon failure of proof, see post § 96.
Restricting evidence to purpose for which admitted, see post § 95.
Charges permitting jurymen to apply their general experience and knowledge, see post § 97.
Cautionary instructions against statements of counsel, see post § 98.

¶ 299. A hypothetical charge, which is entirely unsupported by any evidence in the case, is error.—Hewitt v. Begole, 22 Mich. 31; Josselyn v. Bishop, 25 Mich. 397; Chadwick v. Butler, 28 Mich. 349; Moynahan v. Connor, 30 Mich. 136.

¶ 300. Charges unwarranted by or in conflict with the testimony are erroneous.—Dodge v. Brown, 22 Mich. 446; Leslie v. Smith, 32 Mich. 64; Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85; Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 301. A charge that has no testimony to support the theory on which it is based is error.—Folkerts v. Standish, 55 Mich. 463.

¶ 302. An instruction not warranted by the evidence is erroneous.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306; Wright v. Senn's Estate, 85 Mich. 191; Hauser v. Goebel Brewing Co., 199 Mich. 168.

¶ 303. A question of fact is not to be submitted to a jury if there is no evidence bearing on it.—Byles v. Township of Golden, 52 Mich. 612.

¶ 304. It is error to charge the rule of application of payments and credits as determinative of the title to chattels, where on the evidence the question is whether according to terms of a contract they had been paid for and passed, and the contract reserved title and left open the manner of payment, and where the accounts were mere accounts of advances made under the contract.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165.

¶ 305. A charge as to the effect of a contract is erroneous where there is no evidence of such contract.—Locke v. Priestly Express Wagon & Sleigh Co., 71 Mich. 263.

dence of any such possession as will justify a recovery, it is error for the court to leave the question of possession to the jury.—Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 Mich. 1.

¶ 307. A case was submitted on the testimony of the parties to the transaction involved, one testifying in person, while the testimony of the other, as given upon a former trial, was read in his absence. These parties were wife and husband. The judge charged the jury that they might take into account the appearance of the witnesses and their habits and character, and he called attention to the wife's testimony as to her husband's habits of drinking and gambling. The record on error purported to contain all the testimony, but disclosed none on this point. Held, that the charge was prejudicial and erroneous.—Bulen v. Granger, 63 Mich. 311.

¶ 308. Where the testimony upon one of the questions in a case varies materially, an instruction that it does not vary much is misleading.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 309. An instruction that the jury may consider, as bearing upon the credibility of a witness, the fact that "something has been said about his having been interfered with in some manner by the police for alleged ill-treatment of his wife," is error requiring reversal where there is no evidence upon which to base the remark.—Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1.

¶ 310. In an action to recover the value of goods fraudulently purchased it is error to instruct the jury in regard to the defendant's exemptions where there is no evidence whatever with reference to that question.—Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Russo, 125 Mich. 306.

¶ 311. An instruction in an action on a promissory note that if a certain contract was made it would constitute a set-off, is error where there is no evidence upon which to base such instruction.—June v. Labadie, 132 Mich. 135.

¶ 312. A charge that "defendant admits" certain matters is justified where supported by the testimony of his witnesses though defendant himself was not present at the trial. —Morin v. Robarge, 132 Mich. 337.

¶ 313. Instructions as to the intent of a grantor as to the delivery of a deed should not be given in an action of ejectment, where the person relying on the conveyance fails to establish a delivery.—Broffee v. LeFils, 183 Mich. 100.

§ 50. Charging upon matters not in evidence.

Refusal of requests not supported by evidence, see ante § 31.

Charge construed as not to authorize consideration of surrounding circumstances, see ante ¶ 248.

Submitting to jury matters that are proved or uncontested, see post § 55.

Charges assuming facts not supported by evidence, see post § 72.

Charge not erroneous as permitting jury to consider probabilities not founded on the evidence, see post ¶ 536.

¶ 314. The jury must not be instructed upon a point concerning which no evidence has been introduced.—Hudnut v. Gardner, 59 Mich. 341.

¶ 315. It is improper for the court to make before the jury a suggestion or conjecture based upon something of which there is no evidence in the case.—Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 61.

¶ 316. Instructions based upon declarations by plaintiff of which no evidence was given on the trial are properly refused.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

¶ 317. An instruction that the jury may find a claimed fact, of which no evidence is produced from which it can legally be inferred, is erroneous.—Bonner v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 313.

¶ 318. The court should not submit to the jury a matter which is unsupported by any evidence.—Fourth Nat. Bank v. Olney, 63 Mich. 58.

¶ 319. An instruction is erroneous which leaves the jury to determine whether a joint defendant had "approved or defended" a trespass if there was no testimony to that effect and defendants denied its commission.—Pigott v. Lilly, 55 Mich. 150.

¶ 320. In an action by a factory employee for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of his slipping against a swinging table used to carry poles against a saw, which passed through a slit in the table, and disengaging a worn notched lever fitting in the back of the table and holding it away from the saw when not in use, and falling on the saw, an instruction to the effect that the jury must determine whether it was a reasonably safe machine and would stand the jar ordinarily put upon it when in use, and if so, defendant had fulfilled his duty, but that, if plaintiff, when he slipped, extraordinarily jarred the machine beyond what it would receive in ordinary use, there could be no recovery, held erroneous where there is no evidence that the force applied when plaintiff struck the table was unusual.—Johnston v. Elm Cooperage Co., 188 Mich. 117.

¶ 321. In an action to recover on notes given for the purchase price of an automatic pop corn machine, an instruction on damages that if the machine was not as represented defendant could recover the amount paid, held to be erroneous where there was no evidence of rescission of the contract, and the only evidence of defendant's damages which he sought to recoup was that the machine was worthless and he had set it aside.—Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Co. v. Cataldo, 199 Mich. 265.

¶ 322. In an action for damages by negligence a charge permitting the jury to consider the question whether plaintiff did not contribute thereto is error where there is no proof that he did not exercise due care.—Brower v. Edson, 47 Mich. 91.

¶ 323. Where there was no evidence to call for it, it was improper to charge that if a vendor accepts, negotiates and cashes a check which purports on its face to be in full payment for the merchandise sold, he, in effect, receipts in full for the price.—Peter v. Thickstun, 51 Mich. 589.

¶ 324. Where no guaranty is counted on and there is no evidence of one it is error to charge that a third person's statement that a note offered by a purchaser is as good as money or as good as gold is not a guaranty of its collection; and if the vendor finds it worthless, he is not bound to take measures to enforce it against the maker before proceeding against the person who answered for it.—Taylor v. Soper, 53 Mich. 96.

¶ 325. In libel for imputing to plaintiff sheriff intentional neglect to prevent a Sunday ball game in violation of law after he had been informed that it was planned and publicly announced, a charge on the duty of the sheriff in case of "a mere rumor" of an intended offense is inapplicable to the evidence.—Scougale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 311.

¶ 326. Where immaterial evidence has been admitted without objection, neither party can claim to have the jury instructed to regard it for any purpose.—Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49.

§ 52. ——Testimony excluded or stricken out.

Necessity of requesting charges against consideration of withdrawn or excluded evidence, see ante § 21.

¶ 327. It is error to give an instruction, where its only basis is stricken testimony.—Township School Dist. of Wakefield v. MacRae, 198 Mich. 693.

¶ 328. The fact that evidence has been excluded does not of itself render erroneous a charge submitting to the jury the question calling for such evidence; subsequent evidence may have called for such a charge, and, if not, exception should be taken to the charge.—Bolton v. Riddle, 35 Mich. 13.

See also ante ¶ 247.

Refusal of requests ignoring evidence, see ante § 34.

¶ 329. For the trial judge, in an action for a personal injury, to instruct the jury practically to the effect that plaintiff has not sustained serious injury, his testimony to the contrary notwithstanding, is error requiring reversal.—Blumeno v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 101 Mich. 325.

¶ 330. In a father's action for damages caused by selling liquors to his minor son, it is error, where there is ample testimony, aside from that of the son, to support the declaration, to charge that if the jury discredited the son verdict must be for defendant.—Sterling v. Callahan, 94 Mich. 536.

¶ 331. Where an instruction refers to the evidence on a disputed point, it should carefully state all the evidence on both sides, and a request calling attention to only a part of the evidence is faulty, and may be refused.—MacKinnon Boiler & Machine Co. v. Central Michigan Land Co., 156 Mich. 11.

V. INVADING JURY PROVINCE OR SUBMITTING IMPROPER MATTERS.

A. IN GENERAL; INSTRUCTIONS AS TO WEIGHT OR CREDIBILITY.

Refusal of requests invading province of jury, see ante § 32.

Relative functions of judge and jury, see ante § 3 and Trial, VI.

Duty to instruct only as to law of the case, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14573.

Discretion in respect to style of charge, see ante § 8.

¶ 332. A court is not obliged to so charge a jury as to confine them to the consideration of the testimony of one witness rather than of another.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

¶ 333. It is within the discretion of the circuit judge to refer in his charge to the testimony, so long as he does not expressly or impliedly voice his opinion upon questions of fact, or give undue prominence to any fact or circumstance.—Hanaw v. Jackson Patriot Co., 98 Mich. 506.

¶ 334. Where the proof of loss states that one cause of the death of the insured was a self-inflicted wound, it is not error to refuse to instruct that the verdict must be for the company unless the jury finds such statement untrue, and since to do so might be to call undue attention to the statement, the matter rests in the discretion of the court.—Ferris v. Loyal Americans of the Republic, 152 Mich. 314.

¶ 335. Although it is not error to call attention to the testimony of a particular witness, and to give instructions framed in such language as to be in all other respects unobjectionable, neither party has the right to insist that this course be taken.—Heddle v. City Electric R. Co., 112 Mich. 547.

§ 55. Submitting matters that are proved or uncontested.

Relative functions of judge and jury, see ante § 2.

¶ 336. When a fact is admitted, or if it is disputed and there is no conflict of evidence, the question is one of law, upon which direct instruction ought to be given.—Wisner v. Davenport, 5 Mich. 501.

¶ 337. Where all the evidence on both sides tends clearly to prove a fact, such fact may, and generally should be, assumed as proved; in such case a charge to the jury intimating that it is competent for them to find either way is error.—Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189.

¶ 338. Uncontested facts should not be treated as open questions in requesting charges and giving instructions.—Medina Tp. v. Perkins, 48 Mich. 67.

¶ 339. It is erroneous to direct the attention of the jury to undisputed facts as if they were doubtful.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104.

¶ 340. It is error to submit as open questions to the jury matters that are not disputed or upon which the testimony is not conflicting.—Lange v. Perley, 47 Mich. 352; Corbett v. Spencer, 63 Mich. 731.

¶ 341. Where the facts are unquestioned from which a rule of law is to be deduced, the judge cannot leave it to the jury to deduce the rule, but must do it himself, and give them positive instructions upon the facts.—Stearns v. Vincent, 50 Mich. 209.

¶ 342. Where the testimony as to a fact is not disputed, the jury should be instructed to find it accordingly.—Dondero v. Frumveller, 61 Mich. 440.

¶ 343. A court cannot properly submit to a jury facts on which the testimony is all one way.—Hunt v. Supreme Council of the Order of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

¶ 344. Where the testimony on both sides agrees in establishing a right in a party to sell property in dispute, it should not be left to the jury as an open question.—Gavigan v. Evans, 45 Mich. 597.

¶ 345. When the date of a transaction is positively fixed by the evidence of one who was a party to it, the jury cannot be permitted to guess or surmise or conjecture that the transaction took place at another time from the testimony of one who was present, but who cannot tell when it occurred.—Wierengo v. American Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 621.

§ 56. Leaving questions of law to jury.

Leaving to jury questions and issues unsupported by evidence, see ante § 49.

Submitting matters as to which no dispute exists, see ante § 55.

¶ 346. A charge leaving the jury to find either a license or a sale from a transaction which in law can only be regarded as a license is error.—Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153.

¶ 347. A charge which leaves it to the jury's knowledge of such contracts to "do what is right" substantially makes the jury judges of the law as well as the facts is erroneous.—George W. Roby Lumber Co. v. Gray, 73 Mich. 356.

¶ 348. The trial court should point out specifically, and direct the jury to disregard, evidence which it concludes has been admitted erroneously; and a general instruction to disregard such of the evidence as the jury finds to be "rubbish," having no bearing upon the issue, is error since it leaves to the jury the question of what evidence was competent and what not competent.—Colby v. Portman, 115 Mich. 95.

¶ 349. The city of Saginaw was incorporated with territory which constituted about one-fourth of school district No. 1 of the township of Saginaw. The officers of the district being within the city thereafter assumed to be officers of school district No. 1 of the city of Saginaw, and brought suit in that name to recover moneys levied and collected for said school district No. 1 of the township of Saginaw, claiming an identity of corporate existence. Held, that it was error to submit to the jury the question of identity, it being a question not of fact but of law.—Township of Saginaw v. Saginaw School Dist. No. 1, 9 Mich. 541.

¶ 350. There was nothing improper in the court instructing the jury that they were to determine whether the books kept by plaintiff were kept in a proper condition, where, in assumpsit by a surviving partner for services rendered by the firm, such books had been introduced in evidence by plaintiff.—O'Connell v. Schwanabeck, 76 Mich. 517.

§ 57. On requisites and degree of proof.

Instructions on weight and effect of evidence, see post § 58.

Instructions as to burden of proof, see post § 81.

Necessity of charging as to sufficiency and degree of proof, see post § 82 et seq.

¶ 351. It is error for the trial court to charge the jury, respecting testimony which showed that plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care, that such "testimony must be such as to drive you to that conclusion—to prevent your arriving at any other conclusion."—Mynning v. Detroit, Lansing & N. R. Co., 67 Mich. 677.

General law as to weight and sufficiency of evidence, see Evidence, X.
Peremptory or binding charge for one party, see Directing Verdict, I.
Presumption on error that proofs warranted charge or refusal, see Appeal §§ 376, 377.

¶ 352. A trial judge may instruct the jury as to the weight that belongs to different classes of evidence, but not as to that of specific testimony or particular witnesses. Nor can he state whether evidence is sufficient to prove a fact, except where he merely gives a rule of law that fixes what is required.—Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

¶ 353. It is error to instruct the jury as to what the evidence of a witness amounts to; it is their business to determine its effect.—Baird v. Randall, 58 Mich. 175.

¶ 355. It is proper to refuse a request for an instruction as to what the evidence shows; that would invade the jury's province.—Hill v. Graham, 72 Mich. 659.

¶ 356. It is error for the court, in charging the jury in a case involving the proper performance of services by an attorney, to express the opinion that the jury is not warranted by the testimony in saying that plaintiff was in no way negligent in such performance.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 357. Where certain facts, if established, would entitle plaintiff to recover, an instruction, that if the jury find the testimony of such facts to be true plaintiff can recover, is not erroneous as determining the sufficiency of the evidence.—Partridge v. Sterling, 79 Mich. 302.

¶ 358. It is not proper to instruct the jury as to the weight to be given to particular testimony, or to the testimony of a particular witness.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521.

¶ 360. In an attorney's action for compensation, it is error, as tending to prejudice defendant's rights, for the court in speaking of plaintiff's duty to defendant to say to the jury "now, an attorney is obliged to do the very best he can. In this case here it has been done. I don't think you are warranted by the testimony in saying that plaintiff was in any way negligent."—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 361. In an action for personal injuries, it is not an invasion of the province of the jury for the court to say to the jury "there is no great physical injury proved here to this man at all," where it is clear from the whole charge that the judge referred to the external evidence of injury and that the jury would so understand it.—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

¶ 362. Charge set forth and held, under the circumstances, not to take the case from the jury by the statement that there was sufficient proof before them to establish the title to the property in the plaintiff.—Raynor v. Norton, 31 Mich. 210.

¶ 363. The jury must not be instructed to follow the findings of the supreme court as precedents in questions of fact, even in cases precisely analogous.—Richards v. Fuller, 38 Mich. 653; Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 Mich. 1.

Refusal of improper instructions as to tendency and effect of evidence, see ante § 32.

Charging upon inferences to be drawn from evidence, see post § 62.

¶ 364. A court is not to instruct the jury as to what certain statements tend to prove, or as to the weight they should give to particular testimony.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104.

¶ 365. Where it is a material question whether a party had notice of a certain fact, it is not proper, in a contest upon the facts, for the court to charge that there was no evidence tending to show such notice, unless in a case free from doubt.—Hayes v. Homer, 36 Mich. 374.

¶ 366. Testimony is admitted as tending to establish a case or a defense, and it is therefore no error to charge the jury that it tends to do so.—Campau v. Langley, 39 Mich. 451.

¶ 367. A trial judge should advise the jury as to the bearing of the evidence upon any point in the case which may in any view be controlling.—De Mill v. Moffat, 45 Mich. 410.

¶ 368. It is proper for the court to state to the jury for what purpose certain testimony was received, but it is not proper to say to them, after the evidence is in, what the testimony tends to prove, without submitting to them at the same time the question of its credibility.—Davis v. Gerber, 69 Mich. 246.

¶ 369. When the testimony upon a particular point is conflicting, the trial judge cannot give his opinion as to what it tends to prove; that is exclusively for the jury.—Wessels v. Beeman, 87 Mich. 481.

¶ 370. In replevin of property which plaintiff claimed title to, pursuant to an exchange, where there was dispute as to whether a change of property had been effected, the statement in the charge that if the jury found that certain things were done, the doing thereof constituted "strong evidence" that there was an exchange of title, was not error, where under the evidence it would have been proper to charge that, if the defendant turned the property over to plaintiff with the intent to pass the title, the title did pass.—Pratt v. Wickham, 133 Mich. 356.

Charge that "defendant admits" certain matters justified by testimony, see ante ¶ 312.

Assuming the truth of facts admitted or uncontested, see post § 74.

Admissions and declarations as evidence, see Evidence, VII.

¶ 371. Where a wife's right to property is derived under a contract with her husband, and the contract is contested on the ground of fraud, any acts or declarations of his tending to show the fraudulent nature of the contract, and brought to the wife's knowledge, are evidence against her; hence a charge that what he said was of no consequence as affecting her rights was properly refused unless qualified.—Wright v. Towle, 67 Mich. 255.

¶ 372. It is not error to instruct the jury, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by stepping into a hole in the sidewalk, that evidence of statements made by plaintiff relating to the place, occasion and extent of his injury should be carefully scrutinized because of the fact that it is easy to be mistaken as to words and statements of another which are repeated a long time afterward; but such instruction should be given with care lest it reflect an opinion or lead to denying such testimony its proper weight.—Hart v. Village of New Haven, 130 Mich. 181.

¶ 373. Where, in an action for a personal injury, defendants introduce evidence tending to show a compromise of plaintiff's claim and an admission of blame, which plaintiff denies, and plaintiff's counsel, in his argument to the jury, claims that the interview had with defendants about the matter was evidence that defendants had perpetrated the wrong complained of, it is error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury, at defendants' request, that such proposed compromise should not be considered by them as an acknowledgment of any liability on the part of defendants.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345.

General law as to expert or opinion evidence, see Evidence, VI.

¶ 374. The testimony of experts is to be judged like that of any other witnesses, and is for the jury to weigh; hence it was proper to refuse a request to charge that it was uncertain and unreliable.—Rivard v. Rivard, 109 Mich. 98.

¶ 375. It is proper for the trial court to instruct that the testimony of expert witnesses should be given the same consideration, everything else being equal, as that of any other witness.—Anthony v. Cass County Home Tel. Co., 165 Mich. 388.

¶ 376. The opinions of a number of business men as to whether the handwriting of a note had been so altered as to raise the amount was allowed to go to the jury with the remark by the trial judge that if such evidence had been objected to he would have excluded it; that the jury might consider it, but that the witnesses had no better means of knowing when the disputed letter and figures were written than themselves. The record did not show that the witnesses were any better qualified than the jury to judge on mere inspection that an alteration had been made. Held, that there was no error in the instruction.—Ives v. Leonard, 50 Mich. 296.

¶ 377. It is the province of the jury to determine which theory of opposing expert witnesses is the true one.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 84 Mich. 676.

¶ 378. An instruction that the jury is not bound to accept as true the opinions of experts upon a particular point when opposed to the testimony of witnesses claiming to have actual knowledge of the facts, held proper, where, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a fall upon a defective sidewalk, several physicians testified that the disability existed previous to the accident, and that the only effect thereof was an aggravation of the former condition, while plaintiff and other witnesses gave plain and unequivocal testimony to the contrary.—Olson v. Village of Manistique, 110 Mich. 656.

¶ 379. An instruction that opinion testimony is not testimony as to facts is not prejudicial error where the court instructs the jury that it is to give to it such weight as it thinks it is reasonably entitled to, and is to accept the opinion seeming to be the more reasonable.—Hull v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 682.

¶ 380. In an action to recover compensation for legal services, where all the evidence as to value was given by experts called by plaintiff, an instruction, that the jury in such a case "has to depend in a measure" on such testimony, but allowing the jury to use the testimony so given as the basis of a verdict, if they are satisfied with it, was sufficient without expressly charging that it was not to be taken as "binding" as to the amount of plaintiff's compensation.—Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400.

Giving undue prominence or emphasis to evidence, see post § 76.

Inferences from failure to attend trial, testify or produce evidence, see post §§ 85, 86, 87.

¶ 381. A court cannot charge as a question of law upon inferences to be drawn from physical symptoms. If they are intelligible without medical testimony, they are for the jury and not for the court to interpret.—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

¶ 382. It is proper to charge that it may be inferred that a fence was moved at the instance of a party where the evidence is that in her presence and without her dissent her husband stated that he caused it to be moved.—Sanscrainte v. Torongo, 87 Mich. 69.

¶ 383. In an action against a druggist for the death of a child alleged to be due to negligence in furnishing a poisonous drug, instead of a harmless one, in filling an order for drugs for internal use, a requested instruction held properly refused because instructing the jury as to what inferences of fact they were to draw from the evidence.—Wood v. Standard Drug Co., 190 Mich. 654.

¶ 384. A request to charge, directing the jury that a presumption arising from a certain state of facts is "very strong," is properly refused as encroaching upon the province of the jury.—Wilcox v. Young, 66 Mich. 687.

¶ 385. It is not error in a legal sense for a court to point out important testimony to a jury so as to lead it to an understanding of its bearings, and in doing so comments upon the testimony may be necessary; but the jury should not be instructed as to the inferences of fact that they are to draw from the evidence.—Richards v. Fuller, 38 Mich. 653.

¶ 386. Where it was in issue whether a sale of wheat was according to a certain sample designated as 3, and such sale was not by "inspection grade," it was error to charge that a quotation 10 cents below the market by telegram must conclusively be presumed to refer to a grade lower than the market grade corresponding to the price; since the sample might have been of poorer quality.—Pitt v. Emmons, 92 Mich. 542.

Refusal of requests improperly assuming facts to be undisputed, see ante ¶ 187.

Charges assuming facts in question, see post § 72 et seq.

¶ 387. The court cannot charge the jury to find the issue in a particular manner when there is any evidence to prove the contrary. Clark v. McGraw, 14 Mich. 139.

¶ 388. When the evidence conflicts it is error in the court to decide the point in conflict and take it from the jury.—Brooke v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 Mich. 332.

—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217; Bedford v. Penny, 58 Mich. 424.

¶ 390. It is error for the court to state as a fact to the jury, in ruling upon evidence, that which is matter for the jury to pass upon.—Turner v. Phœnix Ins. Co. of Hartford, 55 Mich. 236.

¶ 391. It is not the court's province to decide disputed facts, or to draw inferences from such facts as are sworn to on either side.—Williams v. Shelden, 61 Mich. 311.

¶ 392. Requested instructions as to the payment of a note to a third person at the holder's direction operating to cancel it were properly refused, where the entire controversy as to payment was for the jury, who were fully informed as to the effect of the evidence, which was conflicting as to any such directions having been given.—Barnett v. Saloman, 118 Mich. 460.

¶ 393. In assumpsit for the balance due, testimony of the defendant that the account was settled between the parties by setting off an item of rent due him is sufficiently contradicted by plaintiff's testimony and defendant's admission of indebtedness and his declaration that he would charge no rent, so as to make it erroneous to compel the jury to credit the defendant's testimony alone.—Linsell v. Linsell, 138 Mich. 64.

Instructions upon weight of evidence, see also ante § 58 et seq.

¶ 394. Where the testimony as to a given fact is direct and positive on both sides and plainly irreconcilable, it is for the jury to determine which is right, and an instruction that "it indicates an entire misapprehension between the parties" as to the disputed question is erroneous.—Maltby v. Plummer, 71 Mich. 578.

¶ 395. For the trial judge to use in his charge to the jury language naturally tending to influence them against the allowance of plaintiff's claim, is error requiring reversal, if it is possible for the jury to suppose such language was used to show that it is doubtful whether the arrangement plaintiff claims was ever made.—Raymond v. Woolfenden's Estate, 99 Mich. 165.

¶ 396. The use by the trial judge in his charge of language that may lead the jury to infer he has little confidence in plaintiff's testimony is error where the instruction implies a duty on the jury's part to yield its judgment to that of the court.—Blumeno v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 101 Mich. 325.

¶ 397. An instruction which gives the jury distinctly to understand that the trial judge has a decided opinion that plaintiff is entitled to recover is objectionable.—Valin v. McKerreghan, 104 Mich. 213.

¶ 398. The better practice is for the court to frame instructions in such manner as not to imply a fixed opinion of its own upon the question either of the truthfulness of challenged statements by a witness or of the credit to be given to other parts of the testimony.—Heddle v. City Electric R. Co., 112 Mich. 547.

¶ 399. For the trial judge so to modify requests to charge bearing upon a controlling issue as to give the jury an impression of his personal opinion upon the subject is error requiring reversal.—Preston Nat. Bank v. Michigan Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 511.

¶ 400. An instruction in trover for the conversion of shares of stock, which clearly indicated to the jury the court's opinion of some of the important controverted facts, was prejudicial and therefore reversible error.—Hine v. Commercial Bank of Bay City, 119 Mich. 448.

¶ 401. In instructing the jury, the court is not required to point out the fact that two witnesses testified contrary to the plaintiff upon a certain matter, commenting upon conflict of evidence being the province of counsel.—Walter v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 85.

¶ 402. In the contest of a will for mental incapacity of the testatrix, it is erroneous to array the witnesses against each other in the charge to the jury where the greater part of the testimony might have been reconciled as relating to the testatrix's mental condition at different times.—Spencer v. Terry's Estate, 127 Mich. 420.

Necessity that instructions conform to theories and claims, see ante § 44.

Emphasizing theories and claims, see also post § 77.

Statements disclosing sympathy of judge, see post § 99.

¶ 403. The judge cannot say that the theory of one party is more plausible than that of the other.—Ludlow v. Pearl's Estate, 55 Mich. 312.

See also post § 89.

Refusal of requests invading jury province as to credibility, see ante § 32.

Charging as to weight of expert or opinion evidence, see ante § 61.

Charges reflecting upon witnesses, see post § 68.

Commenting upon inconsistency between present and former testimony, see post § 71.

Instructions singling out particular witnesses, see post § 78.
Instructing jury as to interest, bias and impeachment of witness, see post § 89.
Credibility of persons convicted of crime, see post § 90.
Credibility of witness who has sworn falsely, see post § 91.
Credibility of witnesses for jury, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 404. It is not an error that will require the reversal of a judgment for a circuit judge to indicate his views as to the credibility of a witness, if he expressly directs the jury to decide for themselves without reference to his views.—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

¶ 405. Where a public officer is witness in a case in which his own conduct is involved, it is improper in charging the jury to call attention to his high character, as tending in itself to establish his credibility.—Wisner v. Bardwell, 38 Mich. 278.

¶ 407. The presumption is that men are truthful, and the fact that one's character in that regard has never been discussed is cogent evidence of good reputation. It is error, therefore, to instruct the jury, in a case where a witness is sought to be impeached, that a person who testifies that he has never heard the witness's reputation for truth and veracity questioned at all is not entitled to the same consideration as one who testifies that he has heard it questioned and discussed among the neighbors of the witness.—Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1.

¶ 408. It is error to instruct the jury, "I charge you as a matter of law that you may believe the testimony of any witness or disregard the testimony of any witness"; since they are not justified in disregarding the testimony of an uncontradicted witness unless there is something apparent upon the record to cast discredit upon his testimony.—Preuschoff v. B. Stroh Brewing Co., 132 Mich. 107.

¶ 409. An instruction telling the jury that they "are to believe as jurors what you believe as men, and there is no rule of law that requires you to believe as jurors what you would not believe as men" was not erroneous in view of the preceding instruction as to the manner of weighing the testimony of witnesses.—Dodge v. Reynolds, 135 Mich. 692.

¶ 410. It is error in a personal injury action to instruct the jury that they must believe one side or the other "right through" where the jury might have found with the plaintiff upon the incidents of the accident and yet disbelieved his testimony as to the extent of the injuries.—Butler v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 138 Mich. 206.

¶ 412. An instruction in a civil action for rape, that an alibi is the best of defenses, but "it is your duty to examine such evidence carefully in determining its truth or falsity," was not objectionable as improperly suggesting a doubt of the credibilty of defendant's witnesses.—Harris v. Neal, 153 Mich. 57.

¶ 413. The credibility of testimony, even though substantially uncontradicted, is for the jury; and instructions that assume a conclusion which cannot be reached without discrediting testimony should be refused.—Dibble v. Northern Assur. Co., 70 Mich. 1.

¶ 414. An instruction in a case appealed from the justice court in which the court expressed his personal views as to the right of statutory appeal, although asking the jury to disregard testimony relative to proceedings in the justice court, but further stating that they had a right to take into consideration any claim made there of testimony given differing from that given in the circuit court in order to determine the reliance to be placed upon the testimony of the witnesses, held erroneous and prejudicial.—Salmer v. Hicks, 188 Mich. 391.

Comparative weight of expert and opinion evidence, see also ante § 61.
Instructions unduly emphasizing evidence, see post § 76.
Instructions giving undue prominence to theories and claims, see post § 77.
Charges as to numerical preponderance of witnesses, see post § 84.

¶ 415. The weight to be given to testimony is for the jury, and it is the jury's province to determine whether that of one witness overbalances that of another.—Kelly v. Emery, 75 Mich. 147.

¶ 416. An instruction which, after referring to the testimony of two witnesses upon a given point, informs the jury that the testimony of one of them "very materially modifies that of the other," is ground for reversal.—Kelly v. Emery, 75 Mich. 147.

¶ 417. While it is not prejudicial error for the court in his charge to state that he has known two witnesses to outswear ten because of their better knowledge of the facts, it is prejudicial to follow this by stating that the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries could best describe his injuries.—Butler v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 138 Mich. 206.

Discrediting remarks concerning witnesses, see post § 78.
Instructions singling out particular witnesses, see post § 78.

¶ 418. A trial judge has no right so to instruct the jury as to their being at liberty to disbelieve witnesses as to manifestly reflect upon a particular witness.—Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 355.

¶ 419. In a case involving an alleged but denied double payment to a witness for work, it is prejudicial error for the court in its charge to the jury to express doubt as to the honesty of the witness in receiving such double pay by the words, "what you may think of B. for receiving * * * double payment for his labor is another question."—Maltby v. Plummer, 71 Mich. 578.

¶ 420. In a civil action for assault and battery it is error for the court to comment unfavorably upon any testimony tending to prove any of the circumstances leading up to the assault.—Pokriefka v. Mackurat, 91 Mich. 399.

¶ 421. It is improper for the trial court to refer to a witness's testimony in scathing terms, and any criticism calculated to impress the jury with the court's views of the facts should be avoided.—Sterling v. Callahan, 94 Mich. 536.

¶ 422. An instruction that "there is evidence also,—whatever you may think of the evidence," stating it, does not discredit the witness whose testimony is thus referred to. —Davidson v. Kolb, 95 Mich. 469.

¶ 423. The use of language in a charge, from which the jury may infer a clear intimation of the judge's disbelief of certain testimony, is objectionable.—Letts v. Letts, 91 Mich. 596.

¶ 424. In an action against a city for an injury from a defective manhole in a street, plaintiff testified on cross-examination that he was under the influence of liquor at the time of the accident, and it was also claimed by defendant that his testimony tended to show that he paid no attention to where he was going, and did not use due care, and that this was attributable in part to his intoxicated condition. Held, that an instruction that the testimony of plaintiff himself was that he was not under the influence of liquor was directly opposed to his own testimony, and, being on a material point, it could not be said that such a statement of the testimony, coming from the court, was not calculated to mislead the jury in prejudice of defendant's case.—Lincoln v. City of Detroit, 101 Mich. 245.

¶ 425. An instruction on damages was calculated to mislead the jury into thinking that the court had little confidence in the plaintiff's testimony, where after stating antithetically the claims of the parties and the evidence it characterized the case as "not a very serious case," and told the jury that a verdict in any "substantial" amount would not be allowed to stand because the case "will not justify it."—Blumeno v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 101 Mich. 325.

¶ 426. As the credibility of witnesses is for the jury, it was improper for the court to indicate to the jury by comments upon the testimony of a witness what he thought of such testimony.—Williams v. City of West Bay City, 119 Mich. 395.

¶ 427. In a proceeding to forfeit the charter of a plank-road company, where many farmers have testified for relator, and some farmers as well as plank-road men have testified for the defendant, it is improper in the charge to describe the witnesses for relator as "farmers" and those for defendant as "the road's witnesses," but reversal will not be granted on this ground where a consideration of the whole record indicates that the error was not prejudicial.—People ex rel. Esper v. Detroit & S. Plank-Road Co., 131 Mich. 30.

Charges emphasizing theories and claims, see post § 77.

¶ 429. Where the court intimates to the jury in his charge that a certain defense has not been strongly urged, and upon defendant's counsel immediately correcting him, the court leaves the question of such defense to the jury, reversal will not be given on the ground that the court improperly influenced the jury.—Robertson v. Kennedy, 152 Mich. 553.

§ 70. Submitting case on truth of plaintiff's testimony.

¶ 430. A jury are properly instructed to find for plaintiff if his claim is supported by undisputed testimony which they believe.—Rasch v. Bissell, 52 Mich. 455.

¶ 431. In an action for an assault and ravishment of the plaintiff, an instruction that, if the jury believed plaintiff's statements after considering defendant's denial and all other evidence, verdict should be for plaintiff, is not objectionable as taking from the jury the consideration of all other questions except the truth of plaintiff's statements; especially where the court, in immediate connection with such instruction, called attention to the entire evidence, telling the jury to judge of the reasonableness of plaintiff's story and defining rape.—Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 Mich. 89.

¶ 432. Where, in answer to a question by a juryman as to whether or not the evidence was clear enough to decide that defendant's motorman was in fault, the court replied that there was testimony from which the jury might find that the motorman was negligent, but that such finding depended upon whose evidence they believed, the charge is not objectionable on the ground that the jury was told to render a verdict for plaintiff if they believed his witnesses, and for the defendant if they did not.—Harker v. Detroit United Ry., 150 Mich. 697.

Credibility of witness testifying to matters not testified to on former trial, see post ¶ 550.

¶ 433. In a personal injury action it is erroneous for the court in its charge to state that the case has been tried twice before and on account of some unfortunate remark or ruling must be tried again as the jury possibly knew that the plaintiff had recovered a verdict on prior trials and might be led to believe that he was prevented from recovering on account of some unimportant incident.—Butler v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 138 Mich. 206.

¶ 434. A positive charge based upon inconsistencies between the testimony of the proponent of a will, and his testimony at a former trial is properly refused where the inconsistencies are such as to be a question for the jury and to affect the credibility of the witness only.—Lincoln v. Felt, 132 Mich. 49.

B. ASSUMPTION OR MISSTATEMENT OF FACTS IN QUESTION.

Instruction construed as not assuming consent of defendant to change in contract, see ante ¶ 63.

Refusal of requests assuming facts, see ante § 35.

Charges ignoring or assuming theories, claims and issues, see ante §§ 47, 48.

Necessity that instructions conform to evidence, see ante § 49.

Charge assuming or suggesting existence of contract, see Contracts § 354.

¶ 435. An instruction is erroneous if it contains an assumption of fact that is not supported by the evidence.—Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496.

¶ 437. An instruction that it is claimed that certain testimony is confirmed by the evidence of a designated person, "and by the fact of the finding of the bolt there," which testimony the jury may consider, is not open to the objection that it assumes the finding of the bolt to be an established fact.—Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 107 Mich. 261.

¶ 438. In an action on a promissory note against the maker and an indorser, an instruction to the jury which assumes that they are sued as joint makers is erroneous where there is nothing in the record to indicate that they were sued as joint makers.—June v. Labadie, 132 Mich. 135.

¶ 439. Where testimony as to the amount of time a woman had boarded with the claimant was placed in the aggregate at 18 months and the witness was speaking of four years and a fraction as the time during which the intervals of boarding occurred, it was error for the court to assume that seven months of the time was prior to a date when the woman was put under guardianship, there being no testimony as to how much of the 18 months was before and how much after that time.—McGee v. McDonald's Estate, 66 Mich. 628.

¶ 440. A request to charge that a demand was necessary before plaintiff in replevin could recover is properly refused where such necessity defends on the existence of facts which it is the province of the jury to determine in the case.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165.

¶ 441. Where in a personal injury case the issue was not one of the legal obligations of the defendant railroad company to maintain the bridge at the crossing where the accident occurred but one of fact whether or not it did maintain a crossing at that point, the court erred when on its own motion it gave an instruction to the jury which assumed the company's obligation to maintain the bridge.—Stewart v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 89 Mich. 315.

¶ 442. A charge of the court, erroneously assuming that a conversation between the plaintiff and one of the defendants (in which he made statements as to the financial condition of himself and the other defendant, a corporation, of which he was an officer), was had before certain coal was furnished, was misleading to the jury and prejudicial in an action for the price of such coal, claimed to have been furnished to defendants, but by them claimed to have been furnished to third persons from whom they had rented a factory; where the record shows that such conversation did not occur until after the claimed indebtedness was incurred and the coal delivered.—Cone v. American Elec. Fuse Co., 145 Mich. 536.

Positive instructions upon matters in dispute, see ante § 63.

Submitting case on truth of plaintiff's testimony, see ante § 70.

¶ 443. It is error for the charge to assume that to be a fact which is contested and about which the testimony is conflicting.—Weyburn v. Kipp's Estate, 63 Mich. 79; Hughes v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 10; Kieldsen v. Wilson, 77 Mich. 45; Nichols v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 394; Parke v. Nixon, 141 Mich. 267.

¶ 444. An instruction by which the jury is given to understand that a disputed question of fact has been established by the proofs is misleading.—Beaubien v. Kellogg, 69 Mich. 333.

¶ 445. Where the testimony of different witnesses as to an agreement varied so much as to prove three distinct contracts, a charge to the jury which assumed that all the evidence tended to prove the same contract was erroneous.—Chadwick v. Butler, 28 Mich. 349.

¶ 446. A request which assumes that a transfer by an insolvent was fraudulent, when there is evidence from which the jury might make a different finding, should not be given.—Gordon v. Alexander, 122 Mich. 107.

¶ 447. Requests to charge by a defendant, predicated upon isolated portions of the testimony in support of his theory of the case, and assuming the truth of controverted facts, are properly refused.—Foley v. Riverside Storage & Cartage Co., 85 Mich. 7.

¶ 448. Where plaintiff's claim as sworn to by him is in dispute as to certain enumerated items, it is error for the court to give an instruction to find for him in a specified sum without calling attention to the disputed items of the claim and of defendant's counterclaim.—McIntosh v. McIntosh, 79 Mich. 198.

¶ 449. It is error to instruct the jury that one of two versions of a transaction is proved where the testimony is conflicting regarding the same.—Webster v. Fowler, 89 Mich. 303.

¶ 450. An instruction assuming the fact of the conversion of personalty is properly refused where there is some evidence that the property was sold with the consent of the party now seeking to recover its value.—Prentiss v. Ross's Estate, 96 Mich. 83.

¶ 451. An instruction is erroneous where it assumes a disputed fact as established, inasmuch as this is a question for the jury and not for the court to determine.—Clarke v. Case, 144 Mich. 148.

¶ 452. In an action by the purchaser of an automobile against the seller for damages for alleged breach of contract in failing to deliver to plaintiff a new automobile in place of another one which was delivered to the seller, where the evidence was conflicting whether the car was returned to and received by defendant as his own property, and instruction which treated the return and acceptance of the car as an established fact, held erroneous as invading the province of the jury by assuming controverted facts.—Rimmele v. Huebner, 190 Mich. 247.

¶ 453. In an action to recover damages for trespass in cutting timber on land held that an instruction which stated that it was undisputed that a certain amount of timber had been cut was erroneous where such instruction was based upon the estimates of witnesses as to the quantity, and there was other evidence tending to contradict the conclusions and estimates of the witnesses.—Connor v. McRae, 198 Mich. 682.

Necessity of direct instruction upon undisputed facts, see ante § 55.

Charging as to weight to be given admissions and declarations, see ante § 60.

¶ 454. Rulings or instructions that are based on facts or propositions conceded on the trial cannot be complained of if correct in themselves.—Kramer v. Gustin, 53 Mich. 291.

¶ 455. Where the testimony as to a certain point is undisputed, such point should not be submitted to the jury.—Gillett v. Knowles, 97 Mich. 77; Hunt v. Supreme Council of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671; O'Brien v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 183 Mich. 86.

¶ 456. It is not error for the charge to state as true a fact that was undisputed or admitted on the trial.—Wright v. Towle, 67 Mich. 255; Mooney v. York Iron Co., 82 Mich. 263.

¶ 457. When but one inference can be drawn from conceded facts the court may properly instruct the jury as to the legal effect thereof.—Harlow v. Jaseph, 183 Mich. 500.

¶ 458. In instructing the jury, the court may properly assume a fact as admitted where it has been treated as such throughout the trial.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 459. In an action on a fire insurance policy where the plaintiff had testified that he had paid all his assessments as demanded by the company and did not intend to withdraw, but the secretary of the company had testified that he had been ordered to take his name from the books as he desired to withdraw, it is error to instruct the jury that the testimony was undisputed.—Schroeder v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 310.

¶ 461. Where upon the testimony in a case the amount of the recovery, if plaintiff is entitled to recover at all, is a sum certain, it is not error for the court so to instruct the jury.—Ockenfells v. Moeller, 79 Mich. 314.

¶ 462. The vendor of logs having testified that it was agreed upon between the parties that a person named should scale them, and the vendee having stated in his evidence that he knew such person was scaling them and was satisfied with his doing so, the trial judge in his charge spoke of the person named as the person "agreed upon" to do the scaling. Held no error, notwithstanding the vendees had denied any distinct agreement respecting the scaling.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126.

¶ 463. Where, in a suit to recover for labor for which plaintiff claimed he was to receive $12 per month, defendant in his plea sets out the contract as a positive one to pay that price, and subsequently tenders plaintiff payment at that rate, the jury is properly instructed that that was the rate agreed upon, regardless of any claim that the bargain was conditioned upon plaintiff's ability to earn that amount.—Welch v. Olmstead, 90 Mich. 492.

¶ 464. Where a plaintiff so presents his claim for $7,000 in a suit for money loaned that the jury must award him that sum if they believe in the truth of his claim, an instruction to the jury to that effect is not erroneous on the ground that the amount of the verdict was forecast by the court.—Bennett v. Maurice, 162 Mich. 254.

¶ 465. It seems that, where the testimony of a witness as to a certain fact is uncontradicted, and his credit is attacked solely upon the ground that he did not testify to such fact upon a former trial, and that in the meantime he had been discharged from the employ of the party injuriously affected by his testimony, it is not substantial error for the court to treat such fact as established.—Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 107 Mich. 261.

¶ 467. In a suit by plaintiff vendee to recover damages for false representation made by defendant vendor of land, there was evidence that plaintiff had paid three hundred dollars in cash and given to defendant a three hundred dollar mortgage. Defendant in his testimony stated that plaintiff did not owe him anything then, but that he guessed he could foreclose the mortgage, and also that the mortgage had not been discharged or the notes canceled. Held, the trial court properly assumed in charging the jury on the question of damages that the notes and mortgage stood as a subsisting claim against the plaintiff and the land.—Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 468. It is not error for the court to state to the jury as a matter of law that a demand for property was made by the plaintiff upon the defendant, where the fact of such demand is undisputed.—Opsomere v. Opsomere, 167 Mich. 636.

¶ 469. In an action for salary by an insurance agent, in which the question whether plaintiff had accounted for application fees was in issue, a statement by the court in answer to a juror's question whether there was any evidence to show that plaintiff had received, as application fees, more than he had accounted for—that that was a question for the jury to settle—that plaintiff said he took none and received no money except that testified to—was not injurious to defendant, when there was no testimony upon the subject other than that referred to by the court, or if there had been, defendant did not call attention to it.—Lee v. Huron Indemnity Union, 135 Mich. 291.

¶ 470. It is error for the court to state to the jury as a fact a claim of one of the parties which finds no support in the evidence.—Hart v. Firzlaff, 67 Mich. 514.

¶ 471. A charge is erroneous in assuming facts that are not in the record, or in allowing the jury to assume them.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165.

¶ 472. In an action on a note, an instruction submitting to the jury the question as to whether the note was given on a land contract and was without consideration for the reason that the contract was abandoned because of the existence of a lease of which plaintiff had no knowledge, was error, where there was nothing to indicate that the contract was abandoned on account of the lease.—English v. Yore, 119 Mich. 444.

a former suit, there being no testimony in the record tending to show such fact, and which instructs that this may be considered on the question of credibility, is prejudicial. —Place v. Place, 139 Mich. 509.

¶ 474. In an action for personal injuries against an electric railway company, it is error to instruct that if the jury believe any of the witnesses testified under a fear of losing employment, or a desire to avoid censure, or a desire to please, they should consider that fact in determining the weight of the testimony, where there is nothing in the evidence to indicate any such motives.—Gregory v. Detroit United Ry., 138 Mich. 368.

C. UNDUE PROMINENCE OR EMPHASIS ON EVIDENCE OR WITNESSES.

§ 76. In general; singling out facts.

See also ante § 59.
By manner and style of submitting charge, see ante § 8.
Modification of request singling out evidence, see ante ¶ 145.
Necessity that instructions conform to evidence, see ante § 49.
Discretion of the court, see ante § 54.
Instructions as to weight to be given specific testimony or particular witnesses, see also ante § 58.
Charging upon weight of expert or opinion evidence, see ante § 61.
Instructing as to inferences to be drawn from evidence, see ante § 62.
Charging upon comparative weight of evidence, see ante § 67.

¶ 475. A charge ought not to give undue prominence to parts of the testimony.—People v. Colerick, 67 Mich. 362.

¶ 476. It is error for the court so to charge as to give a construction to important testimony, or undue and prejudicial prominence to testimony of a doubtful character.—Webster v. Sibley, 72 Mich. 630.

¶ 477. In action for negligently furnishing a defective hoist which broke injurying plaintiff, where the existence of the relation of master and servant between plaintiff and defendant was not necessary to the recovery by plaintiff, the repeated charge that such relation did not exist was misleading.—Piette v. Bavarian Brewing Co., 91 Mich. 605.

¶ 478. It is held not reversible error in an action for personal injuries for the court to present the facts bearing upon contributory negligence with considerable emphasis where it cannot be said that the jury did not clearly understand that they were to pass upon that question.—Labarge v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 134 Mich. 139.

¶ 480. The court should not instruct the jury as to the inferences to be drawn from and the weight to be given to disconnected portions of circumstantial evidence considered separate and apart from other testimony, in deciding controlling issues.—Krolik v. Lang, 187 Mich. 286.

¶ 481. It is proper to direct the jury's attention to important evidence in such terms as to explain the case and aid them to give their attention to essential points, if it is done without misleading them or withdrawing their attention from other important evidence. But when the question is one of fact, and is therefore for the jury alone, it is not error to refuse instructions singling out particular facts and expressing the opinion that if they should be proved they would decide the issue.—Beurmann v. Van Buren, 44 Mich. 496.

¶ 483. In an action of assumpsit to recover an unpaid balance on shoes, where the defense was that the shoes were of an inferior quality, where one witness had testified as to the worth of the shoes had they been of good workmanship and their actual worth, but there was other testimony showing the worth of the shoes, a charge as to the measure of damages based upon the testimony of the sole witness gives too much emphasis to his testimony and is therefore erroneous.—J. Richardson & Co. v. Noble, 143 Mich. 546.

plication of a contract arose from the mere rendition of the services to the corporation of which defendant was an officer or from the fact that the corporation was bankrupt and the testator had not been paid by it. He explained the failure of defendant to testify on the ground that his evidence would be barred by the statute and commented to the jury on the failure of the plaintiff to produce at the trial the bill rendered and returned to the testator, but remarked that the jury were to consider as well the explanation of such course offered by plaintiff. He instructed that they must take into account the fact that after the rendition of the bill no further demand was made until some two years after, that no suit was brought in the lifetime of the testator, together with plaintiff's explanation thereof; and that if it was within the purview of the contract with the defendant's father to keep the books, the verdict must be for defendant. He erroneously stated to the jury that defendant's father held more stock in the corporation in question than defendant. The evidence was undisputed that the father had bought the stock in the corporation and given the defendant the shares which the latter held. Held, that the instructions of the court did not constitute reversible error in that they indicated the court's opinion as to the facts by emphasizing certain testimony or calling attention to the lack of it, by interpreting same or indicating the weight to be given to specific testimony.—McCain v. Smith, 172 Mich. 1.

§ 77. Emphasizing theories or claims.

Necessity that instructions present theories and claims, see ante § 44.
Charges favorable to one party's theories, see also ante § 65.
Charges intimating insufficiency of defense, see ante ¶ 429.

¶ 485. When the court attempts to state to the jury the substance of a witness's testimony, it should state that which supports the theories of both parties, and not give undue prominence to that favorable to one party only.—Banner v. Schlessinger, 109 Mich. 262.

¶ 486. Charge as to the making of a certain alleged contract between plaintiff and defendant held cautionary, only, and not calculated to exalt the contentions of either party or be prejudicial to plaintiff.—Paul v. De Carrie, 196 Mich. 434.

¶ 487. The court, on the question of whether a holder of a check took in good faith, will not give an instruction to the jury to consider certain circumstances in evidence tending to show bad faith when to do so would improperly emphasize that portion of the evidence to the jury.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

Error in singling out witnesses nonprejudicial where instruction good as a whole, see ante § 19.
Submitting case on truth of plaintiff's testimony, see ante § 70.
Discretion of court, see ante § 54.
Refusal to single out particular witness where point covered by general charge, see post ¶ 495.
Injurious or discrediting remarks concerning witnesses, see ante § 68.
Instructions as to care in considering testimony, see post § 92.

¶ 488. The court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury that the testimony of a certain witness should be looked upon with suspicion, since the practice of singling out the testimony of one witness and laying special stress on it is not approved.—Philpott v. Kirkpatrick, 171 Mich. 495.

¶ 489. It is not proper for the trial judge to call the attention of the jury to particular testimony in such a way as to throw discredit upon it, or to lead the jury to believe that the judge discredits the witnesses or their testimony.—Wilson v. Hotchkiss's Estate, 81 Mich. 172.

¶ 490. It is improper to place a particular witness in undue prominence by charging the jury to find according to its belief in his evidence, if such charge tends to ignore other testimony; nor has the trial judge a right so to instruct the jury as manifestly to reflect upon a particular witness.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521.

¶ 491. It is within the discretion of the trial court to refuse instructions emphasizing the importance of the testimony of particular witnesses.—O'Dell v. Goff, 153 Mich. 643.

¶ 492. Though courts are properly reluctant to call attention to the testimony of particular witnesses, some instruction upon the weight of evidence is proper where the only witness who was present at the time of the transaction and testified as to what took place was contradicted, if at all, by testimony of doubtful admissibility much of which was hearsay.—Card v. Fowler, 120 Mich. 646.

¶ 493. It is not good practice to select the testimony of one of several witnesses and instruct the jury that they cannot render a verdict upon that testimony alone.—Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club, 125 Mich. 433.

¶ 494. In an action by a highway commissioner to recover damages for an encroachment on a public highway it was not error for the court to instruct the jury that the evidence of the highway commissioner should be considered as that of any other witness.—Parkey v. Galloway, 147 Mich. 693.

¶ 495. It is not error for the court to refuse to single out a particular witness where such point has been fully covered in a general charge on the credibility of witnesses.—Silverstone v. London Assurance Corporation, 187 Mich. 333.

¶ 496. The court's refusal on request to put the case to the jury on the testimony of a single witness, or to instruct them that if they believe such a witness their verdict should be for a particular party, is not error.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Judson, 34 Mich. 506.

¶ 497. It is improper to put a particular witness into undue prominence by charging the jury to find according to their belief in his evidence, if such a charge tends to ignore important facts in the case.—Chase v. Buhl Iron Works, 55 Mich. 139.

¶ 498. An instruction that the testimony of a certain witness constituted in most part the evidence of a parol declaration of trust, "and it is from his evidence and all the surrounding circumstances that you must find, if you find, a declaration of trust," is erroneous as inviting the jury to think that other circumstances in the case supported his testimony, the contrary being the real evidentiary tendency of all the proven circumstances.—Botsford v. Bradfield, 141 Mich. 370.

¶ 499. In an action of trover for cattle distrained, the contention that the trial court gave undue prominence to the testimony of defendant's wife, who had shut up the cattle, and did not call attention to the fact that the testimony of an employee of plaintiff, who disputed her, was corroborated by other witnesses, held untenable, where, although the court in one part of its charge did state the claim of defendant as testified to by his wife and the claim of plaintiff as testified to by plaintiff's employee and said, "There is the testimony of the two," he later in the charge mentioned the conflict between the two witnesses, and called attention to the fact that testimony had been given by both parties tending to corroborate the testimony of each, as the charge, when considered in its entirety, was sufficient.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 581.

¶ 500. An instruction that "if you believe the testimony of" a named witness "to be true, and that fraud was actually perpetrated" upon plaintiff, "then it is your duty to render a verdict in favor of the city," is not open to the objection that it permits the jury to find a verdict upon the testimony of the named witness alone.—City of Battle Creek v. Haak, 139 Mich. 514.

VI. GENERAL AND CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTIONS.

Cautioning jury as to application of illustrations used in the charge, see ante § 13.
Duty of jury to follow instructions, see ante § 4.

§ 79. Instructions to veniremen.

¶ 501. It is proper for the court to caution the jurors at the beginning of the term against talking with any person about any case that is to be tried and against listening to conversations of others with regard thereto.—People v. Taylor, 93 Mich. 638.

§ 80. Definition of legal terms.

Necessity of requesting more specific instruction where desired, see ante § 22.
Comments on justice of the law in question, see post § 101.

¶ 502. "Reasonably mature" in a charge on the mentality and development of a nine-year-old girl to appreciate the dangers to be expected when riding a bicycle across a street car track is not such a term as needs to be defined.—Hine v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 115 Mich. 204.

Construction of charge as a whole, see ante ¶ 88.
Modification of requested instruction as to burden of proving negligence, see ante § 28.
Time to request instruction as to burden of proof, see ante ¶ 125.
Instruction upon burden of proof in assault and battery erroneous as assuming issues, see ante ¶ 298.
General law as to burden of proof, see Evidence, II.
As to shifting of burden as to alteration, see Alteration of Instruments ¶ 55.

¶ 503. A charge which throws upon defendant the burden of proving that he did not make the contract sued on is erroneous.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

¶ 504. As jurors generally understand that the burden of proof is upon plaintiff in all cases, a request, where the burden shifts to the defendant, that they be instructed accordingly, should be granted.—Stevens v. Pendleton, 94 Mich. 405.

¶ 505. In an action for injury to a person crossing a defective bridge with a team it was error to charge that the fright of a team was no defense unless the jury found it was caused by something other than the defect, for that places the burden upon the defense of proving that it was something else: while in fact it was the plaintiff's duty to establish his own case and show the affirmative fact, if it existed, that the defect caused the fright.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 58 Mich. 156.

¶ 506. Where in an action for wages the court charged that plaintiff must show his right to recover by a fair preponderance of evidence—to show the work he did and what it was worth, and what understanding defendant had of the matter, and that defendant received the benefit of it—it is not error to refuse an instruction that plaintiff has the burden of establishing everything necessary to a recovery.—Bonner v. Runals, 76 Mich. 136.

¶ 507. Unless the attention of the court is called to it, judgment should not be reversed because the judge failed to instruct the jury where the burden rests.—Beath v. Chapoton, 124 Mich. 508.

¶ 508. It places an undue burden upon the plaintiff and is error to charge the jury that the law presumes that persons conduct their dealings honestly and that where a transaction will admit "either" of an honest or a dishonest construction it is the duty of the jury to accept the former, even though it be claimed that the use of "either" was a typographical error and "equally" was the word intended.—Detroit Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Applebaum, 132 Mich. 555.

¶ 509. A request to instruct that "the presumption of law is that the letter was received by the plaintiff, and the burden is upon him to show that he did not receive the letter," is properly refused where it did not also give the jury to understand that the presumption that the letter was received depends upon defendant's establishing by a preponderance of proof that they sent the letter.—Brown v. Harris, 139 Mich. 372.

¶ 510. In an action of trover to recover the value of certain live stock and farming implements seized and sold under attachment where it was alleged that the property sold had been fraudulently transferred it was not error for the court to fail to charge on the burden of proof in case the transfer had been made without consideration in the absence of a request covering the situation.—Major v. Brewster, 148 Mich. 623.

¶ 511. Where a presumption exists that rent has been paid by a plaintiff mortgagee in possession of premises, who sues in assumpsit on the debt, and the court erroneously instructs that the burden is on defendant to show that the rent remains unpaid, such error will not call for reversal where it clearly appears from other instructions that defendant has only the burden of rebutting such presumption and not the burden of showing the rent to be unpaid.—Trudeau v. Boivin, 164 Mich. 665.

¶ 512. A charge that "By the burden of proof as a legal term we understand that the party asserting a claim, the claimants in this case, must produce to the jury testimony of that weight, character and sufficiency which overcomes in the mind of each juryman any testimony opposed to it," held not reversibly erroneous, in an action against a decedent's estate.—Hampton v. Van Nest's Estate, 196 Mich. 404.

See also ante ¶¶ 72, 81, 351.

Necessity of requesting desired instructions, see ante § 21.

Modification of requests to charge upon degree of proof of negligence, see ante ¶ 149.

Necessity of positive instructions upon undisputed or admitted facts, see ante §§ 55, 74.

Instructions as to degree of proof as invading jury province, see ante § 57.

Instructions as to the weight of expert or opinion evidence, see ante § 61.

Instructions upon inferences to be drawn from evidence as invading jury province, see ante § 62.

Charging upon failure of proof, see post § 96.

Effect of one part of charge on proof of fraud to correct other part which requires too much proof, see Fraud ¶ 539.

¶ 513. It is error for a court to charge a jury so as to mislead them into the belief that more stringent proof is necessary than the law requires.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

¶ 514. It is error for the trial court to charge the jury, respecting testimony which defendant claimed showed conclusively that plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care, that such "testimony must be such as to drive you to that conclusion—to prevent your arriving at any other conclusion."—Mynning v. Detroit, Lansing & N. R. Co., 67 Mich. 677.

¶ 515. Where a civil case turns upon a charge of criminal misconduct it is not proper for the court to charge the jury that they must be "well" satisfied of the truth of the charge. A preponderance of evidence is enough; but this must overcome the presumption of innocence.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 516. Where a court instructs the jury that the plaintiff has the burden of proving his case by a preponderance of evidence, and expressly tells the jury that it has to judge of the facts, instructions telling the jury that it must be "convinced" to entitle plaintiff to recover are not necessarily misleading.—Davidson v. Kolb, 95 Mich. 469.

¶ 517. In an action to recover compensation due under a subcontract, requested instructions are properly refused which require the jury to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt.—Carpenter v. Lennane, 166 Mich. 610.

¶ 518. An instruction that plaintiff "must establish by a fair preponderance of the evidence to your satisfaction not only the negligence of the defendant" but plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence held not erroneous because of the phrase "to your satisfaction."—Kaaro v. Ahmeek Mining Co., 178 Mich. 661.

General law as to preponderance of Evidence, see Evidence, X.

¶ 519. An instruction as to the establishment of a case by a fair preponderance of the evidence, held sufficient.—Murdock v. Roe, 186 Mich. 233.

¶ 520. In a civil action a request to charge that the jury is "not authorized to find, except upon clear and convincing proof," etc., is properly changed by the court so as to read "except upon a fair preponderance of proof."—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 521. It is error for the trial judge to use such qualifying words and phrases, in explaining the rule as to the preponderance of evidence, as are calculated to convey the idea that the jury must feel absolutely certain as to the facts before finding for the plaintiff.—Hoffman v. Loud, 111 Mich. 156.

¶ 522. It is not prejudicial error in a civil case to instruct that the plaintiff must satisfy the jury by a clear preponderance of the evidence where other instructions omit the word clear and it appears that the instructions taken as a whole are calculated to impress the jury with a view that only a preponderance is requisite.—Zimmerman v. Whiteley, 134 Mich. 39.

¶ 523. An instruction that the plaintiff "must have a clear preponderance of evidence" was held not prejudicial in the light of further explanation by the court, clearing away the ambiguity and pointing out that an even balance would require verdict for defendant.—Hale v. Knapp, 134 Mich. 622.

¶ 524. In a personal injury suit by a newsboy against a street railroad where it is claimed that he boarded the car to sell a newspaper to a passenger and he was compelled to jump from the running board because ordered and threatened by the conductor, it is error to refuse a request to charge that the preponderance of evidence was upon the plaintiff where no mention thereof was made to this question in the general charge.—Miller v. Detroit United Ry., 144 Mich. 1.

¶ 525. It is error to instruct the jury "that the number of witnesses has nothing to do with the case in the determination of the question of preponderance of evidence."—Dupuis v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 146 Mich. 151.

¶ 526. An instruction that the preponderance of evidence is not determined by the number of witnesses, is not erroneous.—American Seed Co. v. Cole, 174 Mich. 42.

¶ 527. In an action against a township for personal injuries resulting from defendant's failure to maintain a bridge in proper repair, the proofs as to how the injury occurred not conforming to the declaration in certain details, the court instructed the jury in part that plaintiff must be held in his proofs to something approximating the statements in his declaration. Held, this was not improper, since it was followed by a statement that plaintiff must produce a preponderance of testimony sustaining his theory of the manner in which he was injured, and that any radical departure therefrom would preclude a recovery.—Hunter v. Township of Dwight, 157 Mich. 634.

¶ 528. An instruction that plaintiff in assumpsit "must prove to the jury those things which he claims against defendant by what is called preponderance of evidence, and unless he has done that he cannot recover," is proper.—American Seed Co. v. Cole, 174 Mich. 42.

¶ 529. In an action on fire insurance policies where the defense was wilful burning by the insured, an instruction that "unless the defendant has produced proof that clearly convinces you that the plaintiff purposely caused the fire for the purpose of collecting the insurance in question, this defense has not been established," is erroneous in requiring a greater weight of proof than the ordinary preponderance of evidence.—Silverstone v. London Assur. Corporation, 176 Mich. 525.

¶ 530. While an instruction to a jury that a case must be established by a "fair preponderance" of evidence is not reversible error, it is more prudent for the trial court not to require a greater weight of proof than the ordinary preponderance of evidence.—Van Slyke v. Rooks, 181 Mich. 88.

¶ 531. In an action by a servant against his master for damages for personal injuries an instruction on preponderance of evidence to the effect that the jury should base their verdict upon the testimony they believed to be true even though it is opposed by a greater volume of testimony which they do not believe to be true, held proper.—Barkow v. Donovan Wire & Iron Co., 190 Mich. 563.

¶ 532. In an action by the administrator of the payee of promissory notes against a husband and wife as makers of such notes, in which the defense was that no consideration passed to the wife and that an agreement was made between decedent and the wife for cancellation of the notes by furnishing decedent with board and room and care, and that such notes were paid by the fulfillment of such agreement, an instruction on the preponderance of evidence that there would not have to be very much evidence to satisfy the requirement for preponderance and that if it appeared from any evidence that the wife had received the full consideration, she would be liable, held not reversibly erroneous where the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury as to the receipt by the wife of consideration for such note.—Pomeroy v. Everett, 195 Mich. 147.

¶ 533. In an action for personal injuries the refusal of instructions on preponderance of evidence on behalf of defendant is not error where the court advises the jury that, before one can recover under a claim of negligence, he must show and establish by proofs in the case the negligence of the person charged, and that it was left for the jury to determine whether or not plaintiff had shown by the "fair preponderance" of evidence that in what he did at the time of the accident he exercised that degree of care and caution that an ordinarily prudent person would under like circumstances.—McNeal v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 108.

¶ 534. Where an equal number of witnesses are called on both sides in a civil case an instruction that the jury must not count witnesses is not reversibly erroneous.—Bewernitz v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry., 195 Mich. 528.

¶ 535. The preponderance of evidence of partnership is for the jury; and although it is testified to by two witnesses and denied by one, it is not error to submit the question without calling attention to such numerical preponderance.—McIntosh v. McIntosh, 79 Mich. 198.

¶ 536. A charge, defining preponderance of evidence as meaning "simply that evidence which outweighs that which is offered to oppose it," and that it does not mean that a greater number of witnesses shall be produced on one side, but that on the whole evidence the jury shall believe the greater probability to be on the one side than the other, does not mislead the jury into considering probabilities not founded on the evidence.—Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 380.

Inferences to be drawn from evidence, see ante § 62.

¶ 537. In an action by an assignee of a claim who has no knowledge of the facts in issue, and whose presence at the trial is immaterial, he being fully represented by attorneys in the conduct of such trial, an instruction that the jury may consider his absence during the trial is erroneous.—Hitchcock v. Davis, 87 Mich. 629.

§ 86. On inference from failure to testify.

Inferences to be drawn from evidence, see ante § 62.

Comments upon conduct of litigant taking advantage of privilege, see post § 102.

General law of presumptions, see Evidence, II.

¶ 538. The presence of a defendant at the trial of a suit involving his alleged fraudulent representations as to his financial condition, which charge he was at liberty to refute by his own testimony if untrue, and did not do so, is a fact patent to the jury, and an instruction by the court that plaintiffs were entitled to this circumstance in their favor is not erroneous.—Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188.

¶ 539. In a will contest, a requested instruction that no unfavorable inferences should be drawn from the failure of the husband of proponent to testify held properly refused, where the husband was charged as being a party in influencing the testatrix in making a new will in favor of his wife, and he was present at many of the conversations with deceased, knew all about her condition, got possession of her personal effects, and was present during the trial of the case.—Anderson v. Kendrick, 199 Mich. 240, In re Hewitt's Estate, Id.

¶ 540. It is not strictly accurate to charge the jury that they might give "such weight as you see fit" to defendant's failure to take the stand in his own behalf, but in connection with a charge placing the burden upon plaintiff of establishing "the claim he asserts by a fair preponderance of the evidence," such statement could not mislead the jury.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 541. A charge permitted the jury to draw unfavorable inferences against the defendant for failing to testify as a witness in explanation of material transactions, if they believed them to be within his knowledge; held unobjectionable.—Blackwood v. Brown, 29 Mich. 483.

Inferences to be drawn from evidence, see ante § 62.
General law as to presumptions, see Evidence, II.

¶ 542. In an action for personal injuries, a defendant is entitled to have a jury instructed that the failure to call the physician who had examined the plaintiff may be given such weight as they see fit.—Vergin v. City of Saginaw, 125 Mich. 499.

¶ 543. The failure of the plaintiff to produce an available material witness warrants an instruction that such fact may be considered by the jury as a presumption that his testimony would be unfavorable to the plaintiff.—Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Schneider, 181 Mich. 538.

¶ 544. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries, where plaintiff was attended after the accident by two physicians, one of whom was his family physician, who was not called by plaintiff to testify, nor his deposition taken, he being absent from the city at the time of trial, an instruction that the jury might consider whether or not plaintiff knew such physician was going to be absent and that a presumption would arise from the unexplained absence of the testimony of such physician that if produced it would be adverse and the jury might so consider it, held proper.—Griggs v. Saginaw & F. Ry. Co., 100 Mich. 258.

¶ 545. It is not prejudicial error to instruct in regard to the failure to produce a material witness as follows: "and I say to you that unless you find as a fact in this case that the defendant had some reason for not procuring the witness, and even if they had, that the plaintiff has just as much right to call him as the defense, and you shall not infer anything against the defense in this case, by reason of their omission to call him as a witness. He is not a party to the case and the plaintiff had the same right to call him as the defendant."—Noble v. Bessemer Steamship Co., 127 Mich. 108.

¶ 547. A charge which allows the jury to infer unwarrantably that plaintiff is interested in negotiations of a third party concerning the subject of the suit savoring of trickery is error.—Ross v. Houghton, 54 Mich. 337.

§ 89. On credibility and impeachment of witnesses.

Charges reflecting upon or discrediting witnesses, see ante § 68.
Instructions singling out particular witnesses, see ante § 78.
Correcting improper statements of counsel as to credibility of witnesses, see post ¶ 593.
Restricting impeaching testimony to purpose for which admitted, see post ¶ 576.
Cautioning against prejudice against corporations, see post § 100.
General law as to credibility, impeachment and corroboration of witnesses, see Witnesses, VI.

¶ 548. In an action for personal injuries an instruction that the jury should consider the interest, bias and prejudice of the witnesses, held as applicable in a case where witnesses for a defendant railroad company have testified as in any other.—Foley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 233.

¶ 549. Where a party has sought to impeach a witness by exhibiting on cross-examination the improbabilities of his story, or by conduct inconsistent therewith, or by showing statements made by him inconsistent with his testimony, as well as by direct testimony affecting his reputation for veracity, it is error to instruct the jury that if, after considering the testimony of the impeaching witnesses, and of those brought to contradict them, they do not believe that the general reputation of the witness in the community is that of an untruthful man, they should dismiss the whole subject from their minds. The credit to be given to a witness depends upon a consideration of the entire testimony on that subject.—Michigan Pipe Co. v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 97 Mich. 493.

¶ 550. The fact that a witness testifies to matters to which he did not testify when sworn upon a former trial of the case does not call for an instruction cautioning the jury as to his credibility, where he explains that he was not questioned regarding such matters upon the previous trial.—Reiser v. Portere, 106 Mich. 102.

¶ 551. An instruction that in weighing the testimony of witnesses their interest might be considered, coupled with caution against drawing an unfair inference based upon the fact that the witnesses were in defendant's employ, does not invade the province of the jury.—Lovely v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 137 Mich. 653.

¶ 552. In suit upon an attorney's claim assigned to plaintiff by the attorney's administratrix, a son-in-law of the attorney took a very prominent part, and testified that he had agreed to assist plaintiff in collecting the claim; though on cross-examination he denied that he or his wife had any interest in the suit. Held, that an instruction that it was for the jury to say whether he had any interest in the claim, or why, if he had no interest, he should take such a prominent part in the proceedings, was not erroneous.—Hitchcock v. Davis, 87 Mich. 629.

¶ 553. Where a witness's interest has been referred to by counsel in his argument to the jury, it is not error for the court to instruct the jury that if the interest or employment of such witness has impaired or biased his judgment, that fact may be considered in weighing his testimony.—McDonell v. Rifle Boom Co., 71 Mich. 61.

¶ 554. A court has no right to instruct a jury, or suggest to them, that servants or agents of a party, who are called as witnesses, have any such interest as affects their testimony.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51.

¶ 555. Where counsel in arguing the case to the jury has commented upon the interest of witnesses, it is not error for the court to instruct the jury that if the interest or employment of a witness has biased his judgment they may consider that fact in weighing his testimony.—McDonell v. Rifle Boom Co., 71 Mich. 61.

¶ 556. Where a witness is shown to have been convicted of crime, it is proper for the court to instruct the jury that they may take that fact into consideration in determining his credibility.—Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1.

¶ 557. An instruction that if the jury find that a party has wilfully sworn falsely as to a material fact, and they should be of opinion that such wilful false swearing rendered him incredible in the whole, they would have a right to disregard his entire testimony, is not erroneous.—O'Rourke v. O'Rourke, 43 Mich. 58.

¶ 558. A charge to the effect that if a witness swears to a matter that is wilfully false the jury need not believe anything he says is not error.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293.

¶ 559. It is proper to instruct the jury that if a party has testified falsely as to a material fact her testimony may be disregarded entirely, and that it "might" be the jury's duty to disregard it unless supported by other testimony as correct; the jury not being compelled to disregard such testimony.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 95 Mich. 77; Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293.

¶ 560. An instruction that, if the jury find that any witness has testified falsely as to any material fact in the case, it is at liberty to reject all of his testimony, sufficiently states the law upon the subject, and it is not error to refuse to give a request applying such rule to a particular witness, and challenging the attention of the jury to particular portions of his testimony, which the request assumes as false.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521.

¶ 561. A request for an instruction that, if the jury should believe that plaintiff testified falsely on any material point, they might consider that fact in weighing the rest of his testimony, is covered by a general instruction to the effect that, if any of the witnesses testified falsely in any particular, the jury should consider that fact, and weigh the testimony as to that as they would any other fact in the case.—Whitaker v. Engle, 111 Mich. 205.

¶ 562. Defendant is not entitled, as an absolute right, to an instruction that, if the jury finds that plaintiff has knowingly misrepresented and exaggerated the extent of the injuries for which she sues, it may disregard her testimony on the manner of the accident; especially where testimony is fully corroborated as to the manner of it.—Heddle v. City Electric R. Co., 112 Mich. 547.

¶ 563. It is the jury's province to determine ultimately the credit to be given to a witness who has knowingly falsified or exaggerated as to certain facts. Whether the entire testimony of the witness is to be excluded depends upon the consideration of other questions, among which is that of whether the testimony is or is not corroborated by other witnesses.—Heddle v. City Electric R. Co., 112 Mich. 547.

¶ 564. A requested instruction that "If you believe that in any part of his testimony any witness has sworn falsely or erroneously, you are entitled to disregard all his evidence," is properly refused since it leaves out the question of materiality and includes "erroneously" which is not the law.—Gerardo v. Brush, 120 Mich. 405.

¶ 565. An instruction as to disregarding plaintiff's testimony if in any matter he has testified falsely and which is silent on the question of corroboration, is faulty in that it disregards the fact that, to have such effect, the testimony must be material and also intentionally or wilfully false and the further fact that if it is corroborated on material points such fact should be considered.—Gerardo v. Brush, 120 Mich. 405.

¶ 566. One who sued in justice's court upon a claim which he swore to be $65, swore to it on appeal as for $103.79. The court refused to charge that the variation should weigh with the jury against the good faith of the claim; but he said that plaintiff explained it as a mistake due to his not having his account books with him. There was no such explanation in the plaintiff's sworn testimony. Held, material error.—Sinclair v. Hathaway, 57 Mich. 60.

¶ 567. An instruction requested by plaintiff that if defendant testified falsely in material particulars the jury might disregard her testimony entirely is properly modified by omitting the particulars.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521.

¶ 568. Where a defendant requests a charge that if the jury find a witness is telling an untruth about any point, they may disregard his entire testimony, the court properly qualified this by adding "except it be corroborated by other testimony."—Malinowski v. Detroit United Ry. Co., 154 Mich. 104.

¶ 569. A requested instruction to direct the jury to disregard the entire testimony of a witness if found to have sworn falsely in any part is properly refused, in that it omits to charge that the witness must have intentionally so falsified.—Rawlings v. Clyde Plank & Macadamized Road Co., 158 Mich. 143.

§ 93. Consideration of evidence as a whole.

¶ 573. Where there was a conflict of testimony as to whether an agent had power to contract, or whether the other party had reason to rely on such power, it was proper to call the attention of the jury to any of the bearings of the case as throwing light on the probabilities.—Corbin v. Sage, 44 Mich. 142.

Charges upon weight and effect of evidence as invading jury province, see ante § 58.

¶ 574. Instructions to the jury are not to to be limited to the mere laying down of abstract principles of law; it is proper to direct the minds of the jury to the legal bearing of the facts, and caution them, if needful, against giving undue importance to unimportant things.—Welch v. Ware, 32 Mich. 77.

§ 95. Restricting use of evidence inadmissible for some purposes.

See also ante ¶ 368.

Caution as to nature of books of account used by witness to refresh memory, see also Evidence ¶ 2673.

¶ 575. Where evidence competent for one purpose, but incompetent for another, is admitted in a jury case, an instruction should be given as to what extent and for what purpose it may be taken into consideration.— Whittemore v. Walter, 193 Mich. 365.

¶ 576. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury not to consider testimony of what a servant of defendant said narratively about the accident and subsequent thereto as probative of the facts, where such testimony was admitted for the purpose of impeachment of such servant's testimony on the trial.—Catlin v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 66 Mich. 358.

¶ 577. Books of account admitted to show that an item was charged are sufficiently guarded by a charge that the books are memoranda from which the party offering them may refresh his memory in testifying.—Lester v. Thompson, 91 Mich. 245.

¶ 578. Where, on the cross-examination of a witness for plaintiff, defendant is permitted to show statements made in his own interest in order to place the entire conversation before the jury, it is not error to instruct the jury that they cannot consider such statements as evidence of the facts therein stated. Eldredge v. Sherman, 79 Mich. 484.

¶ 579. Where testimony that tends to prove a fact which is inadmissible is admitted for another purpose, the court should carefully caution as to the purpose for which it is admitted, and when this is done the jury must be presumed to have acted in accordance with the instructions.—Dalton v. Dregge, 99 Mich. 250.

¶ 580. It cannot be complained that certain items in a bill of particulars were wrongfully submitted to the jury where the jury was instructed as to the items which it might consider, and the items complained of were not included.—Mott v. Penoyar, 153 Mich. 273.

¶ 581. In an action for personal injuries sustained by being thrown down an elevator shaft where it was contended on the part of the plaintiff that the elevator door had been negligently left open when the elevator was at another floor, but the defendant contended that the plaintiff had himself opened the door, that he knew how and that he had on previous occasions done so, an instruction limiting the evidence that plaintiff had on prior occasions opened the door to the impeachment of his credibility where he had denied such acts was too restrictive, because the jury might reason that if he was untruthful in his declaration as to knowing how to open the door he was also untruthful when he testified that he did not open the door on the occasion when he was injured, and the jury should have been allowed to use the testimony for the purpose of supporting an inference that he did in fact open the door on the occasion that he was injured.—Pascieszny v. Boydell Bros. White Lead & Color Co., 146 Mich. 223.

¶ 582. In a husband's action to recover for the loss of the services and society of his wife injured while alighting from defendant's car, she was sworn as plaintiff's witness without objection to her mental incompetency to testify, and the question was not raised while she was testifying, but during the trial defendant introduced testimony on the subject. The court instructed the jury that the latter testimony was received for the purpose of allowing the jury to judge how long plaintiff might be deprived of the society of his wife, or of her labor as a wife, in the discharge of her domestic duties, and for no other purpose; that they were at liberty to investigate all the proof offered on the subject; that, if they should find that at the time of giving her testimony the wife was without sufficient mental capacity to understand what was going on, they were not at liberty to consider her testimony at all, but if they should conclude that she was sane, and capable of knowing what she was doing, and saying, and of remembering what transpired at the time of the accident, they should consider her testimony, and might also consider it in connection with the permanent character of the injury, and in weighing the testimony of the expert witnesses in the case, who, as the evidence tended to show, had testified on a previous occasion that the wife would be permanently insane. Held correct.—Bowdle v. Detroit St. R. Co., 103 Mich. 272.

¶ 583. Where there is a total want of evidence upon any essential point, the jury should be distinctly so charged.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

¶ 584. Where the testimony in a cause fails to make a case of liability against the defendant within the issue, it is the duty of the court to so instruct the jury.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Nichol, 18 Mich. 170.

¶ 585. Where there is no evidence tending to show any defense to plaintiff's claim, and plaintiff's evidence is uncontradicted, the jury should be instructed that if they believe plaintiff's evidence they should find a verdict in his favor.—Roberts v. Field, 27 Mich. 337.

¶ 586. A charge to the jury in an ejectment suit "that the plaintiffs cannot recover in the action because the evidence does not show any right to recover the possession of any share, interest or portion of the premises, at the commencement of the suit," takes the whole case away from the jury, and can only be sustained where there is no evidence whatever tending to make out a case for plaintiffs.—Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 360.

¶ 587. A trial judge has a right to direct the jury's attention to any essential point in the case which he thinks the plaintiff has given no evidence fairly tending to prove; and he may advise them to render verdict accordingly.—De Mill v. Moffat, 45 Mich. 410.

¶ 588. A charge which directs the jury to apply to the testimony and the facts, their own general intelligence and knowledge of affairs is not objectionable as allowing the jury to resort to any knowledge peculiar to any of them of material facts.—Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 74 Mich. 15.

¶ 589. In an action for damages caused by defendant's negligence in not providing his vessel with a fire-screen for its smokestack, as required by statute, an instruction that the jurymen, in determining whether the use of such screen would have prevented the fire, may act upon their own judgment, experience, and knowledge, instead of confining them to the evidence, is erroneous.—Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co., 106 Mich. 582.

¶ 590. An instruction in an action for personal injuries caused by an automobile running into an excavation in the street, which allows the personal knowledge of the jurors to have the weight of evidence, and which contemplates not only their determination as to the use of the street from their personal observation but also the character of the ordinances relating thereto is erroneous.—Karrer v. City of Detroit, 142 Mich. 331.

General law as to arguments, see Argument of Counsel.

¶ 591. Where counsel for both sides use improper language in the course of the trial, the court adopts the proper course by charging the jury to ignore it.—Miller v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 158 Mich. 402.

¶ 592. Where counsel bases an argument to the jury upon a state of facts unsupported by the testimony, it is error to refuse to instruct the jury that no such facts have been proved, when requested by the opposing counsel at the close of such argument.—O'Callaghan v. Boeing, 72 Mich. 669.

¶ 594. An instruction to the jury that they should not take as true anything that the attorneys have stated as to what the evidence is, is not erroneous, where it explained by a further statement to mean that they are to be governed by the testimony of the case, not by what counsel say the evidence is.—Dalm v. Bryant Paper Co., 157 Mich. 550.

¶ 595. An instruction telling the jury to disregard all statements of counsel that might perhaps result in influencing them or might have been designed to influence them is not error when taken in conjunction with what precedes and follows it, requiring the verdict to be based on the evidence.—Neely v. Detroit Sugar Co., 138 Mich. 469.

¶ 596. In a suit for alienation of affections a statement by the court in his charge that the case has appealed strongly to his sympathies, but that the jury should not be influenced by sympathy, does not constitute error where there is nothing to indicate on which side the sympathy of the court lies.—Gornetzky v. Gornetzky, 174 Mich. 492.

¶ 597. In an action for damages on account of the death of a servant from the kick of a vicious mule, an instruction that the appearance of the father and mother at the trial, the "unfortunate accident," and other matters would appeal to the jury's sympathy, and that the court would not have them "cast it aside," but that the jury must govern such sympathy by their oaths, reason, judgment and charge of the court, held fair to the defendant.—Robbins v. Magoon & Kimball Co., 193 Mich. 200.

¶ 598. In answer to a request to charge that the jury had no right to be governed by or act upon their sympathies it was held not error to charge as follows: "You have no right to act upon your sympathies without any proof; but if the proof happened to concur with your sympathies you are not to disregard the proof because of that fact; you are to be governed by the proof in the case."—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

Cautionary instructions as to sympathy, see ante § 99.

¶ 600. It was not error in an action against a railroad company for injuries to refuse to charge the jury that they had no right to disregard the testimony of any of defendant's witnesses through caprice or without cause, merely for the reason that they are in the employ of a railroad company, where there was nothing in the record to show that the jury did disregard the testimony of any of the witnesses, and where the court charged the jury to give such credit to the testimony of each witness as, under all the circumstances, such witness seemed entitled to, and that it was their duty to try and decide the case precisely the same as they would if it were a suit between two individuals.—Hintz v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 140 Mich. 565.

§ 101. Comments on justice or policy of law.

¶ 601. A trial judge may as well dispense with adverse comments to the jury on the justice of the law as expounded by him.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

¶ 602. A judge has no right to comment adversely before the jury upon the conduct of a litigant in taking the benefit of a statutory privilege—such as the rule which excludes the testimony of a party as to facts known equally to a deceased opponent.—Ludlow v. Pearl's Estate, 55 Mich. 312.

¶ 603. The court has no right to suggest to the jury that inferences may be drawn unfavorable to a party in consequence of his claiming a legal exemption when testifying.—Carne v. Litchfield, 2 Mich. 340.

§ 103. On damages and measure of recovery.

The necessity and propriety of instructions on damages and the accuracy and correctness of particular instructions are treated in Damages, XII, B. Where the subject of damages was merely incidental and the instruction was questioned for some principle general to all instructions, the matter has been treated in appropriate places elsewhere in Instructions.

Necessity of requesting charges as to damages, see ante § 21.
Refusal of instruction as to health of plaintiff suing for personal injury, see ante ¶ 172.
Sufficiency of instruction as to damages when construed as a whole, see ante § 19.
Charges assuming undisputed facts, see ante ¶ 467.
Instructions as to what damages will carry costs, see post § 104.

General law as to costs, see Costs.

¶ 604. It is not erroneous for a court to inform the jury in an action of tort what amount of damages will carry costs.—Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322.

¶ 605. It is improper to instruct the jury that the plaintiff will not be allowed costs unless they render a verdict of at least $100.—Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Soc., 120 Mich. 142; Johnson v. Henry, 127 Mich. 548.

§ 105. As to agreeing upon verdict.

Charging as to care in considering testimony, see ante § 92.

¶ 606. A charge on captious doubts and stubbornness against the honest opinions of other jurors taken as a whole, held not open to the criticism that it had a tendency to deter jurymen from enforcing their ideas, or adhering to their honest opinions, if they found themselves in the minority.—Mead v. Harris, 101 Mich. 585.

¶ 608. It is not reversible error to refuse to instruct, in an action for personal injuries, that "In this case it is the duty of the jury to consider the testimony and in cases of difference of opinion, to reconcile such differences, if they are able to do so. But in order to do so, no individual is required to surrender his individual opinion, and this is as true as to the amount of damages as well as any other question," where the court did instruct that they should "consider the evidence and all the facts, and reach a verdict if you can, such as shall hereafter satisfy your individual consciences," and it appeared that the jury had served some time during the term, since it is presumed that jurors know that no juror should find a verdict not based on his own convictions derived from the whole case.—Shaller v. Detroit United Ry., 139 Mich. 171.

¶ 609. A statement that the case has been once tried, that the amount involved is not large, and that neither the parties nor county can afford to have the parties litigate forever, coupled with a wish that the jury may be able to arrive at a conclusion and settle the facts in the case, is simply an admonition to agree, which the court may properly make.—Kelly v. Emery, 75 Mich. 147.

¶ 610. It is error for the court to tell the jury that having found a general verdict they were bound to answer the special questions submitted in harmony therewith.—Mechanics' Bank of Detroit v. Barnes, 86 Mich. 632.

¶ 611. An instruction that the jury must answer a specific question is not prejudicial error, where the required answer is not indicated or suggested.—Stevens v. Beardsley, 134 Mich. 506.

¶ 612. The action of the court upon submitting special questions to the jury in stating to the jury in its charge that it would be necessary for them to agree upon each answer to the questions the same as they would agree in their verdict, held not error.—Jackson v. Haverford Cycle Co., 194 Mich. 286.

¶ 612a. In an action on a liquor bond under the Civil Damage Act, Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, How., 2nd Ed., § 5074, in which the main question was whether deceased was intoxicated at the time he met his death by fire in jail personally set, an instruction that the answer of the jury to the special question whether deceased was intoxicated at the time he met his death must be in harmony with the general verdict and advising them what their answer should be under certain circumstances, held erroneous.—Taylor v. Davarn, 191 Mich. 243.

VII. DELIVERY TO JURY, AND ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTIONS.

Style and manner of charge, see ante § 8.
Time to request instructions, see ante § 23.
Remarks made on refusing requested instructions, see ante § 41.
Charges reflecting upon or discrediting witnesses, see ante § 68.
Commenting on fact of former trials or testimony, see ante § 71.
Remarks as to testimony of witnesses as to handwriting, see ante ¶ 376.
Comments on justice of law in question, see ante § 101.
Comments as to conduct of litigants, see ante § 102.
Objections to additional instructions, see post § 112.
Provisions as to reading and filing instructions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14575.

¶ 613. It cannot be said that instructions are not given and that the jury would not so understand them because they were prefaced by the remarks "counsel handed me some requests as stating provisions of law by which you should be guided in determining your verdict."—Noble v. Bessemer Steamship Co., 127 Mich. 108.

§ 108. Order in which instructions given.

Repetition of instructions, see ante § 15.
Time to request instructions, see ante § 23.

¶ 614. A defendant has no absolute right to have the instructions preferred by him reserved until after those proposed by the plaintiff have been passed upon, the matter being entirely within the discretion of the court.—Shaw v. Township of Saline, 113 Mich. 342.

Necessity for instructions in general, see ante § 1.
Inaccurate or ambiguous instructions, see ante § 17.

¶ 615. Where a jury returns for additional instructions, it is not error to repeat the substance of a charge already given.—American Seed Co. v. Cole, 174 Mich. 42.

¶ 616. Where the subject-matter inquired of by a juror for instruction was already covered by the charge, refusal to re-read or repeat the charge held not error.—Long v. Township of Weare, 195 Mich. 706.

¶ 617. It is error for the court to enter the jury room and give instructions to the jury in the absence of counsel and of the court stenographer.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 84 Mich. 676.

¶ 618. It is error to send to the jury room, without consent of counsel, an answer to a written question propounded by the jurors after they have retired.—Hopkins v. Bishop, 91 Mich. 328.

VIII. OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS.

As proper matter to be included in bill or case on error, see Appeal § 101.
Assigning error in charge, see Appeal § 205.
Assigning error in instructions for review, see Appeal, VI, E.
Assigning error without exceptions, see Appeal § 197; Saving Questions for Review.
Showing in the record for review of instructions or disposal of requests, see Appeal § 185.
Requests not covered by instructions deemed refused, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 59, Comp. L. 1915, § 12631.

§ 111. In general; time and manner of objecting.

[Note. The practice necessary to preserve for review in the supreme court such errors as are claimed is treated in Saving Questions for Review. See that topic.]
Necessity that instructions be requested, see ante § 21.
Sufficiency of instruction ascertained from considering it as a whole, see ante § 19.
Predicating error on isolated portions of charge, see ante § 20.

¶ 620. The statutory right to have a charge reduced to writing is waived if the point is not raised until after the jury has gone out.—Garton v. Union City Nat. Bank, 84 Mich. 279.

¶ 621. A jury was instructed that their answers to special questions must conform to their general verdict or they would overrule it. Held, that if this was misleading as giving the general verdict precedence, it was too late to object to it after the jury had retired and when the judge could not correct it.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

¶ 622. Where the court in submitting the plaintiff's requests remarked that they were to be treated in every respect as if furnished and prepared by the court, and in submitting the defendant's requests said "I give you the following requests prepared and submitted by the defendant," if the latter's counsel thought that the jury were likely to be misled by the difference in verbiage the court's attention should have been called thereto before the jury retired.—Davis v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 147 Mich. 479.

¶ 623. In a suit to recover a commission for the sale of real estate, the court stated to the jury that, under the undisputed evidence in the case, plaintiff had the right to secure a purchaser for the land, and, in case of a sale through his procurement, he was entitled to a stated commission on the selling price. Held, that, if the statement of the court was incorrect, it was the duty of defendant's counsel then and there, before the case was finally submitted to the jury, to direct the attention of the court to the fact, and, not having done so, it must be presumed that the court was correct, and counsel cannot afterwards be permitted to contend otherwise.—Wood v. Wells, 103 Mich. 320.

¶ 624. Where the judge, in the absence of all counsel writes an instruction in answer to a question in writing by the jury as to the effect of contributory negligence, and subsequently before reception of verdict and with both counsel in court informs them of such action, the failure to object thereto before verdict is rendered waives any error.—Le Beau v. Telephone & T. Const. Co., 109 Mich. 302.

¶ 1. The legislature may provide for an examination into the affairs of insurance companies doing business here; and a company organized under the laws of this state may be required to submit to the examination required by a statute even before the expiration of the time allowed by said statute for conformity to its provision.—People ex rel. Secretary of State v. State Ins. Co., 19 Mich. 392.

¶ 2. Laws 1872, p. 86 (How. St. § 4244), forbids the transaction of business within the state by insurance companies that do not distinctly show by their policies the amount of life benefits assured, and that do not make premiums fixed, and not contingent on losses.—People ex rel. Nat. Life Ins. Co. of Chicago v. State Com'r Insurance, 25 Mich. 321.

¶ 3. A provision of Act 15, Pub. Acts 1911 which permits the incorporation of insurance companies "to make insurance upon automobiles, whether stationary or being under their own power against any hazard" does not give the authority to insure against liability from injuries to persons and property by reason of ownership or use of an automobile.—American Automobile Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 174 Mich. 295.

¶ 4. The failure of an insurance company otherwise duly incorporated to file a certified copy of its articles of association, etc., with the county clerk, as required by statute, does not avoid a policy made before filing such papers.—Thons v. People, 25 Mich. 499.

Filing of by-laws of insurance companies with insurance commissioner, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. I, § 6.

¶ 5. The court will be slow to interfere with a ruling made by a state commissioner where such ruling is an exercise of discretion.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 151 Mich. 610.

¶ 6. Where an insurance company is doing business within the state in a way absolutely prohibited by law, although not within the jurisdiction of the commissioner for a revocation of license, the court can give no relief against his action in revoking their license, inasmuch as the corporation is entitled to no rights whatever to do business in the state.—People ex rel. Nat. Life Ins. Co. of Chicago v. State Com'r of Insurance, 25 Mich. 321.

§ 3. Licenses and renewals and denial or revocation of license.

Revocation of license for misrepresentation, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. IV, §§ 7, 8.

¶ 7. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 7517, a certificate renewing a life insurance company's authority to do business in the state may be denied if an examination has disclosed that the company is violating Comp. L. 1897, § 7219, prohibiting rebates.—Citizens' Life Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 128 Mich. 85.

¶ 8. An insurance company failed to make its annual report to the insurance commissioner, to make its annual statement at the annual meeting of its members, to mail a copy of such statement to its members, and to keep its books and papers at its principal office as required by law. It did not carry out its contracts with its members in good faith, and its officers appropriated exorbitant sums of money for salaries and services. Held, a writ of mandamus asked by it compelling the insurance commissioner to renew its license to do business, would be denied.—American Health & Accident Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 154 Mich. 193.

¶ 9. The commissioner of insurance cannot lawfully revoke a license granted to an insurance company to do business within the state, except on the investigation and proceedings, and in the particular cases fixed by the statutes.—People ex rel. Nat. Life Ins. Co. of Chicago v. State Com'r of Insurance, 25 Mich. 321.

Compensation of agents in general, see post § 32.
Agents and brokers generally, see post III.
Premium, assessment or other consideration, see post VI.
Revocation of license generally, see ante § 3.
Revocation of license of insurer for violation of anti-rebate law, see also ante ¶ 7.
Statutory prohibition against rebates of premium or agent's commission, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. IV, § 6.

¶ 10. Comp. L. 1897, § 7219, commonly called the Anti-Rebate Law, passed in 1889, providing against rebates by life insurance companies, applies to a mutual benefit association organized under Pub. Acts 1887, No. 187.—Citizens' Life Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 128 Mich. 85.

¶ 11. Comp. L. 1897, § 7221, providing that certain sections of an act mentioned which refers to life insurance companies shall not apply to mutual benefit associations, does not prevent their being regarded as life insurance companies within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, § 7219, prohibiting rebates by life insurance companies.—Citizens' Life Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 128 Mich. 85.

¶ 14. The buying of drinks by an agent of an insurance company for a prospective applicant for insurance does not constitute a distinction and discrimination within the Insurance Anti-Rebate Law, Pub. Acts 1907, No. 181, How. 2nd Ed., § 8153, where the parties solicited are sober and mentally normal.—Northern Assur. Co. v. Meyer, 194 Mich. 371.

¶ 15. The taking of notes for insurance premiums without interest until the policies are delivered does not constitute a violation of the Insurance Anti-Rebate Law, Pub. Acts 1907, No. 181, How. 2nd Ed., § 8153.—Northern Assur. Co. v. Meyer, 194 Mich. 371.

Insured as coinsurer, see post § 217.
Limitations upon and prohibitions against requirement of coinsurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, §§ 9, 10.

¶ 17. Comp. L. 1897, § 5183 (The Anti-coinsurance Act) making it unlawful for an insurance company to provide by any policy issued by it, or by any clause, or by any separate agreement, contract or otherwise to limit the liability or restrict it by reason of the failure of the insured to insure the property covered for any certain amount or proportion of the actual cash value of such property, also prohibits any policy in which the same result is reached by a rider with a "percentage coinsurance clause," by which the insured shall be regarded as in effect a coinsurer for a certain percentage of the property.—Attorney General ex rel. Michigan Lubricator Co., v. Commissioner of Insurance, 148 Mich. 566.

§ 6. Mutual and co-operative associations.

Rights and liabilities of mutual and co-operative associations, see post §§ 10, 11.
Funds, surplus and reserves of mutual or co-operative associations and companies, see post § 17.
Foreign mutual company, see also post ¶ 27.
Application of anti-rebate law to mutual benefit associations, see ante ¶ 10.
Effect of revocation of license on power to levy assessment, see post ¶ 301.

¶ 18. Mutual benefit and co-operative associations, whether incorporated or not, are insurance organizations within the meaning of How. St., ch. 131, whenever, in consideration of periodical contributions, they engage to pay a member or his designated beneficiary a benefit upon the happening of a specified contingency.—Rensenhouse v. Seeley, 72 Mich. 603.

¶ 19. A mutual benefit association organized under How. St., § 3949, and doing business on the assessment plan is an insurance company.—Miner v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 63 Mich. 338.

¶ 20. How St., § 4249, prohibiting mutual fire insurance companies from doing business in more than three counties, is still in force. as Laws 1873, Act No. 175, which attempted to authorize such action, is unconstitutional; and a policy issued by such a company outside of its territorial limits is void.—Eddy v. Merchants' M. & C. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 651.

¶ 21. Whether How. St., § 4247, which authorizes mutual fire insurance companies to insure only such buildings as constitute detached risks in villages and cities, confines the risks to incorporated or platted villages. quære.—Russell v. Detroit Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 407.

Want of license or permit as defense or disability, see post § 14.
Rights, powers and limitations of foreign insurers in general, see post II, B.
Status, recognition, regulation and privileges of foreign corporations generally, see Foreign Corporations, I.
Power of state to impose terms and conditions on admission of foreign corporations to state, see Foreign Corporations §§ 2-5.
Admission of foreign companies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. II.
When foreign mutual fire insurance companies admitted to do business, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. II, § 7.
Deposit by foreign insurance company with state treasurer as condition precedent to doing business, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. II, § 5.
Appointment by foreign insurance company of resident agent on whom service of process may be made, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. II, § 4.

¶ 22. Laws 1887, Act No. 285, regulating the manner in which foreign insurance companies shall do business, does not violate the principles "of due process of law," by providing for revocation of license for violations of the law.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 485.

¶ 23. Laws 1887, Act No. 285, prohibiting any foreign insurance company doing business in this state from entering into any contract with any other such company or its agents, and requiring, as a condition precedent to obtaining a license to do business, an undertaking not to make such contract, is violated by such company's subscribing to a "bureau of inspection and rating" which is to examine risks and fix rates thereon for all subscribing companies, being substantially a combination of foreign companies; and for such violation the company's certificate may be revoked.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 485.

¶ 24. How. St., § 4325 is to be construed as requiring an insurance company formed under the laws of a foreign government to make a deposit in this state in order to do business here, and a deposit in another state of the Union will not suffice.—Employers' Liability Assur. Co., Ltd. v. Insurance Com'r, 64 Mich. 614.

¶ 25. Comp. L. 1871, § 1683, How. St., § 4331, regulating the transaction of the business of insurance in Michigan by the agents of foreign companies, does not assume to forbid the making of contracts of insurance abroad upon property in this state, nor to invalidate such contracts, but applies only to operations within the state. Whether it operates to render void, at the election of insurers, such insurance as they may effect within the state without compliance with its restrictions, quære.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 26. Where there is a petition for mandamus to compel the State Commissioner of Insurance to authorize a foreign insurance company to issue liability insurance the rule of comity does not prevail where the proposed action is contrary to the policy of the State law.—American Automobile Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 174 Mich. 295.

¶ 27. A foreign mutual fire insurance company, without having filed the prescribed statement and obtained the requisite authority to do business in this state, received applications from persons called "inspectors," who examined risks, suggested improvements, filled out and submitted applications, and recommended the same, if favorable, for the company to write, which applications and premium notes being signed by the applicant and received at the home office, a policy would be forwarded, and assessments demanded and paid, by mail. Held, that said inspectors were agents of the company, within How. St., § 4331 et seq., which prohibits foreign insurance companies from transacting business in this state without having first secured the requisite certificate of authority; that the whole scheme was a flagrant attempt to evade the provisions of the statute intended to restrict the insurance business.—Seamans v. Temple Co., 105 Mich. 400.

¶ 28. The companies or associations that are permitted under the act of 1887 upon certain conditions to do life insurance business in this state do not include an Illinois corporation known as "The Fraternal Alliance."—Rensenhouse v. Seeley, 72 Mich. 603.

II. INSURANCE CORPORATIONS AND UNDERWRITERS.

Statutory provisions relative to co-operative insurance company for limited lines of casualty risks, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. III.
Incorporation under mutual plan for insurance against fire, cyclone and hail, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. IV.
Incorporation of mutual insurance companies for protection against fire, lightning, hail, flood, explosion, etc., see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part V, chap. III.
Procedure for organization of co-operative company for limited number of lines of casualty insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. III, §§ 1-5.
Incorporation of mutual companies for automobile insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. III, §§ 5-8.

¶ 31. A mutual life insurance company organized under Pub. Acts 1887, No. 187, as amended by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 58, providing that any such corporation may provide in its policy for the payment, at stated periods, of premiums or assessments for the purpose of accumulating and maintaining a mortuary, an emergency, and a reserve fund, and that the members may receive the benefit of any surplus not needed by the corporation, is authorized, where its articles of association are framed with respect thereto, to write whole-life policies, term insurance, advance payment insurance, and insurance upon the joint lives of two or more persons.—Home Life Assur. Co. v. Maynard, 112 Mich. 497.

¶ 32. A mutual life insurance company, organized under a statute (Laws 1887, Act No. 187, as amended by Laws 1895, Act No. 58) requiring such companies, in their articles of association, to state definitely the object of the incorporation, the classification of members, and the purpose of the classification, cannot, where its articles of association provide for the payment of policies only in the event of the "death" of the insured, issue a policy payable upon the occurrence of total disability.—Preferred Masonic Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Giddings, 112 Mich. 401.

¶ 33. Members of the board of directors of a mutual fire insurance company raising its funds by assessments cannot bind the company except in regular or special meetings of the board.—Kamm & Schellinger Brewing Co. v. St. Joseph Co. Village Fire Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 606.

¶ 34. The members of a mutual fire insurance company organized under How. St., ch. 132, have the power under a charter which provides that at the annual meeting the members present shall, among other things, determine a limitation of hazards, adopt by-laws, etc., to adopt a by-law exempting the company from liability for losses caused by fire from steam power used on or about the premises of any member of the company.—Borgards v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 440.

¶ 36. The by-laws of a firemen's benefit association provided that any member who should be retired by the fire commissioners by reason of twenty-five years' service as a fireman might still continue a member of the association, with all of its rights and benefits, by paying the same dues and assessments as an active member, and that upon the death of any "active" or retired member there should be collected from each surviving active or retired member a specified amount for the use of the beneficiary. Held, that the placing of a member upon the retired list before the expiration of twenty-five years' service, by reason of injuries received in the line of his duty as a fireman incapacitating him for active service, does not terminate his "active" membership in the association.—Neville v. Detroit Firemen's Fund Ass'n, 104 Mich. 149.

Effect of insolvency on power of mutual company to levy assessment, see post § 75.
Assessments levied by receiver of mutual company, see post ¶ 308.
Items received may include in assessment, see post ¶ 334.

Powers of receiver of insolvent mutual company to levy assessment, see post ¶¶ 313, 315, 316, 321.
Distribution of shares in fund of mutual company on dissolution, see post ¶ 59.
Receivership proceedings in general, see Receivers.
Liquidation and dissolution of domestic insurance companies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part I, chap. III.
When insurance commissioner may ask for dissolution of domestic insurance company, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part I, chap. III, § 2.
Power of insurance commissioner to assess stockholders or members on liquidation of domestic company, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part I, chap. III, § 7.

¶ 37. The petition filed by the commissioner of insurance under How. St., § 4261, as the foundation of proceedings to wind up the business of a mutual fire insurance company, need not be verified.—Wardle v. Cummings, 86 Mich. 395.

¶ 38. The 9,000 members of a mutual fire-insurance company are not entitled to the application for a change of venue in receivership proceedings in the winding up of the affairs of such company.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 39. Proceedings for appointment of receiver for company, and for levying of assessments to pay outstanding debts, are not void for want of personal notice to members of application, etc.; statute contemplates notice by publication, and all members are bound thereby.—Wardle v. Cummings, 86 Mich. 395.

¶ 40. The question of the regularity of an order for a change of venue without notice to the members, in receivership proceedings for the winding up of the affairs of a mutual fire-insurance company, cannot be raised in an action brought against a member by the receiver of such company for the collection of an assessment.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 41. The order of the court authorizing a substituted receiver of a mutual fire-insurance company to make a new assessment against the members of such company instead of a former assessment set aside by such court, must be held to be valid in assumpsit by the receiver for such assessment. —Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 42. On demurrer to a bill by the receiver of a defunct fraternal loan and insurance society for an accounting and discovery against the trustees, officers and agents of the society reciting that funds had been lost, squandered and stolen through the negligence of the defendants, a defendant claimed the bill showed that the losses occurred after he had ceased to be a member of the executive board of the supreme lodge. Held, that while the charges should have been more specific, there was actionable conduct on the part of the defendant and losses prior to the time he ceased to be a member of the board.—Snover v. Boynton, 173 Mich. 539.

¶ 43. It is within the authority of the court having jurisdiction of receivership proceedings in the winding up of the affairs of a mutual fire-insurance company, to accept the resignation of the receiver of such company and to appoint his successor without notice to the policyholders, where an emergency makes such a change necessary.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 44. The regularity of the acceptance of the resignation of the receiver of a mutual fire-insurance company by the court and the appointment of a successor, without notice to the policyholders, cannot be questioned in an action brought against a member of such company by such receiver to collect an assessment.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 45. Upon the final dissolution of a mutual benefit association, or upon its incapacity to continue business and virtual death, each member is entitled to share equally in the fund belonging to his class or division.—Stamm v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 65 Mich. 317.

¶¶ 46, 47. A mutual benefit association having been refused a license to continue business acquiesced in the decision, ceased to admit new members or to issue new policies, and did no further business except to make assessments for death, losses, and the officers and many members formed a new company. Held, that it was the duty of the managing agents, under the circumstances, to wind up the affairs of the corporation voluntarily, and that if they neglected to do so, any one interested could seek relief in equity to obtain a distribution of the funds among the members. —Stamm v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 63 Mich. 317.

B. FOREIGN INSURERS.

§ 13. Right to do business in general.

Regulation and licensing of foreign companies, see ante § 7.

Right of foreign insurer to sue for premium or assessment, see post § 92.

General law of foreign corporations, see Foreign Corporations.

Submission of foreign corporation to state laws by doing business in state without regular admission, see Foreign Corporations ¶ 15.

Admission of foreign companies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. II.

Deposit by foreign insurance company with state treasurer as condition precedent to doing business, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. II, § 5.

Appointment by foreign insurance company of resident agent on whom service of process may be made, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. II, § 4.

¶ 48. A foreign insurance company can do no business here except upon the conditions that our laws impose.—People ex rel. Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 21 Mich. 577; Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 29 Mich. 238; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 485.

¶ 49. The right of a foreign company to do business in this state is derived from our statutes, and not from its charter, and it must comply with the terms and conditions those statutes impose.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

¶ 50. The fact that a foreign company does not come within the provisions of our legislation so that the insurance commissioner can give it the requisite authority to do business in this state does not authorize it to take risks without such authority; it cannot take risks at all.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 239.

¶ 51. In an action on an insurance policy issued by a foreign insurance company on property in Michigan it is not necessary to prove that the company had authority under our laws to transact business in Michigan; but the company is estopped from denying its authority or defending against its contract on any such grounds.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 52. Under How. St. § 8136, which provides that when, by the laws of this state, any act is forbidden to be done by any corporation without express authority by law, and such act shall have been done by a foreign corporation, it shall not be authorized to maintain any action founded upon such act, or upon any liability or obligation, express or implied, "arising out of" or made or entered into in consideration of such act, a foreign mutual benefit society which, by reason of its noncompliance with the laws of this state, is not authorized to do business therein, cannot maintain an action in this state to recover from an agent moneys collected by him, under an arrangement with its officers, on assessments by it made upon its Michigan members.—People's Mut. Ben. Soc. v. Lester, 105 Mich. 716.

C. CAPITAL OR DEPOSIT FUND, SURPLUS, RESERVES AND INTEREST IN SAME.

Distributive shares in reserve and surrender values, see post § 16.
Mutual or co-operative associations and companies, see post § 17.
Receivership and proceedings for winding up business, see ante § 12.

Reserve fund of companies organized for automobile insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. III, § 3.
Statutory provisions for capital stock of life and casualty insurance companies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. I, § 3.
Statutory regulations as to subscriptions of capital stock, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. I, § 5.
Computation of amount of reserve fund required, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. I, § 8.
Unlawful use of reserve funds, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. IV, § 4.
Penalty for misrepresentation of capital stock, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. IV, § 2.
Statutory provisions for securing dividends and interest, from stocks, bonds and mortgages deposited with state treasurer, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. I, § 4.
Necessity of deposit with state treasurer of security for liability of insurance company, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. I, §§ 3, 7.
Impairment of capital sufficient to entitle commissioner of insurance to cancel company's authority, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. I, § 8.
Capital required of insurance company insuring railway employees against loss of position or death or disability, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. I, § 15.
Capital stock of companies organized for automobile insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. III, § 2.

¶ 53. How. St. § 4325, requires an insurance company formed under the laws of a foreign government to make a deposit in this state in order to do business here, and a deposit in another state of the Union will not suffice.—Employers' Liability Assur. Co. v. Insurance Com'r, 64 Mich. 614.

¶ 54. The supreme court will not order the state treasurer to deliver to an insurance company that has ceased to do business the securities deposited with him under How. St. § 4224, where, from the company's showing, its death claims and outstanding policies approximate the amount deposited, where the death claims may have increased largely since such showing, and where policyholders desire to have a hearing; since section 4227 expressly provides that the securities shall remain and shall only be withdrawn on the order of the supreme court, or when the company shall show to the satisfaction of the secretary of state and the state treasurer that the risks, etc., are less than the securities.—Imperial Life Ins. Co. v. Hambitzer, 95 Mich. 513.

¶ 55. Order granted permitting a life insurance company which had ceased doing business to withdraw its surplus from state treasury to pay claims; each claim to be certified to by the state insurance commissioner as legal, and when so certified to be paid by state treasurer directly to claimant or his authorized attorney upon surrender of policy duly receipted.—Imperial Life Ins. Co. v. Hambitzer (not reported).

¶ 56. An arrangement by which the directors of a manufacturers' mutual fire insurance company (under Laws 1883, Act No. 78), which provides no method for raising funds to meet the obligations of the company other than by the payment of cash premiums and assessments upon the deposit notes or agreements of policyholders, execute a bond to the company for the purpose of establishing a reserve guaranty fund to its assets, to be drawn upon by the board of directors whenever they shall deem it necessary to protect policyholders from assessment upon their deposit notes, and which makes the obligors creditors of the company to the amount of all such advances, is void.—Goss v. Peters, 98 Mich. 112.

¶ 57. As all members of the company must be held to have had knowledge of the law, and of the articles of association, subject to which every policy is issued and received, and to have known that any such management of the company would be unlawful, the obligors are not estopped from raising the question of ultra vires in a suit upon a bond executed to the company by the directors for the purpose of establishing a reserve guaranty fund.—Goss v. Peters, 98 Mich. 112.

Distribution of shares in fund or reserve of mutual or co-operative association or company, see post § 17.

Unearned premiums and surrender values, see post XII, E.
Taxation of reserve fund of insurance company, see Taxes, II.

¶ 58. In an action on a Free Tontine policy to recover a sum of money as cash surplus which had been set forth in an illustration blank by an agent of the defendant, such fixed sum cannot be recovered where from the rest of the blank it appears that such sum was based on the past earning capacity of the company and was merely suggestive as to what the amount would be upon that basis at the end of the tontine period, and that the future surplus would depend on future experience. —O'Brien v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of the United States, 173 Mich. 432.

§ 17. Mutual or co-operative associations and companies.

Public regulations and licensing of mutual and co-operative associations, see ante § 6.

¶ 59. Upon the final dissolution of a mutual benefit association, or upon its incapacity to continue business and virtual death, each member at that time is entitled to share equally in the fund belonging to his class or division.—Stamm v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 65 Mich. 317.

Statutory provisions covering auditors, abstractors, counselors and analysis of insurance companies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. III, §§ 19-22.

¶ 60. An insurer is not bound by the action of an agent neither authorized nor held out as having authority. The same laws of agency apply to insurers as to other persons.—Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467.

¶ 61. Powers possessed by agents of insurance companies, like those of agents of any other corporations, are not governed by any individual principle, but are to be interpreted in accordance with the general law of agency.—Fisk v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 270.

¶ 62. There is no distinction between mutual fire insurance companies and stock companies as to their responsibilities for the acts of their agents taking applications for insurance.—Blake v. Farmers' Mut. Lightning Protected Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, 194 Mich. 589.

¶ 63. Where a local agent has authority to issue policies himself, the applicant for insurance, in the absence of fraud, may generally deal with him as he would with the officers of the insurance company, and rely on his conduct as he could on theirs.—Richards v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 420.

¶ 66. Comp. L. 1897, § 7246, relating to the powers of agents of foreign fire insurance companies, does not operate to increase an agent's authority, and make the principal liable for his representations as to authority. —Barry & Finan Lumber Co. v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 42.

"Inspector" as agent, see also Agency ¶ 8.

Statutory definition of insurance agent, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. III, § 1.

Statutory definition of general, district, state or special agent, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. III, § 1.

Residence as requisite for issuance of agent's license, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. III, § 3.

¶ 67. The agent who takes a risk and issues a policy is a general agent for the insurance company.—Crystal Ice Co. v. United Surety Co., 159 Mich. 102.

¶ 68. A fire insurance agent who places insurance through another agent in another company for which he is not authorized to act is the agent of that company under Comp. L. 1897, § 7246, providing among other things that the term "agent" shall include any other person who shall aid in the transaction of business, although all his dealings are carried on with that company's agent only.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 460.

See also post ¶¶ 97, 102-104, 109, 258, 524.

Insurance adjusters, see post § 21.

Admissibility of evidence as to capacity of agent, see post ¶ 1210.

¶ 69. So far as an insurance agent acts as insurance broker he is agent for the insured and not the insurer.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502.

¶ 70. A person applied for insurance to certain agents. The latter could not place the whole amount in companies which they themselves represented, and went therefore to another agent from whom they obtained the rest, making certain oral representations to him as to the condition of the property to be insured. The assured had nothing to do with these negotiations. Held, in an action on a policy thus obtained at second hand, that the persons obtaining it were agents of the insurer rather than of the assured, and that their oral representations, if false, could not avoid the policy.—McGraw v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145.

¶ 72. An insurance broker was the agent of the insurer and not of the insured, and had no authority to cancel and surrender the policy, where, in an action against a fire-insurance company for loss by fire, previous to such loss the company had canceled such policy, but had notified only the broker of such cancellation; even though it should be held that such broker, in securing such insurance without the knowledge of the insured, to take the place of policies previously canceled for nonpayment of premium, had acted as agent of the insured.—O'Neill v. Northern Assur. Co., 145 Mich. 516.

¶ 73. A solicitor of insurance who was informed by the manager of a fire insurance company that policies would be written for him and a commission allowed, and who accordingly solicited the policy in suit and others and received policies and received premiums and forwarded them to the company, was the agent of the company and not of the plaintiff.—Improved Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. F. Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 256.

¶ 74. Fire insurance agents who place excess insurance with agents of other companies are held to represent the insurer rather than the insured.—Bliss v. Potomac Fire Ins. Co., 134 Mich. 212.

¶ 75. The term "agent" within terms of a policy includes a fire insurance company's agent who writes exchange insurance and places it with the insuring company through another agent authorized to do business for that company.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 460.

Authority of adjusting agents in general, see Agency § 37.

Statutory provisions relative to adjusters, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. III, §§ 15-18.

¶ 76. Negotiations in regard to the value of the property destroyed and an agreement to submit the value of a building to arbitration are within the general authority of an insurance adjuster, and, in the absence of notice of a limited authority, the assured may rely upon such general authority and act accordingly.—Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 161, adhered to on rehearing, 87 Mich. 428.

¶ 77. A fire insurance adjuster who is sent to adjust a loss has prima facie authority to deny the liability of the insurer under the policy.—Popa v. Northern Ins. Co. of New York, 192 Mich. 237.

¶ 79. A provision in proofs of loss of property by fire that it is understood that the furnishing of blanks to the assured and the preparing of proofs by an adjuster or any agent of the company is not any waiver of any rights of the company cannot reasonably be construed to be notice that the general power of an adjuster to agree to the amount of the loss is curtailed.—Wilms v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 194 Mich. 656.

¶ 80. A fire insurance adjuster who investigates a loss, in the absence of the disclosure of limitations on his authority, may make an agreement with the insured as to the amount of the loss and the liability of the insurer.—Wilms v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 194 Mich. 656.

¶ 81. In an action on an insurance policy, the acts of an adjuster of the insurance company whose general authority was ample to adjust the loss, are binding upon the company, and where the adjuster and the plaintiff had agreed upon the amount of the loss this dispenses with the necessity for making formal proofs, and they will be deemed to have been waived.—Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 428.

Custom to control terms of agency contract, see Customs § 12.

¶ 82. The appointment of agents cannot be said as a matter of law to usually and rationally belong to the manager of a state branch of a life insurance company.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 136.

¶ 83. A general insurance agency so called, does not necessarily carry with it the authority to appoint special agents for the company.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 136.

¶ 84. There is no legal presumption that an inspector or superintendent of agencies of a life insurance company had authority to employ agents for the company and make contracts with them upon its behalf.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 136.

Modification, indorsements and renewals, see post § 25.
Limitations upon agent's authority, see post §§ 26, 27.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to authority of agents of insurer, see post § 297.
Authority of agent to reinstate, see post § 208.
Admissibility of evidence as to agents and their authority, see post § 306.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to agents and their authority, see post § 319.
Acts of agent amounting to cancellation, see post ¶ 529.
Authority of agents as question of law or fact, see post § 331.
Authority of agents to cancel policies, see post XII, A.
Authority of agents to waive forfeiture or breach of condition, see post XII, C.

¶ 85. The agent of an insurance company, in an oral explanation made by him as to the meaning of the terms employed in the forms of the company, will be regarded as speaking in the name of the company, especially when such terms relate to matters not generally understood; and when the applicant has reason to suppose that he has given the agent all the information desired, and as such it has been embodied in the proper form in the application, he will not be deprived of the indemnity the company contracted to give him, because of the unskilfulness, carelessness or fraud of the agent.—Aetna Live Stock, Fire & Tornado Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 21 Mich. 246.

¶ 86. Where a representation in an application for insurance was ambiguously expressed, and the applicant was, at the time of making it, assured by the agent who acted on behalf of the insurers, and who filled out the application, that it correctly embodied the oral statement made by the applicant to the agent, upon which assurance, under the circumstances of the case, the applicant might reasonably rely, the insurers will not be heard to say that the representations were not true, and thus, for that reason, avoid the policy.—Aetna Live Stock, Fire & Tornado Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 21 Mich. 246.

¶ 87. Where the secretary of an insurance company fills out an application for insurance the company is presumed to waive any statements of fact that are not inserted in the application and are not called for until after losses occur.—Tiefenthal v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 306.

¶ 88. Where a local agent has authority to issue policies himself, the applicant for insurance, in the absence of fraud, may generally deal with him as he would with the officers of the insurance company, and rely on his conduct as he could on theirs.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

Time for payment of premium or assessment in general, see post § 85.

¶ 89. A subagent employed by the agent of an insurance company to solicit applications for insurance, collect premiums and deliver policies has no general authority, by virtue of such employment, to give credit or receive anything but cash in payment.—Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Willets, 24 Mich. 268.

¶ 90. Where an insurance agent with no authority to give credit had delivered a policy before the premium was paid, but had accounted to the company for the premium, it was held that it was too late to object to the credit.—Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown v. Montague, 38 Mich. 548.

Changes and substitutions in subject-matter or policy, see post X.

¶ 91. Where a local agent has authority to issue insurance policies himself the insured, where no written indorsement consenting to additional insurance was required by the terms of the policy, is warranted in communicating with the company through its agent, and relying upon his representations.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 92. An agent's unsigned consent to additional insurance, where such consent is required by the policy to be in writing, can be upheld only on proof of authority to bind the insurers in that way, or upon such recognition or action by them as to amount to a ratification or estoppel.—Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467.

Provisions in policy limiting authority, see post § 27.
Right to insure own property, see post § 28.
Provision in policy prohibiting waiver by agent of condition or warranty, see post § 197.
Authority of agent to waive warranty or condition, see post §§ 196-201.
Authority of agent to make waiver of proof of loss, see post § 242.
Authority of agent to reinstate, see post § 208.
Estoppel to deny authority of agent, see post § 30.

¶ 93. An insurance agent can only bind the company he represents when he acts under real or apparent authority.—Barry v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 424.

¶ 94. A local agent and collector, who is also a director of a mutual fire insurance company raising its money by assessments, has no authority to waive the provisions in the charter and by-laws requiring the written consent of the secretary of said company to the assignment of policies, or to waive the conditions of membership specified in said instruments.—Kamm & Schellinger Brewing Co. v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 606.

¶ 95. An agent cannot, by waiver, do for the insurer what the latter is unable by express contract to do for itself; he cannot, by waiver, invest the insured with an interest he does not own.—Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown v. Montague, 38 Mich. 548.

¶ 96. Where an insurance agent's written commission expressly excludes authority to insure manufactories and other special hazards, the mere circumstance that he acts as the company's local insurance agent is not tantamount to a declaration by the company that he has authority to insure every kind of property, and to exercise unlimited authority as to risks, modes and terms. By itself it could imply nothing more than authority to insure in the mode required by the company's charter, and to take such risks as the policies of the company in common use by its agents would warrant.—Reynolds v. Continental Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 131.

¶ 97. Mutual and stock fire insurance companies stand on the same basis as to their responsibility for acts of their agents in taking applications for insurance; and unless an applicant to a mutual company has actual knowledge of restrictions upon an agent's authority, the agent must be considered the agent of the company in receiving the application.—Russell v. Detroit Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 407.

Provisions in policy prohibiting waiver by agents of conditions or warranties, see post § 197.

¶ 98. The restrictions in policies of insurance upon the power of agents to deviate from their express terms generally apply only to those parts of the transaction which relate to the formation and continuance of the contract, and not to those which prescribe the condition of suit on the policy, such as notice, delivery of proofs or submission to examination.—O'Brien v. Ohio Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 131.

¶ 99. The insured is presumed to know, and is bound by, limitations expressed in the policy as to the authority of the insurer's agent.—Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 527.

¶ 101. Restrictions upon agent's authority, if contained in the policy alone and not in the application, cannot be construed to refer to his acts or knowledge prior to the issue of the policy.—Crouse v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 249.

¶ 102. A policy written by an agent for an insurance company upon his own property is not binding until it is approved by the company.—Zimmermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 399.

¶ 103. Authority from a general agent of an insurance company to a local agent to write a policy upon his own goods "in the usual way" does not obviate the necessity for an acceptance of the risk by the insurer, where none of the terms of the contract is agreed upon, although there be a custom among agents in the locality to insure their own property by merely making a memorandum of the risk, reporting it to the company, issuing a policy accordingly, and spreading it upon an insurance register.—Zimmermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 399

¶ 104. An agent must not be personally interested adversely to his principal. An agent for receiving applications for insurance ceases to be an agent so long as he acts in a matter in which his personal interest is concerned. If he applies for insurance on his own property, he is, as to that, not the company's agent for the purpose of accepting the application and closing a contract.—Zimmermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 399.

§ 29. Effect of notice to or knowledge of agent.

Presumption as to insurance company having knowledge of its agent, see post ¶ 1178.

Notice to agent as notice to insurer sufficient to ground estoppel, see post § 176.

General doctrine that notice to agent is notice to principal, see Agency, II, E.

Notice to principal to or through agent, see Agency, II, D.

¶ 105. Notice to the agent of a fire insurance company of the removal of a stock of goods to a new location is notice to the company.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 460.

¶ 106. The knowledge of an insurance agent is that of his company.—Crouse v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 249; Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 161; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Cartier, 89 Mich. 41; Haire v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 481; Michigan Shingle Co. v. State Investment & Ins. Co., 94 Mich. 389.

¶ 107. Notice to the agent that gunpowder was to be kept on the premises in violation of the provisions of the policy was notice to the principal.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 108. The knowledge of an agent of a mutual fire insurance company of the untruthfulness of answers in an application must be regarded as the knowledge of the company.—Blake v. Farmers' Mut. Lightning Protected Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, 194 Mich. 589.

¶ 109. Where the same person is at once agent for the insurance company and for the policyholder, the latter is bound by notice to the agent of the cancellation of his policy, and by the return or credit of the premium to the agent.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502.

§ 30. Estoppel to deny or assert agent's authority.

Estoppel to deny agent's authority to modify policy, see also ante ¶ 92.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 110. An applicant for fire insurance told the agent that he meant to obtain further insurance in other companies and asked him so to notify the company he represented. The agent replied that it would be needless to do so until such insurance was obtained. The applicant had no notice of any limitations upon the agent's authority. Held, that the company was estopped from denying liability on the ground that its policies forbade additional insurance without its consent.—Kitchen v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 135.

¶ 111. When the agent of an insurance company has delivered a policy, or a renewal receipt, with his name written upon it, and as a completed instrument, neither he nor the company can afterwards object that it was not countersigned by him.—Hibernia Ins. Co. v. O'Connor, 29 Mich. 241.

§ 31. Personal liability of agent to insured or applicant.

Anti-rebate laws governing solicitation, see ante § 4.

Liability of agent for repayment of premium on policy not conformable to contract, see Agency ¶ 469.

Crime of unlawfully soliciting insurance, see Crimes § 97.

Statutory prohibition against rebates of premium or agent's commission, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. IV, § 6.

¶ 112. An insurance company that has ceased to do business is not liable on a policy which persons who have ceased to be its agents have promised to renew. But if the person to whom the promise is made did not know of the revocation of their authority, he may, perhaps, have a cause of action against them.—Montross v. Roger Williams Ins. Co., 49 Mich. 477.

§ 32. Compensation of agents.

Anti-rebate laws, see ante § 4.

Compensation agreement with agent, see also Agency ¶ 541.

¶ 113. A contract between an insurance company and a state agent which agreed that if, during the five years it was to continue, the company should allow "under similar circumstances and conditions" any other state agent compensation in excess of that fixed in such contract, he should be entitled to a like increase, contemplated similarity, not identity, of circumstances and conditions. —Gray v. Josselyn, 117 Mich. 23.

¶ 114. The question as to whether or not an insurance agent is entitled to commission only when he obtains and presents an acceptable application depends upon the nature of the contract.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 136.

¶ 115. Where an insurance company breaches a contract of employment of an agent on commission the agent should not be permitted to recover commissions in addition to the value of his services.—Midland Operating Co. v. Miller, 197 Mich. 567.

¶ 116. Where an insurance agent performs work claimed not to be a part of his contract, and at no time, until sued for advancements, makes any claim that such work is not included in his contract or that he is entitled to extra compensation therefor, he cannot recover additional compensation, unless he is able to show some agreement, express or implied, that he is entitled thereto.—Midland Operating Co. v. Miller, 197 Mich. 567.

¶ 117. Where a contract for an insurance agency provides that the agent shall devote his best energies to the interests of the company in developing and maintaining business in the allotted territory, and, on request, investigate, report upon, and render such other services as the company may require to effect the discharge of any claims presented by policyholders in such territory, services in investigating claims are covered by such contract so as not to warrant additional compensation therefor, in the absence of modification of the contract.—Midland Operating Co. v. Miller, 197 Mich. 567.

¶ 118. Requiring of bonds by an insurance company from solicitors hired by the manager of a local office, and selected by him, is not an admission that it had other contract relations with such solicitors, involving a promise to pay for their services, made by the local manager, whose relations with the company were on the commission basis.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 149 Mich. 562.

¶ 119. T., an insurance company's general agent by whose contract a commission was to be paid to him on all premium notes or loans allowed by the company in payment of any part of the first year's premium on any policy after the policy had been in force for five full years, formed a partnership with another agent, P., assigning to him an undivided half of all commissions due or to become due to T. under his contract after a certain date which preceded by one day the time when the partnership agreement was to become operative. The insurance company then made with T. and P. a contract containing provisions as to commissions similar to those in T.'s original contract, and a further provision that "on first year's premiums or deferred portions thereof" collected on and after the date when the partnership agreement became operative, on policies issued prior to that date upon applications secured by T., the company would pay commissions which should belong exclusively to T. Eight months afterwards T. transferred to P. his interest in all commissions to which he might be entitled, excepting only such commissions or share of commissions as might thereafter become due on premium loans accepted by the company in part payment of first year's premiums. Commissions becoming due from the company after said transfer on two policies issued while the first agreement with T. was in force, upon which the company had accepted premium notes representing part of the first year's premiums, T. sued the company for the whole of said commission. The question being whether T. was entitled to the whole or whether P. was entitled to one-half, held, that the three instruments were to be construed together; that the language of the clause reserving to T. commissions on all "first year's premiums or deferred portions thereof" was not ambiguous; that the unpaid portion of the premium which was to furnish, when paid, a basis for commission, was a deferred or postponed portion of the premium, and that the true construction entitled T. to commissions on premiums represented by premium notes and thereafter paid.—Thomson v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 105 Mich. 358.

Action for premium or assessment, see post §§ 89-94.
Actions and suits on policy or under it, see post XX.

¶ 120. Where an action is commenced by an insurance agent against the company for renewal commissions, recovery may be had for only such payments on account of renewals as are due at the time of commencing the suit.—Kyselka v. Northern Assur. Co. of Michigan, 194 Mich. 430.

¶ 121. In an action by an employer against an agent and his sureties on a bond to recover a balance due on account for advancements over commissions for selling health and accident insurance, where a claim of set-off was interposed by defendant for damages because plaintiff had prevented the performance of his contract, held that an instruction, regardless whether on the theory that defendant was seeking to recover on quantum meruit or on the theory of damages for the breach of the contract, was erroneous in not permitting the jury to find what the services performed were reasonably worth and in allowing recovery by defendant only of the amount of plaintiff's claim.—Midland Operating Co. v. Miller, 197 Mich. 567.

¶ 122. In an action for commissions as an insurance agent, evidence that plaintiff solicited for the defendant company, but that he was acting under a contract negotiated with certain managers of a branch office of such company who had no authority to issue policies, but merely to obtain and submit applications to the head office, and who were paid commissions and paid plaintiff, does not establish an employment by the company.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 136.

¶ 123. In an action upon an insurance agent's bond, where the question in dispute was whether or not the company through its state agent had agreed that the bond should be discharged and a "new arrangement" should be made, an instruction stating in effect that unless the company annulled and surrendered the bond and consented to release the agent he would not be released and the bondsmen would be liable, was not open to the objection that the jury were required to find against the defendant unless they found that the company canceled the bond by affirmative formal action; where the court also stated that it was not necessary to bring notice to the home office and that the company was charged to receive notice through its state agent that the agency had ceased.—Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 119 Mich. 171.

¶ 124. A declaration in an action by a foreign insurance company on a bond given to it by its agent need not aver that plaintiff has a license from the Commissioner of Insurance of Michigan to carry on its business in Michigan.—Prussian Nat. Ins. Co. v. Eisenhardt, 153 Mich. 198.

¶ 126. An insurance agent who was chargeable with $2 for each application obtained by him, and who obtained 199 applications and forwarded $61, was not estopped from showing that most of the applications were received from subagents who were entitled to the application fee, because he signed each of the applications as agent and thus led defendant to believe he had obtained them; it appearing that there was a disputed question as to whether the defendant had not been sufficiently informed that the liability for such fees was denied, and continued to employ plaintiff thereafter.—Lee v. Huron Indemnity Union, 135 Mich. 291.

¶ 127. The alleged possession of a blank contract form, apparently designed for contracts directly with the insurance company, claimed to have been given an insurance solicitor by a local manager of the company, who denies all knowledge of it, is not evidence of such a holding out of authority in the local manager as would render the company liable to the solicitor for commissions in a suit by the latter on a contract made with such manager.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 149 Mich. 562.

¶ 128. Testimony consisting of written papers, such as applications, book entries, a list of agents, and advertising matter bearing the name of a solicitor as agent, and kept in the home office of an insurance company, together with credits and payments listed to such solicitor as agent in the books kept at a local office, by a representative of the company who acted as bookkeeper, the office being in charge of a local manager who did business for the company on a commission basis, is not sufficient evidence that the company considered the solicitor as its agent, and thereby ratified a contract made by the local manager with the solicitor.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 149 Mich. 562.

¶ 129. Where an insurance solicitor enters into a contract with the local manager and the superintendent of agents of an insurance company, who were not authorized to bind the company to the obligation of paying commissions or salaries to hired solicitors, he cannot recover commissions from the company unless there appears to have been such a holding out of authority in these men by the company as to induce the solicitor to rely upon it.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 149 Mich. 562.

¶ 130. In an action by an agent for commissions, the fact that an insurance company filed a list of its agents containing the name of a solicitor with the state commissioner of insurance, as required by statute, is not sufficient to show that a contract made by a local agent of the company with the solicitor, under which the latter was to receive certain commissions, was the contract of the company.—Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 149 Mich. 562.

¶ 131. In an action by an employer against an agent and his sureties on a bond to recover a balance due on account for advancements for selling health and accident insurance, where a claim of set-off was interposed by defendant for damages because plaintiff had prevented the performance of the contract, evidence held insufficient to show breach of such contract by plaintiff.—Midland Operating Co. v. Miller, 197 Mich. 567.

IV. INSURABLE SUBJECTS AND INTERESTS THEREIN.

§ 35. In general; necessity of subject and interest therein.

Interest in property, see post § 36.
Persons in particular status, right or relation, see post §§ 37-43.
Interest in life, accident or casualty, see post § 44.
Insurance after loss, see post § 45.
Assignment to persons without insurable interest, see post § 120.
Admissibility of evidence as to interest of insured, see post § 307.
Property, life or interest covered and risk or hazard insured against, see post VII.
Gambling contracts in general, see Gambling Contracts.
Necessity of averring interest of insured in declaring upon policy of insurance, see 1916 C. C. Rule 22, § 5.

¶ 132. A contract of insurance upon a life in which the beneficiary has no insurable interest is void as against public policy, being a wager upon the life of assured.—Smith v. Pinch, 80 Mich. 332.

¶ 133. A wager policy, that is to say, one upon a risk wherein the assured has no interest, is void as contrary to public policy.—O'Hara v. Carpenter, 23 Mich. 410; Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 15.

¶ 134. It is immaterial that the insurer granted the policy on a risk in which the assured had no interest with full knowledge of all the facts; the policy of the law does not admit of such insurance.—Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown v. Montague, 38 Mich. 548.

¶ 135. Policies of insurance founded upon mere hope and expectation and without some interest in the property, or the life insured, are objectionable as a species of gambling, and are called wagering policies.—Crossman v. American Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., 198 Mich. 304.

Necessity for insurable interest in general, see ante § 35.
Persons in particular status, right or relation as affecting insurable interest in property, see post §§ 37-43.
"Unconditional and sole ownership" clause in standard fire insurance policy, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
Uninsurable or excepted property under provision in standard fire policy, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 137. The controlling consideration in determining the question of insurable interest in property insured against loss by fire is not what is the title of the insured, or whether he has a lien thereon or possession, but rather, will he be damaged pecuniarily by its loss.—Crossman v. American Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., 198 Mich. 304.

¶ 138. The owner of the record title has an insurable interest.—Quackenbush v. Citizens' Ins. Co. of Missouri, 150 Mich. 555.

¶ 139. The term "owner" in an application for fire insurance is comprehensive and includes any insurable interest which entitles the applicant to possession and use and hence covers a life estate.—Convis v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Calhoun County, 127 Mich. 616.

¶ 140. An insurance policy may be taken jointly to secure property owned in severalty.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 15.

¶ 141. A policy of insurance on property is good for all the owners for whom it is made though they have several as well as joint interests, and when it all belongs to the parties insured it makes no necessary difference to the insurer how their interests are apportioned.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 15.

Husband or wife, see post § 38.
Parties to executory or conditional sales, see post § 39.
Vendors or purchasers of realty, see post § 40.
Mortgagees, mortgagors or foreclosure purchasers, see post § 41.
Partnership interests, see post § 42.
Agents, bailees, carriers and persons in possession, see post § 43.
Necessity for insurable interest in general, see ante § 35.

¶ 142. A minor may have his property insured.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 143. An assignee under the assignment law (Pub. L. 1879, p. 181) is not obliged to wait until he has filed his bond before he can insure the property assigned.—Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14.

¶ 144. The insurable interest of the assignee of an insolvent debtor is not defeated by the fact that the policies which went with the assignment covered the loss on the property; he could take out additional insurance subject to the customary conditions.—Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14.

Insurable interest in life of spouse, see post § 44.

General law of husband and wife, see Husband and Wife.

¶ 145. A husband has an insurable interest in real property held under a contract running to himself and wife jointly, and the amount of his recovery does not depend upon the loss to his individual interest, but on the damage accruing to whatever interests are covered by the policy, where the wife authorized or ratified his act in procuring the insurance.—Miotke v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 166.

¶ 147. Under a policy providing that the interest of the assured at time of loss must be that of owner or mortgagee, a husband who has procured insurance upon buildings and afterward conveyed to his wife the land on which they stand cannot recover for a loss on the ground that the buildings were upon the homestead and that he therefore retained an insurable interest.—Glaze v. Three Rivers Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 349.

General law of sales of personalty, see Sales.

¶ 148. The seller of saloon fixtures under a conditional sale contract reserving title in itself until payment has an insurable title and interest.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 142 Mich. 29.

¶ 149. One who contracts to sell lumber and receives payment therefor based on a scaling he claims to be incorrect, and who forbids the removal thereof by the purchaser until a new scale is made, has an insurable interest in the lumber, since the title thereto, or at least to that portion which had not been scaled or paid for, remained in the seller.—Fuhrman v. Sun Ins. Office of London, 180 Mich. 439.

See also post ¶ 707.

General rights of purchasers and sellers of realty, see Vendor and Purchaser.

¶ 151. The vendee in a land contract has an insurable interest in a building he is erecting on the land.—Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 184.

¶ 152. The vendor in a land contract, under which the vendee has taken possession, has an insurable interest in a building on the land, and, if such interest is insured understandingly, the insurer is estopped from denying its liability on the ground of breach of a warranty of sole and unconditional ownership.—Hamilton v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 535.

¶ 153. Where the owners in fee of a house insured in defendant company sell the house on a land contract, and the vendee in performance of the agreement to keep the property insured for the benefit of the vendor, pays the vendor the premium on the unexpired portion of the policy, the insurance company consenting to the sale with knowledge the vendor is to retain the policy recognizes that vendor retains an insurable interest.—Smith v. American Insurance Co., 177 Mich. 123.

¶ 155. Where a grantee contracts to pay to his grantor whatever, beyond a certain amount, he realizes on sale of the property conveyed, and where the conveyance is not in its nature a mortgage, the grantor has no insurable interest.—Balow v. Teutonia Farmers' Mutual F. Ins. Co., 77 Mich. 540.

¶ 156. One having an option for the purchase of property for which he has paid a considerable sum has an insurable interest therein.—Crossman v. American Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., 198 Mich. 304.

§ 41. ——Mortgagees, mortgagors or foreclosure purchasers.

Provision in standard form of fire insurance covering interest of mortgagee, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 157. A mortgagee has an equitable interest in the loss recovered under a policy effected by a purchaser from the mortgagor, containing a "loss payable clause" in the mortgagee's favor.—Beistle v. McConnell, 141 Mich. 463.

¶ 158. Where a mortgagor's covenant to insure is not kept the mortgagee may insure and add the premium, if fair and reasonable, to his debt.—Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

¶ 159. It seems that a foreclosure purchaser has an insurable interest in the mortgaged premises even before the time for redemption has expired; but, though he is the mortgagee, he cannot add the cost of insurance to the sum required for redemption.—Walton v. Hollywood, 47 Mich. 385.

General law of partnership, see Partnership.

¶ 160. One partner may insure his interest in partnership property in his own name.—McPhee v. Millers' Nat. Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 215.

¶ 161. An insurance of partnership property by one partner in his own name cannot be made to embrace the interest of the other partner, though it was written by the agent with full knowledge of the facts.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 162. If one partner insure the partnership property against loss by fire in his own name only, and it does not appear that the insurance was really intended for the benefit of the firm, the premium paid from the partnership funds, and the transactions subsequently ratified by the other partner, the policy will cover only the individual interest of the party insuring.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 163. Insurance by one partner in his own name will perhaps cover partnership property where the partner making the insurance has made advances to the firm, which, by agreement, are to constitute a lien on the property insured.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 164. Where a policy when made covers the interest of one partner only, the remaining interest cannot be brought within it by his subsequently becoming the owner of the whole.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

General law as to rights of agents, bailees and carriers, see respectively Agency, Bailments and Carriers.

Effect of provision for insurance upon consignment for sale, see Brokers § 2.

¶ 165. The custodians of property, such as factors, agents or consignees, can have it insured for the benefit of present owners or notwithstanding changes of ownership.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 15; and see Perrott v. Shearer, 17 Mich. 48.

§ 44. Interest in life, accident or casualty.

Right of husband to insure his life for benefit of his wife or children, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. II, §§ 24-26.

¶ 166. One who is dependent upon another for his or her support may have an insurable interest in the life of the person upon whom he is so dependent.—Berdan v. Milwaukee Mut. Life Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 396.

¶ 167. An insurance policy issued for the benefit of a person who is neither an heir nor a relation of the assured, and whose interest is not promoted by the latter's continuing alive, is in the nature of a wager policy, and void as against the public interests.—Mutual Benefit Ass'n v. Hoyt, 46 Mich. 473.

¶ 168. A sister has at the common law an insurable interest in her brother's life.—Hosmer v. Welch, 107 Mich. 470.

¶ 169. Where, by the by-laws of an insurance company, children may be named as beneficiaries in a policy on the lives of their parents they may recover without otherwise showing insurable interests.—Voorheis v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc., 91 Mich. 469.

¶ 170. The term "family" as found in Comp. L., ch. 94 (How. St., ch. 118), will cover a case where the insured and the beneficiary were an old man and a young woman who were not related, but had lived for many years in the same household, and had treated each other as father and daughter, and such young woman had an insurable interest in his life.—Carmichael v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 494.

¶ 171. A married woman may take out and own as her separate property an insurance policy on her husband's life; and if she dies before he does, the policy may be payable to their children or to the children's guardian (How. St. §§ 4238, 6300, 6301).—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

¶ 172. A person was injured on a railroad, which had a policy covering such accidents, in an indemnity company. Shortly thereafter it took out a policy in defendant casualty company. Suit was brought for the injury and the railroad sent the declaration to an officer of the indemnity company who sent it to their general attorneys who were also local attorneys for defendant, and the latter, assuming that the casualty company was interested in the suit, sent it to plaintiff and directed him to appear in the case, which he did. Later he corresponded with the indemnity company and also sent his bill to it before he brought suit against the casualty company. It appeared that the casualty company was not the successor of the indemnity company. Held that his contract was not with defendant and since the latter had no interest in the case he could not recover.—Lillis v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 131 Mich. 301.

¶ 173. One has an insurable interest in the life of another where she has lived in his household from early youth to the age of thirty-six, the two treating each other as father and daughter although not related by blood or marriage.—Carmichael v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 494.

¶ 174. Where a life insurance company concedes its liability upon a policy payable to a specified person if surviving, otherwise to the legal representatives of the insured, and pays the amount of the policy into court, the administrator cannot resist payment to the beneficiary named on the ground that he had no insurable interest in the life of the insured.—Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Catlin, 106 Mich. 138.

¶ 175. Where the first premium is paid by insured with a check drawn in her name by her agent who was also named as a beneficiary, and subsequent premiums were paid in the same way, the policy is not a wager contract even if the beneficiary has no insurable interest in the life of the insured; and this is especially so if the policy provides that in case of the beneficiary not surviving the insured it is to be paid to the estate of the latter.—Heinlein v. Imperial Life Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 250.

¶ 176. A beneficiary who was generally known as the nephew of the insured and was described as such in the application and who was dependent upon such insured, though not a relative, was eligible to be named as a beneficiary in a policy issued by a mutual company organized under Wisconsin laws of 1895, chap. 175, § 3, providing that any member shall have the right to name as his beneficiary any person having an insurable interest in his life, and under laws of the order containing a like provision; and the policy was valid notwithstanding the misstatement in the application.—Berdan v. Milwaukee Mut. Life Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 396.

Assignment after loss, see post § 123.

Payment of overdue premium note after loss, see post ¶ 613.

¶ 177. Public policy will not permit an officer of an insurance company to waive any of its charter provisions so as to place in effect a policy of insurance on a building that has been destroyed.—Harper v. Michigan Mut. Tornado, Cyclone & Windstorm Ins. Co., 178 Mich. 459.

¶ 178. A contract of insurance on a vessel cannot be made subsequent to its loss where the owner knows of the loss.—Gauntlett v. Sea Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 504.

¶ 179. Contracts of insurance, so far as the public is concerned, stand upon no basis different from other contracts.—Armstrong v. Western Manufacturers' Mut. Ins. Co., 95 Mich. 137.

¶ 180. An insurance contract is an agreement by which one party, for a consideration, promises to make a certain payment of money upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest.—Rensenhouse v. Seeley, 72 Mich. 603.

¶ 181. A contract of insurance on buildings is personal and not real; and the circumstance that the liability to pay is made to depend on an event happening to real property in Michigan does not make it a Michigan contract, or in any legal sense make Michigan the place of performance by the insurance company; nor does the fact that the contractee is a Michigan corporation impress upon the contract the quality of locality so as to cause it to be affected in point of law by the Michigan laws relating to business done in Michigan by agents of foreign companies.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 182. Insurance being indispensable to the business interests of the country and beneficial to all classes is to be properly protected. Therefore a person entering into a contract for insurance must be presumed competent to contract and to understand the contract, especially when expressed in unambiguous terms; and unless some imposition has been practiced to prevent it, and he is not shown to be unable to read, he must be presumed to have read the paper he has signed.—Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 398.

Application prepared by agent of insurer, see post §§ 193-195.
Formation of contracts in general by proposal and acceptance, see Contracts, III.

¶ 183. A person applying for insurance on property is not required by law to explain the exact state of the title nor the precise nature of his interest in it, if he is not distinctly required to do so by the company.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 15.

¶ 184. A written application for insurance, the policy issued thereon, and the note given by the assured in payment, are parts of the same transaction, and should be construed together in determining the rights of the parties.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

¶ 185. The sending and retention of an application do not constitute a contract of insurance; acceptance on the insurer's part is necessary. In a case where no time was fixed in the application from which the policy was to run, and where the insurer was not fully informed as to the character and nature of the risk, and did not know the names of the parties to be insured, it was held that the contract was not complete.—Faugner v. Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 86 Mich. 536.

¶ 186. Application was made for insurance on a house and its contents. The company asked the cost value of the property, and accepted an answer giving an aggregate valuation. Held, that it thereby waived a separate valuation of the house.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103.

Construction and interpretation of contract or policy, see post §§ 65-70.

¶ 187. Questions and answers in an application for insurance should be construed liberally in favor of the assured.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306; Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 290.

¶ 188. The word "or" in a question in an application for life insurance "Have you ever had chronic or persistent cough or hoarseness?" is held not disjunctive but expository of the preceding word.—Blumenthal v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co., 134 Mich. 216.

¶ 189. "Attendance by a physician," in the meaning of an application for insurance, must be considered as referring to attendance for some sickness of importance, and not for a mere temporary indisposition.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 190. To have been "attended by a physician," or to have "consulted one professionally," within those terms as used in an application for life insurance, there must have been an attendance or consultation with reference to some disease or ailment of a serious character, affecting the person's sound bodily health, and not in relation to a mere temporary indisposition, or an ailment trivial in its nature, such as all persons are liable to who are nevertheless considered to be in sound health generally.—Plumb v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 94.

§ 49. Necessity and sufficiency of delivery.

Delivery and acceptance of instruments in general, see Execution of Instruments, III.
Delivery or transfer of policy only as gift, see Gifts ¶ 64.

¶ 191. A policy is sufficiently delivered where the agent issues it to replace one that is canceled, acting under direction to keep property covered, and advancing the premium, retains the policy as custodian until insured should call for it.—Dibble v. Northern Assur. Co., 70 Mich. 1.

¶ 192. Where the application for a policy of insurance stated that the policy was not to take effect until delivered and the first premium paid while the health of the applicant was in the same condition as described in the application, and it appeared that the policy was sent to the district manager in the usual course of business and by him forwarded to the agent who had taken the application but the applicant had been killed in the meantime, held, there being no delivery the policy was void.—Bowen v. Prudential Ins. Co., 178 Mich. 63.

¶ 193. The applicant for insurance in his application agreed that the policy should not be in force until delivered during his lifetime, while in good health, and until the first premium should be paid in full. The policy was not delivered until after the applicant's death. The company in refusing to send proof of death blanks to the widow stated in a letter that there was no contract of insurance, since the policy was never delivered in the applicant's lifetime. Held, the letter did not waive the defense of nondelivery.—Dennis v. Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 594.

¶ 194. Where dealings are had exclusively with the insurance agent, his delivery of the policy is binding on the company, even though it be not countersigned as required by their rules. Delivery is a waiver of the formal condition.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

¶ 195. It is sufficient delivery of an insurance policy to leave it in the hands of the agents of the company, if they are willing to retain it, subject to the order of a third person, even though he does not call for it.—Home Ins. Co. of Columbus, Ohio v. Curtis, 32 Mich. 402.

¶ 197. Where the secretary of a mutual accident company indorses an acceptance upon the application, and fills out the policy with intent to have it take immediate effect, and causes it to be mailed to the applicant as of force and effect at that time, the company cannot be heard to say that there was no delivery, though the policy did not reach its destination until after the death of the applicant.—Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 102 Mich. 289.

¶ 198. Where one applies to an insurance agent for a certain amount of insurance on specified property, neither companies nor rate being mentioned, and where, though the agent says he will issue the policies at once, they are not delivered until several days thereafter, during which time the property is destroyed, they being, however, signed before the fire, held, that there is a valid contract with each company in which the agent issues a policy, as he binds both parties in selecting the companies and distributing the risk.—Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 482.

¶ 199. The agent of an insurance company wrote a policy and forwarded it to one S., that it might be tendered to plaintiff in renewal of a former policy which had expired. The property covered by the policy having been burned in the meantime, the agent, on Sunday, telegraphed S. not to deliver the policy, and on the same day S. informed plaintiff that the policy had been received and recalled. On the next day plaintiff telegraphed S. to hold the policy. By mistake of a clerk they were delivered thereafter to insured. Held, that no contract of insurance was made.—New York Lumber & Woodworking Co. v. People's Fire Ins. Co., 96 Mich. 20.

¶ 200. An insurance agent was in the habit of issuing policies on blanks furnished by the company for that purpose. Being about to leave home, and anticipating a request for a renewal of a policy so issued by him which would expire before his return, the agent signed a policy in blank, and left it with his office boy to fill up, and deliver to the insured, if called for. On the day the old policy expired, an agent of the insured called at the office of the insurance agent to secure a renewal of the policy, and was informed by the office boy that it had been renewed, and was shown the entry of the new policy on the insurance register. Two days later the insurance agent returned, and, in obedience to a letter from the general agent of the insurance company, sent the new policy to the general agent for cancellation, but did not notify the insured until the morning after the fire, which occurred seven days after the policy had been sent to the general agent. No premium was paid, nor was any asked for by the insurance agent. Held, that a valid contract of insurance was made, though the policy remained in the agent's hands, as it was treated as delivered, and must be so held.—Lum v. United States F. Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 397.

Acceptance of instruments generally, see Execution of Instruments § 42.
Necessity for acceptance, see also ante ¶ 185.

¶ 201. The acceptance of an insurance policy concludes the bargain with the insurer and excludes any parol promises for the future inconsistent with it.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

¶ 202. An insurer is not required to inquire into the condition of the title to the insured property, or to inform the insured of all the conditions and terms of the policy to be issued, or to read it to him, or inform him of its contents; and, when the policy is accepted without objection, the insured is bound by its terms, unless the same are waived by the insurer.—Wierengo v. American Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 621.

Authority of agent for modifications, indorsements and renewals, see ante § 25.
Changes and substitutions in subject-matter, policy or rights, see post X.
Merger of prior agreements and understandings generally, see Contracts § 265.

¶ 203. Insurance may be effected or changed by parol unless the statute of frauds or some similar prohibition prevent. Oral and written bargains are the same in legal degree, and either may vary or discharge the other.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143; Roger Williams Ins. Co. v. Carrington, 43 Mich. 252.

¶ 206. When an oral contract for insurance has been merged in a policy delivered to and accepted by the insured, which policy however does not accord with the oral contract, the insured should apply for relief to a court of equity instead of ignoring the written contract and bringing action upon the parol agreement.—Kleis v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 117 Mich. 469.

¶ 207. One who receives a certificate of insurance that does not embody terms, but refers for them to the policy, is bound to take notice of the policy and of defects therein.—Barry v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 424.

§ 52. Designation or name of insured.

Designation or description in policy of beneficiary, see post § 110.
Name in which partnership property may be insured, see ante ¶ 161.

¶ 208. The validity of a policy is not affected by the fact that defendant's agent in filling out the application incorrectly stated the maiden name of a female applicant.—Plumb v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 94.

§ 53. Description of risk, subject, amount and liabilities for assessment or premium.

Sufficiency of description of property insured in attached rider, see post ¶ 239.
Risk or hazard insured against, see post VII.

¶ 209. An accident insurance policy is not invalidated by the fact that the insured was erroneously classed as "preferred," instead of "medium," in accordance with a request contained in his application, where, at the time of issuing the policy, the company had before it all the facts essential to enable it to make a proper classification.—Emlaw v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 554.

¶ 210. The term "good health," as used in a policy of life insurance, or in an application therefor, means a state of health free from any disease or ailment that affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously, and not a mere temporary indisposition, which does not tend to weaken or undermine the constitution of the insured.—Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513; Plumb v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 94.

¶ 211. Where a mutual insurance company issues policies on the cash premium plan, and does not stipulate in such policies that the holders shall be subject to assessment to meet statutory liability, such policies are void.—Ely v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 466.

¶ 212. A fire insurance company in issuing a policy to an estate in course of probate is presumed to know that it is dealing with a temporary condition of property of inheritance which must terminate by sale or distribution of said property, and makes the contract comformable to, and to be construed in the light of, the relations of the parties and circumstances surrounding the property insured.—Zeitler v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 169 Mich. 555.

¶ 213. It makes no difference with regard to the amount of partnership property covered that the agent of the insurer knew the interest of the parties, and that it was the intention of both the insurer and insured, at the time of issuing the policy, that the insurance should cover the whole.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 214. An insurance policy in which the insurance is stated to be for the benefit of a mortgagee creates, nevertheless, no contract relation between the company and the mortgagee. It is a contract with him who executed the mortgage and owed the debt secured by the insurance. Payment on the policy, though made to the mortgagee, would inure to the benefit of the assured. The right of action for the insurance is vested in him, and whatever defeats his right of recovery must defeat any right of the mortgagee, which in this case can only be derived through him. The assured has the same legal, real and beneficial interest in the insurance as if the mortgagee was not mentioned in the policy.—Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 398.

¶ 215. A stipulation for insurance for a mortgagee's benefit being intended to afford security supplementary to and connected with the mortgage, and to keep the mortgaged property itself so far intact as a means of security as to perpetuate the safety of the mortgagee's interest in case the building should burn, was held in equity a sort of adjunct to the mortgage, and binding on the mortgagor and all others in his place without notice.—Miller v. Aldrich, 31 Mich. 408.

¶ 216. A contract of marine insurance is not made out by a telegram to an agent, having authority to bind his company, requesting insurance on Lloyd's Classification, a reply stating that the vessel has no classification in Lloyd's, another telegram from the owner stating that the agent of Lloyd's is present, a reply "will cover if Lloyd's say she is seaworthy; send application" and a subsequent letter confirming telegrams "will cover—send application" where the agent of Lloyd's was not present as per telegram and never classified the vessel or stated that it was seaworthy.—Gauntlett v. Sea Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 504.

¶ 217. An insurance application which has been received by the company and accepted, and the premium paid, becomes the contract of insurance until the policy is issued and received by insured.—Robinson v. United States Benevolent Soc., 132 Mich. 695.

¶ 219. Deceased applied for life insurance before going on a trip which fact was known to the agent, and his application was accepted and the premium paid. The policy was issued and sent to the agent for delivery but insured had already started on his trip and the policy was delivered to his son. It contained provisions inconsistent with his application. He was killed and suit was brought though under the policy as issued no recovery could be had. Held that the application and not the policy controlled and recovery allowed.—Robinson v. United States Benevolent Soc., 132 Mich. 695.

¶ 220. One who has contracted for a policy of insurance is not bound to accept in lieu thereof and as of equal value any such resulting liability as might be incurred by implication from the acceptance of his note as payment of the premium.—Lawrence v. Griswold, 30 Mich. 410.

¶ 221. Act No. 187, Pub. Acts 1907, prescribing standard forms for insurance policies, provides for the payment of premiums in advance, and for thirty days' grace in the payment of premiums after the first. The relator submitted to the respondent insurance commissioner policy forms which read: "If any premium is not paid when due or if any note or part thereof is not paid when due, this policy shall be ipso facto null and void." Held, in mandamus to compel the respondent to vacate an order rejecting such forms, that they were in conflict with the statute, and that the writ should be denied.—Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 159 Mich. 636, Federal Life Ins. Co. v. Same, Id.; United States Annuity & Life Insurance Co. v. Same, Id.

¶ 222. Where the statute provides that certain provisions should be, and certain others should not be, incorporated in insurance policies, no provision may rightfully be used which would, with or without the action of the policyholder, materially change the statutory scheme of the contract.—Mutual Ben. Life-Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 151 Mich. 610.

¶ 223. The form of words adopted in the "Michigan Standard Policy" of fire insurance should be construed with reference to the relation of the parties and the character and situation of the property insured, and the forfeiture clauses should be interpreted in the light of the facts and circumstances having in mind the ordinary meaning of the language found in them as applied to the purpose for which the contract was made. Zeitler v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 169 Mich. 555.

¶ 224. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 277, providing for a standard form, and for a penalty for using any other form of policy may be regarded as a remedial statute aimed to correct real or supposed mischiefs.—Attorney General ex rel. Michigan Lubricator Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 148 Mich. 566.

¶ 225. Comp. L. 1897, § 5187, enacted in 1885, applies only to contracts theretofore made between mutual companies and policyholders, and does not apply to the contract of a member of a mutual fire insurance company made in 1896.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 226. How. St. § 4349, which prohibits the issue of any policy containing any other or different terms than those expressed in the Michigan standard policy, does not avoid a policy so as to defeat action thereon by the insured, merely because it contains a clause not contemplated by the act.—Armstrong v. Western Manufacturers' Mut. Ins. Co., 95 Mich. 137.

Copy of application set out in policy as warranty, see post ¶¶ 419, 420.
Oral application as part of policy, see also post ¶ 417.

¶ 227. A provision in an insurance policy that "if this policy be issued upon or refer to an application, etc., such application shall be considered a part of the contract, and a warranty by the insured," will not make the application a part of the contract, and therefore necessary to be set forth in stating the contract according to its legal effect, unless its terms are such as to be capable of being impressed with the character of a warranty by force of the stipulation it contains.—Throop v. North American Fire Ins. Co., 19 Mich. 423.

¶ 229. Where a policy of insurance expressly refers to the application, and makes it a part of the contract of insurance, the two instruments must be construed together, in determining what the real contract is; and if the policy, as delivered, contains provisions not in the application and which are not accepted by the applicant, they may be treated as waived by the company, and as constituting no part of the insurance contract. Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 102 Mich. 289.

¶ 230. A railroad conductor's application for accident insurance, stating that his sole business was running passenger trains, was accepted by the company, and a certificate was issued, containing a condition that attempting to enter or leave moving conveyances using steam, electricity, water or compressed air as a motive power were hazards not contemplated or covered by the insurance, and that no sum would be paid for injuries or death in consequence of such exposure, or while the insured was thus exposed. The certificate expressly referred to the application, which contained no such restriction as to entering or leaving trains when in motion, and made it a part of the contract of insurance. The insured was killed while attempting to alight from a moving train, and before the certificate had reached him in due course of mail. Held, that it is common knowledge that conductors of passenger trains on all railroads must not only enter their trains when in motion, but leave them before they come to a full stop; that this is among the risks which the passenger conductor assumes when he enters such employment; and that this knowledge is so general that the company, when it took and approved the application, must have had knowledge of it, and in view of this it cannot insist upon said restriction.—Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 102 Mich. 289.

¶ 232. Where, in an action on an insurance policy, the defense is based upon a written application, such policy and application would necessarily be resorted to for the determination of the question whether the general verdict is not inconsistent with the special findings of the jury, especially where they are specifically referred to in such findings.—Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mich. 400.

¶ 233. The receipt and acceptance of an insurance policy without examination does not estop insured from insisting that the application is part of the contract, where the agent taking the application assured the applicant that it was not necessary to retain a copy of the application because one would be attached to the policy.—Employers' Liability Ass'n Corp. v. Grand Rapids Bridge Co., 139 Mich. 351.

¶ 234. The stipulation in an insurance policy that any application, survey, plan or description of the property referred to therein shall be considered part of the policy, does not apply where the application, etc., is not in writing.—O'Brien v. Ohio Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 131.

¶ 235. Reference in a second fire insurance policy to the application of the insured made upon a previous policy since canceled held to incorporate the application in the second policy.—Convis v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Calhoun County, 127 Mich. 616.

¶ 236. In his application to the defendant for a policy of life insurance, plaintiff's decedent did not agree, as he did in the order of assignment of wages to pay the premium, that neither he nor his beneficiary would present a claim for injuries arising during the first month if he had left the employment designated in the assignment of wages, but the application referred to the order, and the policy was in terms issued in consideration of both. Held, that because plaintiff left the employment before the beginning of the month, his intestate could not recover on the policy. —Lilja v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co. of Detroit, 171 Mich. 378.

¶ 237. Where the certificate of the agent for an insurance company upon an application for life insurance, gives the date of a former application and across the certificate appears the number of such application indorsed thereon by the home office, the company cannot predicate a defense upon want of knowledge of what appeared in the first application.—Rhode v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 503.

Standard form for rider clause for coinsurance against fire loss, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, §§ 9, 10.
Standard form for rider clause for "average or pro rata" liability for fire loss, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, §§ 11, 12.

¶ 238. The essential purpose of Pub. Acts 1905, No. 277, adopting the same form of policy as provided by the act of 1881, but repealing that act, and providing for a penalty for using any other form of policy, must be assumed to be to provide a standard form of policy, and the sixth exception, providing that provisions added to or modifying the provisions of the standard form may be embodied in riders cannot be construed literally so as to permit the standard form of policy to be used as a mere frame upon which to affix riders embodying the contract of the parties.—Attorney General ex rel. Michigan Lubricator Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 148 Mich. 566.

¶ 239. The contention that an "iron-safe clause" was not a valid and binding part of the contract of insurance, because it was contained in a rider attached to the policy, and not in the policy itself, cannot be maintained, where such rider contained the only description of the property insured, and without which the policy would be incomplete.—King v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 258.

¶ 240. An insurance policy provided that the insured must be the unconditional owner of the property. In a suit upon it, plaintiff testified that he informed the agent at the time of taking the policy that he did not own the property unconditionally. The court instructed with reference to riders attached to the policy that it must clearly appear by the language of such riders that an exception was made as to unconditional ownership. Later, at plaintiff's request, the court charged that his instructions with reference to the riders should be considered by the jury only with reference to the question of fact whether plaintiff did inform defendant that he was not the unconditional owner. Held, no error was contained in these instructions.—Goodwin v. Union Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 163 Mich. 41.

¶ 241. All parts of an insurance policy will be harmonized and given effect if possible, but, where the body of the policy and the riders attached thereto are irreconcilable, the latter will control.—Jackson v. British America Assur. Co., 106 Mich. 47.

¶ 242. Defendant insured a vessel against loss by fire from Dec. 4, 1893, to May 1, 1894. The policy, which was written upon a marine insurance blank, contained a warranty by the insured that the vessel should be navigated between April 1st and Nov. 30th only, and from the last-mentioned date to April 1st next ensuing should be "laid up and safely moored." A rider was attached more specifically assuming to insure "the steamer B., laid up and properly moored" in a certain harbor, and giving permission to do painting, to make necessary alterations and repairs, to fit out in the spring, and to "move from dock to dock for the purpose of loading and unloading cargo." Another rider provided: "This policy covers against fire only, on the terms and conditions of the standard form fire policy of the State of New York, and anything in this policy conflicting therewith is hereby waived." By the "standard form fire policy" mentioned in the rider, property was insured "while located and contained" as described therein, and it became void if mechanics should be employed in repairing for more than fifteen days. The boat burned at a distance from the harbor on April 16, 1894, while engaged in navigation. Held, that the clause permitting navigation after April 1 was not in conflict with the terms of the standard policy.—Jackson v. British America Assur. Co., 106 Mich. 47.

¶ 243. A fire policy on a vessel written on a marine insurance form with riders limiting it to a fire risk according to the New York Standard Form, which standard form contains a provision that it shall be void if mechanics should be employed in repairing more than 15 days, and with a rider giving permission "to do painting, to make necessary alterations and repairs, and to fit out in the spring," is to be construed as having carried the last-mentioned rider in order to avoid the prohibitive effect of the repair clause in the standard policy form.—Jackson v. British America Assur. Co., 106 Mich. 47.

¶ 244. A clause in a fire policy on a vessel to be navigated during specified months and "laid up and moored" during other months, does not conflict with a rider permitting her to move from dock to dock and to load and unload, and does not indicate an intention to limit the insurance to such time as the boat should remain in the specified harbor, but were consistent with the navigation clause.—Jackson v. British America Assur. Co., 106 Mich. 47.

¶ 245. The fact that after the fire, upon defendant's repudiating liability under a fire policy on a vessel laid up and moored, the insured claimed that he had the right to navigate under a further provision permitting the vessel to move from dock to dock for the purpose of loading and unloading cargo, cannot alter the construction to be given to the policy.—Jackson v. British America Assur. Co., 106 Mich. 47.

Amendments of charter or by-laws as affecting policy after issuance, see post § 63.
Rights and limitations of mutual associations generally, see ante § 10.

¶ 246. The charter and by-laws of a mutual fire insurance company are parts of the contract of insurance.—Leonard v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Monroe and Wayne Counties, 192 Mich. 230.

¶ 247. Where the charter and by-laws of a company are inserted in and made a part of its policies of insurance, any insurance in violation thereof is invalid, even though taken for mortgagee's benefit.—Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 398.

¶ 248. The charter of a nonmutual insurance company is not binding on the assured unless the contract of insurance provides that it shall be.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

¶ 249. The valid by-laws of a mutual fire insurance company are a part of the policy or contract of insurance.—Douville v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 158.

¶ 250. Existing by-laws of a mutual insurance company are properly regarded as entering into contracts of insurance and binding the members where the policy is made subject to them. But a by-law cannot destroy a contract in force before its adoption.—Becker v. Farmer's Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Wayne & Monroe Counties, 48 Mich. 610.

¶ 251. A by-law of a mutual benefit society that is reasonable and valid, not oppressive or against public policy forms part of the contract between a member and the other members of the society, and binds each member by its terms.—Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent de Paul Soc., 63 Mich. 378.

¶ 252. The provisions in the charter and by-laws of a mutual fire insurance company that "no insurance shall be binding until the payment of the premium" that the insurance shall be suspended in default of payment of assessments and that the insured shall have no claim for losses until assessments are paid, render the insurance company not liable for losses while the insured is in default.—Hill v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Manistee, Benzie & Mason Counties, 129 Mich. 141.

¶ 253. The by-laws of a mutual insurance company are a part of the insurance contract, as binding upon the member as the policy itself; and the power conferred by How. St. § 4253, to make by-laws, authorizes a by-law requiring the secretary to cancel any risk that in his opinion is unsafe. Such a by-law is not contrary to public policy.—Douville v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 158.

¶ 254. A by-law of a mutual fire insurance company, to which each applicant's attention is directed and his written assent obtained, which is authorized by charter, and which provides that all differences between the company and its members which cannot be settled shall be submitted to arbitrators, the agreement of a majority of whom shall determine the matter submitted, is valid, and does not contravene How. St. § 4258, giving to members the right to maintain suits at law against such corporations for "accrued" claims, since, by the terms of the contract, no claims accrue, in case of differences, until a sum is awarded by arbitrators.—Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. Fire. Ins. Co., 114 Mich. 386.

¶ 255. A mutual fire insurance policy cannot be affected by the subsequent adoption of a by-law providing that insurance shall be forfeited if premises are left vacant.—Becker v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Wayne & Monroe Counties, 48 Mich. 610.

¶ 256. One who in his application for insurance in a mutual fire insurance company agreed to be governed by all the conditions of the charter and by-laws as they then existed, and who, when a change was subsequently made, the effect of which was to limit the risk on his property, received a copy of the new by-law and has made no objection but continues his membership, becomes bound by such new by-law.—Borgards v. Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 440.

§ 64. Variance of policy from application.

Application as contract pending issuance of policy, see ante § 56.
Application as part of policy contract, see ante § 59.
Requisites and sufficiency of application in general, see ante §§ 47, 48.

¶ 257. Where a policy of insurance is issued inconsistent with the application, it is the duty of the company to call the attention of insured thereto so that he may ratify or reject, since he has a right to assume that the policy will be in accordance with the terms of the application and is not bound by one differing therefrom until he has ratified or waived.—Robinson v. United States Benevolent Soc., 132 Mich. 695.

¶ 258. Where an insurance policy was sent by the company to its agent for delivery to insured, the agent does not become the agent of insured so as to bind him by conditions in the policy different from those in his accepted application.—Robinson v. United States Benevolent Soc., 132 Mich. 695.

¶ 259. An applicant for insurance is entitled to reply upon the presumption that his policy will be in accordance with his oral application, and if the insurer desires to make the policy anything different it must, in order to be binding upon the assured, call his attention to the clauses differing from his application.—Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 428, on rehearing affirming 84 Mich. 161.

§ 65. Construction and interpretation of policy or contract.

Construction in favor of insured, see post § 66.
Provisions for forfeiture or avoidance, see post § 67.
Written and printed portions, see post § 68.
Subject-matter covered and particular descriptions, see post § 69.
Stipulations as to legal effect, see post § 70.
Rules for interpretation of warranties in insurance policies, see also post ¶ 416.
Construction of conflicting clauses in body of policy and in rider, see also ante ¶¶ 241-244.
Provisions in policy requiring action within specified time, see post § 272.
Provisions in policy forbidding action until certain time, see post § 273.
Provisions in policy relative to actions in conflict with statutes, see post § 274.
Construction of questions and answers in application, see ante § 48.
Construction of policy or contract as question of law or fact, see post § 330.
Contract to pay given sum monthly for life as price for property as a contract for insurance or for an annuity, see also Corporations ¶ 267.
Intendment of terms most strongly against author or draftsman of the contract, see Contracts § 166.
Invalidity of any article, by-law, resolution or policy provision of life or casualty insurance company prohibiting member or beneficiary from bringing suit, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. I, § 8.

¶ 260. All written instruments, where the provisions are clear and unambiguous, are entitled to a literal interpretation.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

¶ 261. While it is true that any clause of an insurance policy should be construed somewhat strictly, the parties may stipulate what risks shall be covered by the policy, and if the terms of the instrument are not ambiguous, they will be enforced.—Frey v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 56 Mich. 29.

¶ 262. An insurance policy, covering both real and personal estate, is not to be held a divisible contract, part of which may remain in force though the rest be invalid, where it is not perfectly clear that the insurer would have assumed both risks separately.—Aetna Ins. Co. v. Resh, 44 Mich. 55.

¶ 263. An insurance for a gross sum on a number of enumerated articles is not a separate insurance on any of those articles for any sum.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 380.

¶ 264. The terms of the standard policy of fire insurance are to be construed as employed in the sense in which they were used and interpreted by the courts before that form of policy was adopted.—John Davis & Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A., 115 Mich. 382.

¶ 265. The term "legal representative," as used in the clause in the Michigan standard fire insurance policy, "wherever in this policy the word 'insured' occurs, it shall be held to include the legal representative of the insured," refers to those who succeed to the insured's legal rights, by reason of his death or the transfer of the policy, and does not include an agent of the insured.—Metzger v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 102 Mich. 334.

¶ 266. In construing words of a policy, there is no substantial difference in signification between the phrases "shall die by his own hand," "shall commit suicide" and "shall die by suicide."—Blackstone v. The Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592.

§ 66. ——Construction in favor of insured.

See also ante ¶ 187.

Presumption that insured has read and understands application and insurance contract, see ante ¶ 182.

¶ 267. When a stipulation or exception to a policy of insurance, emanating from the insurers, is capable of two meanings, the one is to be adopted which is most favorable to the assured.—Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545.

¶ 268. Where a contract, a policy of accident insurance, is for indemnity, its terms and provisions, if uncertain in meaning or contradictory of each other, must be given a meaning and construction most favorable to the insured.—Lilja v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co. of Detroit, 171 Mich. 378.

¶ 269. As to how far the rule that insurance contracts are to be construed most favorably to the insured is modified where the form of policy is prescribed by statute, quære.—John Davis & Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A., 115 Mich. 382.

¶ 270. A provision in a charter of a fire insurance company which is part of an insurance policy and relates to the method of making applications for insurance must be strictly construed against the insurer where its agent has orally agreed to issue a new policy in place of a canceled policy held by the insured's predecessor in title and accepted the required fee.—Leonard v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Monroe and Wayne Counties, 192 Mich. 230.

Validity of agreements for forfeiture, see post § 109.

Forfeiture or avoidance in general, see post XII.

Estoppel of waiver of right to avoid or forfeit, see post XII, C.

Statutory provisions designed to curb right to forfeiture, see post ¶¶ 532, 533.

Construction of clause for forfeiture for suicide, see also post ¶¶ 629, 630.

Public policy as to onerous cancellation terms in policy, see Contracts § 68.

Promise of insurer as consideration for iron safe clause and other conditioning clauses, see Contracts ¶ 410.

¶ 271. Provisions in an insurance policy that involve forfeiture must be strictly construed.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143; Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Connecticut, 55 Mich. 141; Miner v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 63 Mich. 338.

¶ 272. As forfeitures and penalties are not favored in the law the language of a policy should not be unnecessarily extended by construction.—Metzger v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 102 Mich. 334.

¶ 273. Forfeitures should never be more rigorously enforced than will be fairly justified by a strict construction of the provisions on which they are based, as against the party insisting upon them.—Olmstead v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 200.

¶ 274. Clauses of forfeiture in an insurance policy must be explicit.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103.

¶ 275. Where a provision in an insurance policy is part of the printed form designed to be sufficiently general in its conditions to answer in all cases, it cannot be supposed to have special and exceptional cases particularly in view.—Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 30 Mich. 41.

¶ 276. When a written and a printed clause appear in a policy of insurance, relating to the same subject (e. g., other insurance), the former in a prominent place, and associated with the other written provisions of the policy, and the latter in small type, and therefore obscure, — the intention of the parties will be sought for in the written rather than in the printed provision.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 277. Horses are covered by a policy on "live stock."—Hapeman v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 191.

¶ 278. A policy of insurance covered several separate buildings and dwellings. It provided that the live stock, carriages, hay, wool, etc., were insured anywhere on the premises. The insured invalidated the policy as to the real estate by incumbering same contrary to the stipulations of the policy. Held, the policy was divisible, and the insured might recover for the loss of such of the personalty as was intended to be moved about from place to place on the premises.—Benham v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 165 Mich. 406. (Hooker and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

was a wooden structure which was used by complainant in connection therewith. Complainant asked the local agent of defendant insurance company to place a policy on the premises. The policy being made to cover only the brick building, complainant asked for one covering also the wooden structure. The agent, doubting his authority to issue such a policy, called in the state agent, who after inspecting the premises issued a policy covering the brick building "and its additions adjoining and communicating with the foundations." Held, the policy should as a matter of law be held to cover the wooden structure.—Shepard v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 165 Mich. 172.

¶ 280. A policy of insurance covering lumber "piled in mill building, on cars, under mill sheds and in sheds adjoining to said mill building," was construed to cover lumber in sheds located some distance from the mill, there being undisputed evidence that these sheds were known as "mill sheds," though the roof of the mill also projected 10 or 12 feet and formed sheds with open ends and sides for the protection of men loading cars but not intended for lumber sheds. It should not read, "piled in mill building, on cars under mill sheds, and in sheds adjoining," etc. —Wolverine Lumber Co. v. Palatine Ins. Co., 139 Mich. 432.

¶ 281. A fire insurance policy permitting the keeping of kerosene on the premises insured provided it be drawn and lamps filled in the daytime, or at a distance not less than ten feet from artificial light, is entirely consistent with the fact that the insurance covers kerosene; but it must be used and handled as stipulated.—Vandervolgen v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 123 Mich. 291.

¶ 282. In a fire policy on a creamery, "all materials and supplies for the (manufacture chiefly of butter and cheese) including packages" includes milk cans.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n, 112 Mich. 106.

¶ 283. A clause in a policy which provided that if gunpowder, or other articles subject to legal restriction, should be kept in greater quantities or in a different manner than was provided by law, the policy should be void, was held to have reference only to articles of an intrinsically dangerous nature, as liable to cause injury accidentally or by carelessness, and not to refer to liquors, the traffic in which was made illegal by statute.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124.

¶ 284. A description in an insurance policy of the subject insured in these words, "the stock, lumber and goods manufactured and in process of manufacture in said building," will not cover property in the yard adjoining the building. The words "in said building" will be held to qualify the description of all the property insured, and not merely that "in process of manufacture," and, therefore, evidence that the agent of the company was told at the time the policy was issued that insurance was wanted "on the lumber outside as well as inside the building" is inadmissible, especially when the subject insured is laid in the declaration as "lumber and stock of felloes, poles, bows and shafts, manufactured and in process of manufacture, contained in the" building.—North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146.

¶ 285. The term "plate," in a clause excluding from an insurance policy "money, bullion, jewels, plate and watches," does not embrace silver forks and tea and table spoons. —Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Mannasson, 29 Mich. 316.

¶ 286. Whether a word in a clause stating the number of rods the insured buildings were from any other building was "six" or "oix" was held to be for the court to determine as matter of construction in an action on the policy.—Lapeer County Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Doyle, 30 Mich. 159.

¶ 287. Under a fire insurance policy insuring certain city fire engine appliances while "located and contained in" a described building, and not elsewhere, the company was not liable for loss of said property while being used outside of said building in an attempt to extinguish fire.—Village of L'Anse v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 427.

¶ 288. The words, "occupied as a dwelling-house," when used in a policy of insurance, do not necessarily exclude the idea that some part of the building may be used as a stable. If the family live in the building it is not deprived of its character as a dwelling because domestic animals are also housed there. So a policy upon "one two-story frame building and additions thereto, occupied by assured as a dwelling-house," "with shingle roof," was held to cover a carriage-house and stable under the same roof, and in the rear of the portion occupied for dwelling purposes, but attached thereto, being under the same "shingle roof."—Hannan v. Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co., 81 Mich. 556; Hannan v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 81 Mich. 561.

¶ 289. Insurance "on a stock of eggs in store (in pickle)" written by an agent who afterwards testified he understood it to cover the stock "while being pickled and disposed of," was held to cover the entire stock though all the eggs were not in the pickling vats at the time of the fire.—Hall v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 403.

¶ 290. Where an insurance policy covered property owned by the assured and "property held by it in trust, or sold and not delivered, and piled on the docks," held, that there was no delivery, within the meaning of the policy, of lumber that had been sold, piled by itself, marked for the purchaser and was awaiting removal by vessel.—Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 482.

¶ 291. Stack has a well-defined meaning, and insurance upon "stacks on farm" does not include the threshed wheat in a mow in a barn.—Benton v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 281.

¶ 292. It was provided in the policy that it should be void if the premises were used for storing or keeping therein any articles included in certain classes of hazards annexed to the policy, "except as herein specially provided, or hereafter agreed to by the insurers upon this policy." It was held that where a stock of goods was insured under the general designation of "groceries," which included some of these hazardous articles, the insurance by this designation did specially provide for them "in writing upon the policy."—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124.

¶ 293. An insurance policy containing the provision "stock insured against lightning anywhere in Kent, Allegan and Ottawa Counties" will cover loss by lightning of horses located at the time off the insured's farm.—Hapeman v. Citizens' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 191.

§ 70. ——Stipulations as to legal effect.

¶ 294. An insurance policy cannot be construed by the court on a stipulation as to its legal effect.—American Ins. Co. v. Reed, 40 Mich. 622.

§ 71. Endowment policies and clauses.

¶ 295. An insurance certificate payable at the end of a specified time (100 months), or upon total disability or death, is an endowment policy.—Walker v. Giddings, 103 Mich. 344.

§ 72. Renewals as new contracts.

Authority of agents to make renewals, see ante § 25.

¶ 296. Each renewal of a policy of insurance is a new contract, and is subject to the local laws in force at the time of the renewal.—Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 425.

¶ 297. Renewals of policies of insurance, though amounting to a new contract, in no way change the terms and conditions of the original policy except as they continue it in force, but the rights of the parties are governed by the provisions of the policy as originally issued, except as the same are affected by any waiver that may have arisen in the meantime.—Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 289.

¶ 298. Waiver of an arrangement whereby a policy was surrendered and a new one issued in its place is not shown by the collection, subsequent to such arrangement, of the annual premium-note given on the issue of the first policy, where it appears that the company promptly corrected its mistake in such collection by notifying the assured and tendering back the amount collected less the quarterly premium due on the second policy.—Krause v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 105 Mich. 329.

¶ 299. Whether the collection of a note given for premiums on a life insurance policy constitutes a waiver by the company of an agreement between the parties substituting a new policy in place of the one for premiums on which such note was given is a question for the jury, to be determined by taking into consideration the denial of the company that it was intended to have such effect, together with the acts of the parties inconsistent with such denial.—Krause v. Equitable Life Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 327.

VI. PREMIUMS, ASSESSMENTS OR OTHER CONSIDERATION.

Power of mutual companies to levy assessments, see post §§ 74-75.
Assessment in mutual companies, see post §§ 76-78.
Levy and collection of assessments, see post §§ 79, 80.
Notice of assessment, see post §§ 81, 82.
Remedy against excessive assessment, see post § 83.
Payment or satisfaction of assessment, see post §§ 84-87.
Estoppel of insured to avoid liability, see post § 88.
Actions for premium or assessment, see post §§ 89-94.
Recovery of premium or assessment paid, see post § 95.
Anti-rebate laws, see ante § 4.
Consideration for assignment or transfer, see post § 121.
Forfeiture for default in payment of premium or assessment, see post §§ 150-155.
Contract or policy in general, see ante V.
Waiver of nonpayment of premium or assessment, see post § 188.
Unearned premiums and surrender values, see post XII, E.
Premium or fee paid for surety bond as taxable costs, see Costs § 66.

¶ 300. If a fire insurance policy is null and void, or suspended, from whatever cause, so that the company incurs no risk and the assured receives no protection, there is no legal responsibility for the amount of the premium.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

§ 74. Power of mutual companies to levy assessments.

Effect of insolvency of company, see post § 75.
Dues and assessments of benefit society, see Fraternal Associations III.

¶ 301. After a license to do business has been refused a mutual benefit association, no assessments to pay death losses occurring after such refusal can legally be made.—Stamm v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 65 Mich. 317.

Receivership and proceedings to wind up business, see ante § 12.

¶ 302. A receiver of a fire insurance company, organized under Act No. 82, Laws of 1873, derives directly from the statute his authority to make assessments; assessments, when so made, are not conclusive upon members, and an order from court on his ex parte petition confers no additional authority, wherefore if he acts beyond or against the statute his acts may be questioned as if no such order had been made.—Wardle v. Townsend, 75 Mich. 385.

¶ 303. In preparing for an assessment on policyholders to meet losses, it is the duty of the receiver of the insolvent insurance company to ascertain and report to the circuit court the number of each class of policies, the amount of unearned premiums due thereon, the money necessary to meet losses, together with the cost of services and the expenses of the receiver.—Ely v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 466.

§ 76. Assessments in mutual companies.

Effect of withdrawal or surrender of policy, see post § 77.
Limitation of liability by special agreement or charter provision, see post § 78.
Actions to enforce assessments, see post §§ 89-94.

¶ 304. A member of a mutual life insurance company who in his application agrees to make punctual payment of all dues and assessments for which he may become liable, is supposed to have understood that circumstances might arise creating a liability for assessment or the promise would not have been made.—Calkins v. Angell, 123 Mich. 77.

¶ 307. A member of a mutual life association organized under Comp. L. 1897, § 7497 et seq., is liable to an assessment for the payment of death claims levied by the receiver of the association after the dissolution of the association, as such member is bound by the act of organization which in section 22 provides for the levying of assessments by the receiver to pay death claims which have accrued at the time of his appointment.—Calkins v. Angell, 123 Mich. 77.

¶ 308. A member of a mutual life association organized under Comp. L. 1897, § 7497 et seq., cannot escape liability for assessments levied by a receiver to pay death claims, on the ground that the contract to pay assessments was unilateral and that such member had the right to decline to pay an assessment at any time and the only consequence would be that his policy would lapse and he cease to be a member.—Calkins v. Angell, 123 Mich. 77.

¶ 309. An insured is held to have made an ordinary contract of insurance and not to have become a member of a mutual fire insurance company and hence is not liable for assessments levied by the receiver, where he applied for and bargained with the agent and paid for ordinary insurance in accordance with the Michigan Standard policy and received a Standard policy issued by a mutual company containing a statement that "if this policy be made by mutual or other company having special regulations such regulations shall apply to and form a part of this policy as the same may be written or printed upon, attached or appended hereto" and with no further regulations written upon or appended to the policy except a statement that "the articles of association and by-laws of this association are hereby declared to be and form a part of this policy and are to be resorted to in order to determine the rights and obligations of the several parties hereto."—Osius v. O'Dwyer, 127 Mich. 244.

¶ 310. A by-law making the whole amount of the premium note to a mutual insurance company collectible on default in paying an assessment thereon within thirty days—the money to be paid into the treasury of the company to meet past and future losses—held a lawful by-law.—Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co., 2 D. 124.

¶ 311. A policyholder in a mutual fire insurance company is liable for all assessments made against the members of such company during the term of his policy, even though he has sought to withdraw from the company by handing his policy to the company's local agent; where at the time of such attempted withdrawal, he is in arrears in his assessments, and where such arrearages remain unpaid.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 312. The liability of a member of a mutual fire insurance company, when the affairs of the company are being closed by a receiver, is not limited by his contract with such company, but by his proportionate share of losses and expenses for the period during which he was a member.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

¶ 313. Under How. St. § 4263, a receiver of an insolvent mutual fire insurance company can assess none but members and persons insured, and, therefore, one whose policy has been surrendered and canceled cannot be assessed.—Tolford v. Church, 66 Mich. 431.

¶ 314. A withdrawing member of a mutual fire insurance corporation, upon the surrender of his policy, must pay not only all regular assessments outstanding against him, but also all other obligations that might lawfully be made the subject of assessment at the time of surrender, and such amount is payable at once upon ascertainment.—Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Butler, 193 Mich. 648.

¶ 315. Members of a mutual fire insurance company, if liable at all for assessments made by a receiver under How. St. § 4263, can be made so only by the contract existing between them and the corporation, which contract is shown by the application and the policy.—Wardle v. Hudson, 96 Mich. 432.

¶ 316. A member of a mutual insurance company is liable for an assessment made by a receiver after he has ceased to be a member and received a receipt for specified items reciting that it was "in full of all demands," where the assessment in suit covered nonassessments for previous years, and losses by failure to collect from irresponsible members assessments made prior to the defendant member's withdrawal.—Peake v. Yule, 123 Mich. 675.

¶ 317. A member of a mutual insurance company cannot by a surrender of his policy escape liability for such obligations as might lawfully be made the subject of assessment at the time of the surrender.—Peake v. Yule, 123 Mich. 675.

¶ 318. One who has surrendered his policy in a mutual fire insurance company, and become discharged from liability, is not, by paying an assessment for which he is not legally liable, estopped from denying future liability, where the assessment paid was claimed by the company and believed by him to have been one that he was liable for before the policy was surrendered.—Tolford v. Church, 66 Mich. 431.

¶ 319. Where the charter of a mutual fire insurance company provides that a member may withdraw by returning his policy to the secretary and paying all assessments to which he is then liable, membership is not terminated nor is the member or the company released from liability if the member without surrendering his policy merely directs the secretary to take his name from the books and pays all assessments then due.—Schroeder v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 310.

¶ 320. A policyholder in an assessment insurance company had his policy canceled, and paid the amount stated by the company to be due. Later a receiver for the company was appointed, on account of insolvency. Held, the member was still liable for his share of the liabilities of the company incurred prior to the ending of his membership.—Nichol v. Newman, 160 Mich. 582.

¶ 321. The receiver of a mutual insurance company was entitled to recover the amount of an assessment levied against a member, where the member had theretofore surrendered his policy and settled a suit to recover an assessment, it appearing however that the assessment so settled was insufficient and that the one in suit was made to cover the deficiency.—Cavanagh v. Connon, 123 Mich. 685.

¶ 322. A member who surrenders his policy under a clause of the charter permitting it on the payment of "his proportion of all assessments to which the company is liable at the time of his withdrawal," remains liable for such obligations as might lawfully be made the subject of assessment at the time of such surrender (e. g., losses in litigation pending when he withdrew), but not for losses arising subsequently from failures to collect or from any other cause.—Ionia, E. & B. F. M. Fire Ins. Co. v. Otto, 96 Mich. 558; Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Spaulding, 61 Mich. 77.

¶ 323. Defendant, a member of a mutual fire insurance company, paid an assessment made Jan. 5, 1884, and March 19, 1884, surrendered his policy, which was then canceled. Certain losses which accrued prior to the latter date were not included in the assessment, but under a subsequent assessment defendant paid $4 as his proportion of such loss on March 5, 1885, which amount more than paid all of defendant's liabilities up to the time of the cancellation of his policy. Held, that defendant was discharged from further liability.—Tolford v. Church, 66 Mich. 431.

portionate share of the losses and expenses for the period during which he is insured; and, if such liability has not been covered by assessment, it continues, although he may have meanwhile ceased to be a member.—Ionia, etc., Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 606.

¶ 325. The liability of persons insured in mutual fire insurance companies organized under Pub. L., 1873, Act No. 82, and 1877, Acts No. 66 and 142 (How. St. § 4247), to pay their proportion of such assessments as shall be sufficient to meet all of the company's losses and liabilities, cannot be avoided by any arrangements entered into with the company whereby the insured seeks to limit such liability; nor can it be lessened by any provisions in the articles of association.—Russell v. Berry, 51 Mich. 287.

¶ 326. The general insurance law (How. St., ch. 132) authorizes the incorporators of a mutual insurance company to prescribe in their charter the liability of members to assessments. But it also provides that, if the company becomes insolvent, a receiver may assess them for enough to meet all liabilities. A member of an insolvent company filed a bill to restrain such an assessment, averring it to be the general understanding, as well as his own, that no one was to be assessed beyond the amount which he had agreed to pay by his premium note. This fact was admitted by demurrer. Held, that as a general agreement to that effect would not be illegal, and as individual members could waive the provision made by the statute for their protection, it would be inequitable for any member of a mutual company to insist on its enforcement after all had become insured with the understanding that their liability was limited to their premium notes.—Macklem v. Bacon, 57 Mich. 334.

§ 79. Levy and collection of assessments.

Items to be included in assessment, see post § 80.

Notice of assessment, see post § 81.

¶ 327. The individual action of the directors in signing the warrant attached to the assessment roll, no meeting of the board being called for the purpose, was not such a ratification as would validate the assessment of a mutual insurance company void because not made by directors.—Johnson v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 488.

¶ 328. The charter of a mutual fire insurance company provided that "all assessments" should be made by "the board of directors," who should ascertain the amount of loss, determine a sum to be raised as surplus fund, and make an assessment embracing the loss, expenses incident thereto, and the sum to be raised as surplus. This assessment was then to be handed to the secretary, who was to notify the members. Held, that an assessment made by the secretary pursuant to a resolution of the board of directors providing for an assessment, but failing to indicate the date of it, or the amounts, or the members liable or method of apportionment was invalid—at least in the absence of a formal adoption by the board.—Johnson v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 488.

¶ 329. A forfeiture of insurance in a mutual insurance company for nonpayment of an assessment cannot be sustained where the assessment was invalid because not made by the officers designated by law.—Johnson v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 488.

¶ 330. A void assessment is no impediment to a new assessment, in making which the officers of the company may reassess the amount paid upon the void assessment upon the payers, and credit on such assessments such amounts.—Ionia, etc., Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 606.

§ 80. ——Items to be included in assessment.

¶ 332. Where a mutual insurance company issues policies on the cash-premium plan, and stipulates in such policies that the holders shall be subject to assessment to meet statutory liability, such policyholders are liable to assessments to cover losses and expenses.—Ely v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 466.

¶ 333. Where a receiver of an insolvent insurance company applies in a proper case to the court for instruction as to the levying of assessments, the expense may be provided for in the assessment.—Ely v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 466.

¶ 334. In making an assessment on members to meet the liabilities of an insolvent insurance company, the receiver may include unearned premiums as a part of such liabilities.—Ely v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 466.

¶ 335. Where the statute expressly forbids an insurance company from issuing farm policies, the receiver of the insolvent company may nevertheless levy assessments to pay back to holders of farm policies their unearned premiums.—Ely v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 466.

¶ 336. A policyholder in a manufacturers' mutual company who contracts to pay assessments for the losses and expenses of the company cannot be assessed to pay unearned premiums, as his contract does not cover them.—Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Merrill, 101 Mich. 393.

¶ 337. As a new assessment for a deficiency arising from a failure to collect a former assessment cannot be made upon members whose policies had been canceled previous to the first assessment, it is proper to include a liberal sum for contingencies, and this is usually within the discretion of the directors of the company.—Ionia, etc., Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 606.

¶ 338. Interest on obligations which it is the duty of the company to pay, and money spent in an attempt to avoid such payment, cannot be charged to subsequent policyholders, who have no interest in, or liability upon, such obligations.—Ionia, etc., Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 606.

¶ 339. Assessments may be made to make good deficiencies arising by reason of the nonpayment of assessments by irresponsible members, and the receiver may assess in the first instance enough to pay all liabilities and expenses, and his discretion in ascertaining the amount will not be interfered with unless abused; it cannot be said, without proof, that an assessment of one hundred per cent in excess of the liabilities is unwarranted.—Wardle v. Townsend, 75 Mich. 385.

Waiver of notice or defects therein, see post § 82.

¶ 340. An assessment ordered by a mutual benefit association to pay death losses does not become due, nor can its nonpayment warrant forfeiture of a member's rights, until proper notice as required by the by-laws is given to the member.—Miner v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 63 Mich. 338.

¶ 341. The charter of a mutual insurance company made the nonpayment of assessments within a fixed period a cause of forfeiture. In a case in which this period has been exceeded and the assessment not paid, an affidavit of loss admitted that the notice of assessment had been received shortly after it was sent. But the affidavit was filled out by the agent of the company, and the insured was not led to suppose that the company intended to rely on the provision for forfeiture, or that the date of receiving the notice was of any importance. Held, that in an action on the policy he was not estopped by the recital in his affidavit, from showing that, although the notice was taken from the postoffice soon after it was sent, it had not been delivered to him until long afterward.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 273.

¶ 342. Notice of an assessment from the secretary of a mutual insurance company is notice from the company, which is bound by his act.—Olmstead v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 200.

¶ 343. Where the statute governing contracts of insurance between co-operative insurance associations and their members prohibits a forfeiture without notice, and prescribes what a notice of assessment shall contain, the statutory provisions cannot be avoided by a condition attached to the policy, that, in case no notice is given, the member shall be required to forward to the association an amount equal to the previous assessment; and a failure to give the prescribed notice will prevent the association's declaring a forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of the assessment.—Warner v. National Life Ass'n, 100 Mich. 157.

¶ 344. In an action against a benefit association to recover a death claim, payment was resisted on the ground that the member had been suspended for nonpayment of assessments, while plaintiff claimed that no legal notice to pay said assessments had ever been served upon the member. It appeared that, at the time when the notices of assessment were directed to be given, a quorum of the board of trustees was not present, but that at the next meeting of the board, when a quorum was present, the proceedings of the former meeting, which had been duly recorded, were read and adopted. Held, that any irregularity in ordering said notices to be given was cured by the further action of the board.—Wolf v. Michigan Masonic Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 108 Mich. 665.

¶ 345. The mere fact that but thirteen days intervene between the giving of the first and the second notice of an assessment by a benefit association, instead of fifteen days, as provided for by the articles of association, does not render invalid the suspension of the member for nonpayment after the expiration of the full period allowed by the articles for the payment of assessments.—Wolf v. Michigan Masonic Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 108 Mich. 665.

¶ 346. Where the constitution of a mutual benefit company provides that any member may make a deposit in advance for the payment of assessments, that such money shall not be used by the company for any other purpose, and that when an assessment is made a notice shall be sent to each member stating "the amount due from the member to whom the notice is sent," a notice that states the full amount of assessment but fails to show how much of the deposit remains in the company's hands as a credit is invalid, and will not let in a defense of nonpayment of the assessment.—Dowling v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Ind. Co., 116 Mich. 471.

¶ 348. One who has been suspended from membership for failure to pay an assessment of which he received no valid notice does not waive defects in the notice by seeking reinstatement and offering to pay the assessment when at the same time his correspondence with the company insists that he was not in fault.—Dowling v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Ind. Co., 116 Mich. 471.

Necessity for refund of unearned premium on cancellation, see post § 212.

¶ 349. On a charge that an assessment is excessive, the proper remedy is by vacating it or by securing a proper distribution of the funds raised by assessment, and not by filing a bill of review.—Daniel v. Citizens' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co. of Jackson, 149 Mich. 626.

¶ 350. It is within the discretion of the court in the winding-up proceedings to set aside for irregularities, and because excessive, an assessment levied by the receiver of a mutual fire insurance company against the policyholders, even though the assessment was not a void order.—Nichol v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 424.

§ 84. Payment or satisfaction of assessment or premium.

Time, place and terms, see post § 85.
Payment by note, see post § 86.
Payment by note of person other than insured, see post § 87.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to payment of premium, see post § 298.
Sufficiency of evidence of payment of premium or assessment, see post § 321.
General requisites, media and sufficiency of payments, see Payment, I.

¶ 352. A brakeman who had taken an accident policy gave the insurance company a written order on the railway company that employed him to pay the insurance company out of his wages the instalments of the premium as they fell due. This was delivered by the insurance to the railway company, according to custom. The policy provided that so long as an instalment remained unpaid there could be no claim for an injury received meanwhile. The railway company neglected to pay one of the instalments, and within the period which it should have covered the brakeman was killed. Held that, notwithstanding the nonpayment, the beneficiary in the policy was entitled to recover; the arrangement between the insured and the companies amounted to an assignment to the insurance company of enough of his wages to pay the premium when the instalments fell due, and must be regarded as a payment so long as the insurance company did not notify the insured that it was not paid.—Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 55 Mich. 141.

¶ 353. In an action on a benefit certificate upon the death of the insured, a by-law providing that a member failing to pay his assessment within the month due shall be suspended is construed not to contemplate a forfeiture for nonpayment during the disability resulting in death when at the same time there was money in the hands of the company belonging to the insured as a disability benefit.—Albrecht v. People's Life & Annuity Ass'n, 129 Mich. 444.

¶ 354. Where a beneficial society is under obligation to pay a disability benefit of $25 per month it cannot be heard to say that because the injury had not lasted a month when the assessment became due or because no demand was made on it for the benefit, it had the right to suspend the member and avoid the death penalty for his failure to pay the assessment rather than to allow the assessment out of the disability benefit due him.—Albrecht v. People's Life & Annuity Ass'n, 129 Mich. 444.

Extension of time, see also post ¶ 607.
Authority of agent to extend credit, see ante § 24.

¶ 355. As between the articles of association of an accident association and by-laws which are adopted by the directors, the former govern as to the time for payment of assessments and dues.—Shelden v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 122 Mich. 406.

¶ 356. That a life insurance policy dated August 1, and providing that payments of premiums shall be made on the first of each following quarter, was not issued until August 18th, does not postpone the time of payments of the subsequent premiums to the 18th of the respective months.—Jewett v. Northwestern Nat. Life-Ins. Co., 149 Mich. 79.

¶ 357. Under articles of an accident association providing for a forfeiture of benefits upon failure to pay assessments or dues within 30 days after notification, and that mailing a notice should constitute such notification, a member had 30 days after receipt of notice, or 30 days after a notice mailed to him would reach him in the ordinary course of the mails, to pay the assessment.—Shelden v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 122 Mich. 403.

¶ 358. An application for a life insurance policy provided that if a premium be settled by note such note should be regarded only as an extension of time of payment and that the company should not be liable for a loss occurring while such note remained due and unpaid. A premium note, past due and unpaid at the time of the assured's death, contained the words, "Send to office for collection," the words "office" being written in the blank, and plaintiff claimed that the note not having been sent to assured's office for collection, the company was in default and the policy in force. Held, that if the quoted words could be regarded as a part of the note, rather than as a mere memorandum for the company's benefit, there was nothing to show that the "office" referred to was the office of assured rather than that of the company, and that the company was not liable.—Burnham v. Michigan Mut. Life-Ins. Co., 149 Mich. 84.

¶ 359. When the right to make payments of insurance premiums at a residence of the insured depends upon custom, good faith requires that the custom should not be discontinued and payments required at the office of the society without notice to the insured.—Baker v. Michigan Mut. Protective Ass'n, 118 Mich. 431.

Construction of application with note given in payment of premium, see ante ¶ 184.
Payment by note as violation of anti-rebate law, see ante ¶¶ 15, 16.
Effect of nonpayment of note given for premium, see post § 152.
General law as to promissory notes, see Negotiable Instruments.

¶ 360. The acceptance of a note for the amount of premium due on a life insurance policy, and the giving of a renewal receipt by the company, amounts to a payment of the premium.—Tabor v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 Mich. 324.

¶ 361. A policy provided that a note taken in settlement for a premium should not be deemed a payment of the premium, but only an extension of the time for such payment, and that if the note was not paid at maturity the company should be liable for any loss occurring while the note was so dishonored, but the whole amount of the premium included in the note should be considered as earned and be collectible by the company. Held, that this authorized the taking of notes for premiums, and that as the policy was operative until the note became due, its delivery was a sufficient consideration to support the note as between him and the company.—Marskey v. Turner, 81 Mich. 62.

¶ 362. If insurance agents advance to the company the money for a premium and take the note of the insured for the amount, and negotiate it, the condition of the policy that the premium shall be actually paid before the company becomes liable is sufficiently complied with; and the company cannot cancel the policy without notifying the assured and refunding, or offering to refund, the unearned premium.—Home Ins. Co. of Columbus, Ohio v. Curtis, 32 Mich. 402.

¶ 363. Where the general agent of an insurance company, acting for himself, advances to the company the first annual premium, and accepts the note of the assured for the amount as his own, the condition of the policy requiring the premium to be actually paid before the company shall be liable is sufficiently complied with, and the company cannot cancel the policy without notifying the assured, and returning the unearned premium.—Krause v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 99 Mich. 461.

¶ 364. A payment of insurance premiums due two different insurance companies represented by the same agent in the form of a note payable for convenience to one of the companies without the knowledge of the other, which note is discounted by the payee and applied, at the agent's request, in payment on a personal account of the agent, the note being subsequently paid, constitutes payment to both companies.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Benjamin Douglas Co., 198 Mich. 457.

¶ 365. A life insurance agent received a policy, to be delivered on payment of the premium, for which he took the note of the assured, payable to the order of the company, and delivered the policy. He indorsed the note in blank, and placed it in a bank for collection. The assured became dissatisfied and demanded his note, and offered to surrender his policy, which demand and offer were refused by the agent. The note not being paid the agent brought suit upon it, in his own name, claiming that the premium was charged to his account by the company, and that, on his annual settlement the note having been dishonored, the company refused to credit him with it, but insisted on his taking it, he having guaranteed its payment; that the note was transferred to him, he paying in such settlement the premium, which was the consideration of the note as between him and the company, and that by so doing the title to the note became vested in him. Held, that if the agent's claim was correct the title to the note passed to him under the blank indorsement, its sufficiency to pass the title being recognized by the company, but that if, as defendant claimed, the company repudiated the whole transaction, treating the policy as void, and did not transfer the note to the agent, no one could recover thereon.—Marskey v. Turner, 81 Mich. 62.

¶ 366. Where an insurance company takes the notes of some person other than the assured when the premium falls due, it cannot, as against the assured, insist that they did not amount to a payment. So held where a husband's life was insured for his wife's benefit and his notes were given in renewal of the policy.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bowes, 42 Mich. 19.

¶ 367. Where an application for insurance provided that any neglect to pay the premium when due should render the policy void and forfeit all payments made thereon, and that the policy should not be binding on the company until all premiums due upon it should be received by the company or by some one authorized to receive them, and during the lifetime of the insured, it was held that the company was not liable on an undelivered policy, upon evidence that a subagent of its agent had, without its authority, taken from the insured a promissory note of a third person in part payment of the first premium, and in the absence of any showing that such subagent was allowed to substitute his own personal liability to the company in place of the premium.—Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Willets, 24 Mich. 268.

¶ 368. An applicant for insurance after knowing that the insurer has accepted the application and holds his note in payment of the first-year premium, takes possession of the policy and receipt and retains them during the entire year they are in force and has the benefit of the insurance, is estopped from asserting that the note signed was obtained by fraudulent representations of the soliciting agent.—Northern Assur. Co. v. Meyer, 194 Mich. 371.

¶ 369. It seems that one who effects an insurance with an incorporated company, by the terms of whose charter he, by so doing, becomes a member of the corporate body, and on receiving his policy gives a premium note in consideration therefor, payable to the company by its corporate name, is estopped from denying the corporate existence of the company in an action on the note. —Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co., 2 D. 124.

¶ 371. Though a note given as first premium on an insurance policy, is obtained by fraud of the agent, continued retention of the policy for two years, without any repudiation of the transaction, waives the fraud and renders the maker liable on the note, though the policy provides that nonpayment of premiums renders the policy void, there being also a provision for reinstatement and provision for payment of a specified sum at the end of a ten-year term.—National Life & Trust Co. v. Omans, 137 Mich. 365.

Time to sue and loss of right by delay, see post § 90.
Delivery of policy as condition precedent, see post § 91.
Suits by foreign companies, see post § 92.
Presumptions and evidence, see post § 93.
Defenses and set-offs, see post § 94.
Liability for assessments of mutual companies, see ante §§ 76-78.
Actions by and against agents, see ante §§ 33, 34.
Forfeiture for default in payment of premium or assessment, see post §§ 150-155.
Amount requisite to jurisdiction of suit by receiver to recover assessments in mutual companies, see Equity § 16.
Right to costs in action for assessments by receiver of mutual company, recovery of less than $100, see Costs § 19.

¶ 372. With his application for an insurance policy in plaintiff company, defendant gave his note in payment of the first premium. The policy was never delivered to him and there was no evidence that plaintiff actually mailed said policy with sufficient postage paid thereon to defendant. Plaintiff never notified defendant that his application was accepted. In a suit on the note, held, a verdict was properly directed for defendant.—State Life Ins. Co. v. Harrah, 169 Mich. 127.

¶ 373. Defendant signed an application for life insurance which stated that the company should be free to accept or reject the risk. He gave a note to the agent for the premium. He then refused to be examined by the medical examiner. In a suit on the note, held, it was supported by no consideration, no contract of insurance having been made, and plaintiff could not recover.—Ten Broek v. Jansma, 161 Mich. 597.

¶ 374. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against an action by the receiver of a mutual insurance company to recover an assessment levied by the receiver for the payment of losses and expenses, until the assessment is made.—Peake v. Fuller, 123 Mich. 684.

¶ 375. The statute of limitations does not start to run against an assessment made against a member of an insolvent insurance company at the time of the appointment of the receiver, but begins at the date of the assessment.—Nichol v. Newman, 160 Mich. 582.

¶ 376. The receiver of an assessment insurance company was ordered by the court to mail an assessment notice, and to bring suit if payment was not made within thirty days. Held, that the assessment became due upon mailing the notice, and the statute of limitations began to run then, and not at the end of the thirty days.—Pratt v. Broadwell, 159 Mich. 375.

Necessity and sufficiency of delivery, see ante §§ 49, 50.

¶ 377. Where a promissory note was given in part consideration of a policy of life insurance, and it was claimed in an action thereon that the policy was not to be delivered until after the note was paid, it was held error to receive evidence of the custom of the company and of its agents in this regard, in the absence of any showing that such custom was known to the other party, or that the latter contracted in reference to it.—Lawrence v. Griswold, 30 Mich. 410.

¶ 378. Where, on making application for life insurance, a promissory note was given as part payment of the premium of a policy to be thereafter issued, and a receipt was returned referring to the note and stating how and for what it was received, it was held that the two must be read together as evidence of what the contract was; that neither the insurance company nor its agent could maintain the right to hold both note and policy until the note should be paid, and could not make its previous payment a condition of the delivery of the policy; that in an action on the note, the agent, as plaintiff, was not entitled to recover until he had delivered or tendered the policy to the defendant who had applied for insurance, without any conditions as to the previous payment of the note; and that when no such delivery or tender was made, and no notice given to the applicant of the acceptance of his application until after the maturity of his note, the applicant would be at liberty to rescind and recover back the money advanced, in addition to the note given in payment of the premium. If the construction of the note and receipt could be changed in any way by parol evidence, the question would belong to the jury.—Lawrence v. Griswold, 30 Mich. 410.

Rights of foreign insurers in general, see ante II, B.

Disability of unlicensed foreign insurance company to sue for premiums, see Foreign Corporations, ¶¶ 51, 52.

¶ 379. A foreign mutual fire insurance company which has not filed the prescribed statement and obtained the requisite authority to do business in this state cannot maintain an action in this state for premium upon contracts of insurance.—Seamans v. Temple Co., 105 Mich. 400.

¶ 380. Where the commissioner of insurance has revoked the authority of a foreign insurance company to do business within the state, it cannot thereafter recover on instalment notes upon which, by the terms of its policies, payments fall due in advance.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

Evidence in action on policy, see post XX, C.

¶ 381. In an action upon a note given by a member of a mutual insurance company in consideration of his policy, parol evidence is admissible to prove that A., who signed the policy as president, was acting president of the company, and that the policy was therefore valid and binding upon the company and a good consideration for the note.—Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co., 2 D. 124.

¶ 382. The payment of a part of the premium upon an insurance policy based on an application which provided that the policy should not bind the company until the latter should receive all premiums due upon it does not, by itself, raise a presumption of an understanding that time was to be given for the payment of the remainder.—Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Willets, 24 Mich. 268.

¶ 384. Plaintiff in an action upon a premium note, having given the defendant notice to produce the policy upon which the note was given, which he refused to do, made the affidavit required by R. S. 1846, p. 461, § 100, setting forth the facts within the knowledge of the defendant to be, the issuing of the policy, its number, its receipt by defendant, its contents, and the policy. Held, that under this affidavit plaintiff was entitled to examine the defendant as to the existence of the policy, its receipt by him, its contents, and to its production in court if in his possession or under his control.—Way v. Billings, 2 Mich. 397.

¶ 385. The admission of a policy of insurance in a premium note is sufficient evidence of the policy in a suit on the note.—Way v. Billings, 2 Mich. 397.

¶ 386. Judgment for defendant is properly directed in an action by the receiver of a mutual benefit society to recover an assessment, where the receiver testified that he was appointed receiver and acted as such and made the assessment by order of the court, and a purported certified copy of the order was also introduced, but there was no evidence that the court ever obtained jurisdiction of the defendant or of the company, nor were the pleadings shown, or any evidence that defendant was a member of the society or that he had any notice of the assessment.—Taft v. Pullen, 130 Mich. 595.

¶ 387. In suit for premium applications, policies issued thereon and official bonds of officers admissible to prove user of corporate charter and existence of corporation.—Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co., 2 D. 124.

§ 94. ——Defenses and set-offs.

Anti-rebate laws as defense, see ante § 4.
Excuses for nonpayment generally, see post § 155.
Pleading and proof of payment, see Payment, V.

¶ 388. Defendant signed an application for life insurance which stated that the company should be free to accept or reject the risk. He gave a note to the agent for the premium. He then refused to be examined by the medical examiner. Held, that no contract of insurance resulted; that if there was any contract it was with the plaintiff agent to take insurance; and that plaintiff must recover, if at all, for breach of this contract and could not recover on the note. —Ten Broek v. Jansma, 161 Mich. 597.

¶ 389. Where policyholders of an insolvent insurance company are subject to a levy of special assessments to meet losses, they may set off what is due them as unearned premiums.—Ely v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 466.

¶ 390. An insurance company cannot recover against a policyholder on an instalment note of which the instalments are to be paid in advance, where the policy stipulates that so long as an instalment remains due and unpaid the policy shall be null and void as to any losses occurring during the period of default in payment.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

¶ 391. A life insurance agent whose powers were not restricted by the printed application purposely misstated, in filling up the application the occupation of the applicant, which had been correctly stated to him by the latter, and which rendered the latter uninsurable under the conditions of the policy. Held, that the assured on discovering the fraud had a right to rescind the contract of insurance, and to show the facts as a defense in a suit upon a note given for the premium.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Reed, 84 Mich. 524.

§ 95. Recovery of premium or assessment paid.

See also ante ¶ 335.
Necessity for refund of unearned premium on cancellation, see post § 212.
Recovery of illegal or mistaken payments in general, see Payment, VI.

¶ 392. Statements by an insurance company, which has reinsured a life policy, that dividends ought to operate to reduce very materially the charges against the policy, even though they did not entirely offset them, constitute merely an opinion as to what might occur in the future and cannot be made the basis of an action for fraud, nor for the recovery of the premiums paid. —Warren v. Federal Life Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 342.

¶ 393. In an action against an insurance company, which had reinsured a life risk, to recover premiums paid, held that plaintiff was estopped from invoking the provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 7217, How. 2nd Ed., § 8151, relating to the requirements of life insurance policies and giving the right of action for recovery of premiums paid under policies not complying with the statute.—Warren v. Federal Life Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 342.

VII. PROPERTY, LIFE OR INTEREST COVERED, AND RISK OR HAZARD INSURED AGAINST.

Risk and causes insured against in benefit societies, see Fraternal Associations, § 21.
"Hazards not covered" clause in standard fire insurance policy, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 394. A farmers' mutual fire insurance company, organized under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 195, providing for the insurance of personal property "being upon farms as farm property," cannot lawfully make a contract of insurance covering the fixtures and utensils of a slaughterhouse, conducted by claimant and used by him in the wholesale meat business.—Geraghty v. Westenaw Mut. Fire-Ins. Co., 145 Mich. 635.

¶ 395. The company is not liable for loss where property was not situated as required by statute and by-laws, and as specified in policy.—Wildey v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 446.

Adjustment of losses and benefits payable in general, see post XVI.

¶ 396. The policy covers all loss which necessarily follows from the occurrence of a fire, whenever the injury arises directly or immediately from the peril, or necessarily from incidental and surrounding circumstances, the operation and influence of which could not be avoided.—Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 425.

¶ 397. Insurance covering "damage by fire" extends to loss occasioned by water used in case of fire to prevent the destruction of the insured property.—John Davis & Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A., 115 Mich. 382.

¶ 399. A fire insurance policy upon a stock of goods provided that the company should not be liable for loss caused "by invasion, * * * or (unless fire ensues, and in that event for the damage by fire only) by explosion of any kind." By a subsequent clause it was provided that "if a building, or any part thereof, fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease." Held, that the latter clause did not preclude a recovery upon the policy for damages to the stock by fire ensuing upon an explosion which caused the store building to collapse.—John Davis & Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A., 115 Mich. 382.

B. LIFE, CASUALTY OR LIABILITY INSURANCE.

§ 98. Death, injury or disability covered.

Results of mistaken or improper medical treatment, see post § 99.
Effect of insanity or temporary derangement, see post § 100.
Criminal, illegal and violent acts, see post § 101.
Blood poisoning, ptomaine poisoning and other unintentional poisonings, see post § 102.
Casualty or liability insurance, see post § 103.
Construction of policy provisions as to subject-matter covered, see ante § 69.
What amounts to disability, see also post ¶ 900.
What constitutes total disability, see also post ¶¶ 898, 899.
Sickness covered by sick benefit policy, see also post ¶ 903.
Amputation amounting to "amputation of limb" under accident insurance policy, see post ¶¶ 901, 902.
Breach of condition against suicide, see post § 158.
Construction of words in policy covering death by suicide, see also ante ¶ 266.
Description in policy of risk or hazard insured against, see ante § 53.
Forfeiture for breach of conditions respecting person insured or his occupation or status, see post §§ 156-160.

¶ 400. Under an accident insurance policy providing that the insurance shall not extend to accidental injuries or death resulting from or caused directly or indirectly, wholly, or in part, by hernia or disease in any form, there can be recovery for death only if it is due solely to the injury received and not partly to disease as a contributing cause.—Skinner v. Commercial Travelers Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 190 Mich. 353.

¶ 401. An accident policy, providing indemnity for loss of time resulting from bodily injuries which shall "immediately following the receipt thereof wholly and continuously disable and prevent the assured from performing any and all duties pertaining to any business or occupation," does not cover an injury, where the testimony shows that the insured continued his employment for some time immediately following the receipt of such injuries, although subsequently he discontinued work because of such injuries.—Letherer v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co., 145 Mich. 310.

¶ 402. The provision in a sick benefit policy, that in order to recover the insured must be "continuously confined to the house and subject to the personal calls of a physician," does not require the insured in order to recover to remain in the house continuously; it is sufficient if he is necessarily confined to the house the larger part of the time and only goes forth to consult his physician or under the physician's direction.—Hoffman v. Michigan Home & Hospital Ass'n, 128 Mich. 323.

¶ 403. In an action upon an accident insurance policy wherein the insurer agreed to defend the assured in all suits brought against him by reason of injuries occasioned by or damages growing out of the operation of his automobiles, held, the insurer was under no obligation to defend a criminal action against the assured for manslaughter.—Patterson v. Standard Accident Ins. Co., 178 Mich. 288.

Death resulting from poisoning in course of mistaken medical treatment, see also post ¶ 626.

¶ 404. If an injury to an eye does not continuously disable an insured from the performance of his business duties, the disabling thing being the result of improper medical treatment, he cannot recover weekly indemnity under a policy of accident insurance, notwithstanding the insurer is liable for the loss of the member as the result of such treatment.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 405. The loss of an eye by the introduction of acid into it as the result of a physician's mistake in treating it after an accident to it is within a provision of a policy of accident insurance for indemnity for the accidental loss of such member.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 406. Where an assured was drowned by falling or jumping from a vessel while temporarily deranged from the effect of a chronic malady of long standing, there can be no recovery on an accident insurance policy which relieved the insurer from liability for death or injury caused by illness or disease irrespective of whether the assured was sane or insane.—Rathman v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 186 Mich. 115.

§ 101. ——Criminal, illegal and violent acts.

Breach of condition against death by violence or design, see post § 157.

Breach of condition against death by suicide or self-destruction, see post § 158.

¶ 407. Intentional homicide is an accident where the deceased is in nowise responsible for it.—Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co., 131 Mich. 234.

§ 102. ——Blood poisoning, ptomaine poisoning and other unintentional poisonings.

Poisoning within exceptions of accident insurance policy although result of physician's mistake, see post ¶ 626.

¶ 408. Plaintiff insured under a policy that provides, among other things, that such insurance shall not cover accident, injury, death, loss of limb, sight or disability, resulting wholly or partly, directly or indirectly from disease in any form, who accidentally burned his feet in a hot air bath, which resulted in gangrene, and subsequently necessitated the amputation of one leg, can recover, even though he was afflicted with diabetes; where the evidence showed that plaintiff's physician had pronounced him cured of diabetes at the time of the issuance of the policy, and that defendant's own physician diagnosed the gangrene as being traumatic; i. e., caused by the wound.—Jiroch v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 145 Mich. 375.

¶ 409. Ptomaine poisoning causing death is an accident within the meaning of a policy of accident insurance.—Johnson v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 184 Mich. 406.

¶ 410. A policy of insurance against loss by insolvency of debtors owing for merchandise sold and delivered between April 1, 1893, and March 31, 1894, both inclusive, and by its terms to "expire" on March 31, 1894, does not exclude insurer's liability for losses occurring after March 31st on sales made on or before that date, and duly proved according to terms of the policy; since the obvious purpose was to insure against losses by extending credit, and in view of provisions giving 90 days after expiration of the policy for making proofs, and other provisions giving a renewal the effect of carrying forward to the new policy such liability, it must be intended that the word "expire" was merely a limitation on the sales period covered by the policy.—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

¶ 412. Plaintiff was the holder of an employer's liability insurance policy in defendant company. One Lund, an employee of plaintiff, started suit for personal injuries, alleging in his original declaration a common-law liability due to plaintiff's negligence. Defendant insurance company was notified of this suit, by plaintiff, and the original declaration was turned over to it.

Lund afterwards filed an amended declaration basing plaintiff's liability on the violation of a statute which forbade the employment of minors under the age of sixteen in dangerous occupations. Defendant, upon receiving this amended declaration from plaintiff, advised plaintiff that under the terms of the policy defendant was not liable to indemnify plaintiff for damages recovered by Lund against the plaintiff on the said statutory ground. Thereafter plaintiff's attorney and defendant's attorney united in the defense of the suit. The jury found the plaintiff liable on the statutory ground alone. Held, defendant by undertaking the defense against Lund's suit did not waive any of its rights so as to make it liable for damages recovered by Lund against the plaintiff.—Sargent Mfg. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 165 Mich. 87.

¶ 413. Under an insurance contract indemnifying employees against loss of time by "discharge or suspension as a penalty or method of discipline," there can be no recovery where the discharge is an absolute termination of the contract of employment.—Stitt v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Protective Ass'n, 177 Mich. 207.

¶ 414. Under a contract of insurance in a mutual protective association providing for indemnity against loss of time occasioned by "discharge or suspension as a penalty or method of discipline," and that the reason given by the employer for suspension or discharge shall be "the sole basis of determining the liability of the association." Held, that while the reason given by the employer must be taken as the general basis of discharge, it is an unreasonable construction to hold that such reason shall be the sole basis for determining liability.—Stitt v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Protective Ass'n, 177 Mich. 207.

¶ 415. Under an insurance contract of indemnity against loss of time by discharge or suspension of an employee, providing that no recovery can be had if suspension or discharge was the result of knowingly disobeying rules. Held, that an engineer who exceeded the speed limit over a certain bridge, and used a hand signal instead of the semaphore at an interlocked crossing, must be said to have knowingly disobeyed rules.—Stitt v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Protective Ass'n, 177 Mich. 207.

VIII. WARRANTIES, CONDITIONS AND REPRESENTATIONS.

Representations in application as warranties, see post §§ 105-107.

Validity, propriety and reasonableness of conditions, see post §§ 108, 109.

Notice or knowledge requisite to charge insured with conditions, see post § 148.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to warranties, see post § 300.

Rescission, forfeiture and avoidance for breach of warranty, representation or condition, see post XII, B.

Waiver of breach of warranty or condition, see post XII, C.

¶ 416. In construing warranties in insurance policies, the prime object to be reached is the intention of the parties, which, when found, must control, and such warranties must be interpreted by the rules applicable to the interpretation of other mercantile contracts.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

§ 105. Representations in application as warranties.

Materiality of representations as factor, see post § 106.

Misstatements and omissions made in good faith, see post § 107.

Construction of questions and answers in application, see ante § 48.

Misrepresentations made by agent of insurer in preparation of application, see post §§ 193-195.

Admissibility of evidence as to representations and warranties in application, see post § 310.

Truth of representations in application as question of law or fact, see post § 335.

¶ 417. A warranty in an insurance policy that any application or statement connected with its procurement is true, and shall be a part of the policy, makes an oral application, and the accompanying statements made to the agent as to the condition of the title, a part of the policy.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

¶ 418. Where an insurance policy expressly makes the application for insurance a part of itself, and a warranty by the assured of the truth of all statements contained in it as to the value of property insured, etc., and further provides that false representations, material omissions and overvaluations in the written application, or otherwise, shall render the policy void, all statements contained in such application must be treated as warranties, and under the general rule must be strictly true to authorize a recovery upon the policy.—American Ins. Co. v. Gilbert, 27 Mich. 429.

¶ 419. Where a policy issued on an oral application and statement to the insurer's agent provides that the assured, by accepting the policy, warrants that any application or statement connected with procuring the insurance, or referred to in the policy, is true and shall be a part of the policy, a further provision that the insurer "shall not be bound under this policy by any act of or statement made to or by any agent or other person which is not contained in this policy, or in any written paper above mentioned," is not a warranty, nor does it have any effect upon the assured, except as to statements and acts of agents and others after the delivery and acceptance of the policy.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

¶ 420. The rule that where a copy of the application is set out in the policy it is the duty of the insured to know that the representations therein contained, constituting the inducement for the issuance of the policy, are true, applies to accident insurance where the policy is issued by the home office upon the representations contained in the application.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

¶ 421. A written application for fire insurance should be considered a part of the contract, and a warranty in any event, if the policy was issued upon it.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 123 Mich. 277.

¶ 422. False representations made by an applicant for life insurance, as to holding policies in other companies, as to having been rejected by other companies and as to the making of unfavorable reports by physicians in several instances, were warranties, and the company had the right to rely on them as such.—Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 133 Mich. 526.

¶ 423. A life insurance policy not being issued until delivered, the fact that such part of the application containing representations which were claimed to have been untrue, was made after the date of the policy, was no basis for the claim that the policy was not issued in reliance upon such representations.—Malicki v. Guaranty Fund Life Soc., 119 Mich. 151.

¶ 424. An accident insurance company has the right to provide that statements by the insured in his application with respect to the refusal of other companies to issue insurance to him, and with respect to the receipt by him of indemnity for accident, shall be material representations and warranties.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

¶ 425. A statement in an application for accident insurance, which was made a part of the policy, that the applicant had not been disabled or received medical or surgical treatment during the preceding five years, is an affirmative warranty.—Rathman v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 186 Mich. 115.

¶ 426. Where an application for insurance has due notice printed upon the form of application and of the policy of the charter and by-laws of the company, which require that the property to be insured be not mortgaged above half its value, and that the insurance and mortgage do not exceed three-fourths of its value, the presentation of an application signed under such charter and by-laws, and the applicant's acceptance of the insurance, amount to a warranty of the facts therein required as stated, and the company need not inquire into them. And in agreeing to the charter and by-laws he has agreed that the fact is material to the risk.—Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 398.

¶ 427. An agreement in an application for insurance on a saw-mill, "not to use movable, open lights," is construed to relate to the general and ordinary use of lights in and about the mill, and not to their special and necessary use in making repairs permitted to be made by the express terms of the policy.—Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 407.

Estoppel or waiver of breach of warranty or condition, see post XII, B.
Avoidance of policy for breach of immaterial warranty, see also post ¶¶ 534, 536, 537.

¶ 428. Overvaluation of property in applying for insurance thereon can hardly become material where the insurance contract provides that the amount to which the insured shall be entitled in case of loss shall not exceed three-fourths of its actual value at the time of loss.—Schmidt v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co., 55 Mich. 432.

¶ 429. A warranty of the value in an insurance policy is not rendered immaterial by a provision in the policy that the insurer shall in no case be liable to pay more than the true cash value of the property insured. —Briggs v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 52.

¶ 430. Parties may contract on such conditions as they see fit, and if an insured person has chosen to make his representations warranties, as regards the condition and value of his property, he is estopped from denying, and the insurer relieved from showing, that they are material to the contract, and no court can presume to say that the insurer would have made the contract on any other terms.—American Ins. Co. v. Gilbert, 27 Mich. 429.

¶ 431. The omission in an application for a policy of insurance to mention a small mortgage upon the property, which, by the terms of the contract under which the insured purchased the property, his vendor was bound to pay, and which was less than the amount unpaid on the contract, was held not material to the risk, and therefore, under the terms of the policy, unimportant.—American Ins. Co. v. Gilbert, 27 Mich. 429.

¶ 432. Where the material fact is ownership it is unimportant that an applicant for insurance states that he holds under a will when in fact he holds under a deed.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 433. The existence of any substantial incumbrance upon property is a material fact in insurance, whether the statements of the insured are made warranties or not.—Ætna Ins. Co. v. Resh, 40 Mich. 241.

¶ 434. Failure on the part of an owner of property insured to mention in the policy, which stated that he held under a land contract, that such contract was assigned as security for a building debt if not inquired about and known to the insurance agent and no deceit is practiced, is not a material misrepresentation of title.—Guest v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 66 Mich. 98.

¶ 435. A stipulation in an insurance policy, that if the insured shall obtain other insurance without the consent of the company the policy shall be void, is a part of the contract with which, if material, the insured must comply to enable him to recover upon the policy.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

§ 107. ——Misstatements and omissions made in good faith.

Avoidance for omissions or concealments, see post § 143.
Immaterial omissions, see also ante ¶ 431.
Good faith as defense for misstatement, see also post ¶ 535.

¶ 436. Under section 1 of Act No. 187 of the Public Acts of 1907, regarding life insurance policies, innocent misstatements or omissions to answer on the part of the applicant shall be held to be simply representations, but in case that fraud can be shown, they shall be held to be warranties.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Hamburger, 174 Mich. 254.

¶ 437. In an action on an insurance policy under evidence that plaintiff's employee who signed the application did so under the belief that it was "a survey blank" as used in maritime law; that certain portions of the application referring to the exposure of the boat insured by the location of buildings within a certain distance of the place in which it was to be stored were not called to his attention, an instruction, that if such facts were true plaintiff's recovery would not be barred by the falsity of the answers with respect to such questions, was held correct.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 179 Mich. 443.

¶ 438. Where an applicant for insurance was at the time in the occupancy of the premises, under an oral arrangement between his wife, her father and himself, whereby the father-in-law had advanced $2,000 of the $6,000 purchase price of the premises, and caused the same to be conveyed to his daughter, subject to a mortgage of $4,000, for a home for herself and husband, with the understanding that she was to deed to her husband, the applicant, when he should have paid off the incumbrance, and he had accordingly gone into possession, made improvements, and made large payments upon the incumbrance, in reliance upon this arrangement, and all the parties were proceeding in good faith under the same, it was held that this was sufficient to make out such an equitable title in the applicant as would answer the representation that he was owner of the property.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of St. Joseph v. Fogelman, 35 Mich. 481.

¶ 439. Where in an application for insurance the applicant has represented, in answer to a question, that he was the owner of the property to be insured, a showing that he had the equitable title to the same is sufficient to satisfy the representation.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of St. Joseph v. Fogelman, 35 Mich. 481.

¶ 440. An applicant for fire insurance is not bound to tell the agent what the agent assumes to know and does know; or to assume that it is his duty to consider as material, and express in words what the agent knows, and does not treat as material or necessary to be written down.—Richards v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 420.

¶ 441. Where one applies for fire insurance without making any representations whatever for the purpose of procuring it, the insurer takes the risk of undisclosed taxes when it issues the policy.—Kennedy v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co., 157 Mich. 411.

¶ 442. Where an assured, in making a verbal application for a policy of fire insurance on lumber, informed the insurer's local agent that he had contracted to sell it, his failure to disclose the exact amount of payments he had received under the contract will not avoid the policy, where such information was not requested by such agent.—Fuhrman v. Sun Ins. Office of London, 180 Mich. 439.

§ 108. Validity, propriety and reasonableness of conditions.

Agreements for forfeiture, see post § 109.
Breach of conditions in policy, see post §§ 147-171.
"Other insurance" clause in standard fire insurance policy form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
"Hazards not covered" condition in standard fire insurance form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
"Unconditional and sole ownership" condition in standard fire insurance policy form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
Condition against increase of risk in standard fire insurance form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

Condition against "building, altering or repairing" in standard fire insurance form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
Condition against vacancy in standard fire insurance policy form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
Condition against explosives in standard fire insurance form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
Condition against incumbrance in standard fire insurance form, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.
Condition in standard fire insurance form prescribing and limiting mode of waiver of provisions of policy, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 443. A condition avoiding the policy of fire insurance if without consent of the insurer indorsed on the policy foreclosure proceedings should be begun against the property is reasonable and proper.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 74.

¶ 444. A provision in an insurance policy that "The transfer, incumbering, or vacating of said property * * * without notice in writing to the secretary of said company, will avoid the policy," is valid.—Jaskulski v. Citizens' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 603.

¶ 445. Conditions in policies of life insurance limiting the time for bringing actions thereon at law or in equity to less than six years from the accrual of the cause of action, are prohibited by § 2, Act No. 187, Pub. Acts 1907, § 8313, How. St., 2nd Ed., and § 6, Act No. 236, Pub. Acts 1909, § 8317, How. St., 2nd Ed.—Johnson v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 184 Mich. 406.

¶ 446. Insurers may always frame contracts of insurance to suit themselves, and may, if they choose, insert express stipulations to the effect that insanity shall not in any case prevent avoidance by suicide of the insured.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592.

¶ 447. Under a fire insurance policy providing that it shall be void if the insured fail to take an inventory of stock at least once a year, the insured is entitled to a reasonable time after the issue of the policy within which to make an inventory, if there is none in existence which satisfies the requirements of the policy.—Allen v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 204.

¶ 448. The "iron-safe clause" of an insurance policy cannot be held invalid on the ground that it is not competent for the insurer to contract with the assured for the preservation of testimony; since, in order to preserve exact evidence of the loss, parties may contract that the books of account and inventory of the assured shall be kept in an iron safe.—King v. Concordia Fire-Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 258.

¶ 449. A provision of a policy of fire insurance that, "If, with the consent of this company, an interest under this policy shall exist in favor of a mortgagee or of any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance other than the interest of the insured as described herein, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached to or appended hereto," has the effect of freeing the person named in the loss payable clause from all conditions of the policy except those that are, in substance, at least written upon the policy or attached or appended thereto at the time of creating such interest. (Affirmed by equally divided court.)—Gourlay v. Insurance Co. of North America, 181 Mich. 286.

¶ 450. A stipulation avoiding an insurance policy if the property be or become incumbered by a chattel mortgage, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed upon or added to the policy, is reasonable and valid.—Olney v. German Ins. Co., 88 Mich. 94.

¶ 451. A provision in a policy of insurance indemnifying insured against loss or liability on account of any bodily injuries accidentally suffered by any person during the testing of the automobiles of insured before sale, requiring immediate written notice of injuries as a condition of liability, must be construed as meaning within a reasonable time after insured learns of the accident or claim, provided he exercises reasonable diligence to acquire such information.—Oakland Motor Car Co. v. American Fidelity Co., 190 Mich. 74.

Construction of provisions in policy calling for forfeiture, see ante § 67.

¶ 452. There is no impediment to agreements for forfeitures in fire insurance policies if the parties choose to make them.—Allen v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 204.

IX. THE BENEFICIARY OR INSURED, AND CHANGES OF SAME.

§ 110. In general; designation or description in policy.

"Heirs," "children" and other descriptions by relationship, see post § 111.
Interest of beneficiary of life insurance before death of insured, see post § 112.
Right, title and interest of beneficiary after death of insured, see post §§ 113, 114.
Change of beneficiary, see post §§ 115, 116.
Changes and substitutions in subject-matter, policy or rights, see post X.
Assignment or transfer of policy, see post XI.

Description or name of insured as requisites of policy or contract, see ante § 52.
Interest or title of beneficiary or insured as question of law or fact, see post § 332.
Beneficiary and change of beneficiary in fraternal benefit policies, see Fraternal Associations, IV.

¶ 453. Where the constitution of a mutual benefit association gives members the absolute right of naming beneficiaries, it is the duty of the officer who issues a certificate of membership to insert therein the name of the beneficiary designated in the application for membership.—Eckler v. Terry, 95 Mich. 123.

¶ 454. On the death of a member of a mutual benefit or co-operative society company, who dies intestate, and whose certificate is made payable to his "heirs at law," the widow is entitled to share in the proceeds of said policy.—Lyons v. Yerex, 100 Mich. 214.

¶ 455. An application by a member of an endowment order for transfer to another class in the order, from the fact that it was made a part of the contract of insurance, will control, in preference to the certificate of membership issued thereon, where the designation of the beneficiaries differed in the two instruments.—Eckler v. Terry, 95 Mich. 123.

§ 111. "Heirs," "children" and other descriptions by relationship.

See also ante ¶ 454.

¶ 456. The same rules of construction should be applied to dispositions of property to "heirs," created by mutual benefit associations as are applied to bequests by will.—Union Mut. Ass'n v. Montgomery, 70 Mich. 587; Silvers v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 94 Mich. 39.

¶ 458. A policy to the widow of insured, if she survived him, but to her children, if she died before him, vests in them on her dying before insured; and on the children's dying thereafter before the insured passes to their children.—Voss v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 161.

¶ 459. A life insurance policy payable to the insured's wife if living, or, if not, to the children of the insured and his wife, was payable, where, prior to the death of the insured, his wife and one of their two children died, to the remaining child and the issue of the deceased child; since the heirs of such deceased child had a vested, though contingent, interest in such policy.—Michigan Mut. Life-Ins. Co. v. Basler, 140 Mich. 233.

¶ 460. Under How. St. §§ 4238, 6300, 6301 a wife may have her husband's life insured in her favor with a provision that in case she predeceases him the insurance shall be paid to their children or to the children's guardian.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

¶ 461. Where two beneficiaries are named in the certificate of a mutual benefit association, "in case of death of either, full amount to go to the survivor, if living; if not living, to the heirs of said member," upon the member's death the shares of both beneficiaries vest in them, and if either dies before the expiration of the time limited for payment his share goes to his personal representative, not to the survivor.—Union Mut. Ass'n of Battle Creek v. Montgomery, 70 Mich. 587.

¶ 462. A benefit, under a mutual benefit certificate which provides that upon a member's death a sum shall be paid "to L. E. L., heirs, administrators or assigns," L. E. L. having been a member's wife and having died before him, and there having been no children of the marriage, goes to the husband's heirs and not the wife's.—Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Rolfe, 76 Mich. 146.

¶ 463. A life insurance policy made payable to the insured's wife if she be living at his death and, if she be then dead, to her children, held to pass on its issuance a vested interest to her contingent upon her surviving the insured, and to her children and to the children of her children contingent upon her nonsurvival of the insured.—Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Wirtz, 196 Mich. 145.

§ 112. Interest of beneficiary of life insurance before death of insured.

Rights of beneficiary after death, see post § 113.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to title or interest of insured, see post § 320.
Right of beneficiary to re-establish policy surrendered by insured through misrepresentations of insurer's agent, see post ¶ 881.

¶ 464. A beneficiary named in the certificate of a mutual benefit society has no vested rights before the member's death.—Union Mut. Ass'n of Battle Creek v. Montgomery, 70 Mich. 587.

¶ 465. In respect to a benefit certificate of a mutual benefit association prior to the member's death, the beneficiary has not any assignable interest.—Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Rolfe, 76 Mich. 146.

¶ 466. The death, before the death of the member to whom a beneficiary certificate has been issued, of the person to whom the certificate is made payable terminates the latter's contingent interest in the fund so that it cannot pass by the beneficiary's will.—Wood v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 84 Mich. 521.

§ 113. Right, title and interest of beneficiary after death of insured.

Rights against decedent's creditors, see post § 114.

Interest of beneficiary of life insurance before death of insured, see ante § 112.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to title or interest of insured, see post § 320.

Right to re-establish policy surrendered by insured through false representations of insurer's agent, see post ¶ 881.

Assignment after death or loss, see post § 123, ¶ 498.

¶ 467. A life insurance policy which was from time to time surrendered for reduction in amount only, is to be construed from the date of the original policy in relation to the interest of the heirs of a beneficiary after whose death a further reduction was made.—Voss v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 161.

§ 114. ——Rights against decedent's creditors.

Validity of transfer of life insurance made to avoid creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances § 14.

¶ 468. The fund or benefit payable cannot be appropriated to payment of deceased member's debts, is not part of his estate, and goes not to his administrator, but to the beneficiary or to the latter's guardian.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44; Supreme Council Cath. Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Priest, 46 Mich. 429; Supreme Council Cath. Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Firnane, 50 Mich. 82.

§ 115. Change of beneficiary.

Necessity for consent of beneficiary, see post § 116.

Changes and substitutions in subject-matter, policy or rights, see post X.

Change under contracts and laws of fraternal associations, see Fraternal Associations § 33.

Mental competency of parties to make or assent to change, see Insane Persons, I.

Waiver of right as beneficiary by widow in favor of estate by bringing suit in her representative capacity, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 229.

¶ 469. Although a policy of insurance gives the right to the insured to change the beneficiary, he cannot do so, so as to deprive a beneficiary of her equity in such insurance when the insured has made an agreement calling for the payment of the premiums by the latter.—In re Reid's Estate, 170 Mich. 476.

¶ 470. The rules of a regularly incorporated mutual benefit association provided that on the death of a member his share of the beneficiary fund should be paid to the persons named by him on the will book, and that if he named no one it should be divided equally among his family. The rules did not assume to take away the right to change the disposition of the fund. Held, where a member made a will after entering an order on the will book, that the will should be followed.—Supreme Council Cath. Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Priest, 46 Mich. 429.

¶ 471. A life insurance company is not obligated to change the beneficiary of a policy on designation of another beneficiary by reason of the condition of the policy to the effect that the production, by the company, of the policy and a receipt in full by any of a number of designated relatives, etc., shall be conclusive evidence of payment.—Malburg v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 568.

¶ 472. The member's accepting and retaining a certificate without objection did not imply assent to the designation therein of a beneficiary so as to preclude claim by the beneficiary designated in the application; where the application designated the beneficiary and was part of the contract, mere silence on the member's part not being sufficient to set aside a designation that was part of the contract.—Eckler v. Terry, 95 Mich. 123.

¶ 473. The second wife of the testator became insane, and was sent to a sanitarium. The testator was constantly surrounded by the influence of his daughter by a former wife and her husband. He substituted the daughter in place of the insane wife as beneficiary in an insurance policy, made no other provision for the wife, and sought to charge the expenses of the asylum upon her small estate. Testator was afflicted with Bright's disease, and was despondent. Held, the circumstances were sufficient to justify a verdict of undue influence.—Andrews v. Lavery, 159 Mich. 26.

¶ 474. The beneficiary named in a policy of a mutual benefit society has no such vested right that the insured cannot change the beneficiary by a compliance with the terms of the policy and by the consent of the association.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 584; Union Mut. Assoc. v. Montgomery, 70 Mich. 587.

¶ 475. Upon the execution of a life insurance policy, the beneficiaries therein named acquire an interest which the law recognizes, and which the insured cannot dispose of at his own will.—Lockwood v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 334.

X. CHANGES AND SUBSTITUTIONS IN SUBJECT-MATTER, POLICY OR RIGHTS.

See also post ¶ 881.

Authority of agent to make modifications, indorsements and renewals, see ante § 25.

¶ 476. An insured in a benefit order sent in his policy to be canceled in order that a new policy for a different amount might be issued. The by-laws of the order provided that all policies should be signed by the president and the secretary, and should take effect at 12 o'clock noon on the day of the date of the issue of the policy. The new policy was dated and signed on the day preceding the fire in question, and the records of the society showed that the earlier policy was canceled on that day and the new policy put in force. The new policy did not reach the hands of the insured until several days after the fire. Held, the old policy was canceled on the day before the fire; the new policy was in force on the same day; and the beneficiary must recover on the new, and not on the old, policy.—Allen v. Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, Ltd., 165 Mich. 18.

§ 118. Options, privileges, consents and permits.

Unauthorized indorsements and modifications by agent, see post § 198.

Necessity for indorsement of consent as to title change, see also post ¶ 711.

¶ 477. Where a policy declared on its face that "If, without written consent hereon, there is any prior or subsequent insurance, this policy shall be void," it was held that such consent, in the absence of evidence of facts dispensing with a signature thereto, must be signed by the person whose signature was declared necessary to the validity of the policy and its extensions.—Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467.

¶ 478. Where an insurance policy stipulates that other insurance obtained without the consent of the company shall invalidate the policy, but contains the clause "$3,000 other insurance permitted," it is to be assumed that their consent to future insurance need not be in any more definite terms, as, for instance, by specifying by name the companies from which it might be obtained.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

¶ 479. A letter of reply written by the agent of the company to the insured, saying: "We will, of course, allow other concurrent insurance with the Allemania policy, and will also place you more insurance at same rate that we charged you before and do it in A1 company or companies. Trusting to hear from you at your earliest convenience, we remain," etc., held not to amount to a consent to any specific additional insurance, nor to meet the requirements of the policy, which became absolutely void at once upon the obtaining of additional insurance without consent.—Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Hurd, 37 Mich. 11.

¶ 480. Under a policy insuring property while in a certain building and providing that no permission or privilege affecting the insurance should be valid unless written upon or attached to the policy, a permit to remove the property to another building, asked over the telephone from the agent who agreed to give it, is valid if made out before the fire though the insured did not present the policy so as to have the permit attached until after the property was destroyed by fire, when the person who agreed to give it was no longer the agent of the company but who attached the permit to the policy.—Bennett v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 130 Mich. 216.

XI. ASSIGNMENT OR TRANSFER OF POLICY.

Assignment to persons without insurable interest, see post § 120.

Consideration for assignment or transfer, see post § 121.

Assignment to secure or pay insured's creditors, see post § 122.

Assignment after loss, see post § 123.

What constitutes fraud in assignments, see Fraud, I.

¶ 481. Insurance is a personal contract and does not pass, merely by his conveyance, to a purchaser of the property insured.—Disbrow v. Jones, H. 48.

¶ 482. An insurance policy is a personal contract of indemnity, and is not assignable except with the insurer's assent.—Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 184.

¶ 483. A new contract of fire insurance is created where the insured assigns policies to a third person and the insurer consents to the making of such assignment.—Wilms v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 194 Mich. 656.

¶ 484. A wife's assignment of her interest in an insurance policy upon her husband's life does not bind her if procured without her intelligent assent for purposes not connected with her separate estate.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

§ 120. Assignment to persons without insurable interest.

Insurable interest in general, see ante IV.

¶ 485. An assignment of a life insurance policy made with the consent of the company to a party having no insurable interest and who paid the premiums after such assignment, was valid as against the administrator of the estate of the insured; there being neither a statute nor any provision in the policy or by-laws prohibiting such assignment.—Prudential Ins. Co. v. Liersch, 122 Mich. 436.

¶ 486. Where under the statute (How St. § 3949) and by its articles the object of a mutual benefit society is to secure "to the families or heirs of any member, upon his death, a certain sum of money," the assignment of a certificate by a member to a brother of his wife, the assignee having no insurable interest in the assignor's life, is void.—Michigan Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Rolfe, 76 Mich. 146.

¶ 487. A certificate of a mutual benefit association is not assignable to any one who could not have been named therein as beneficiary.—Michigan Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Rolfe, 76 Mich. 146.

§ 121. Consideration for assignment or transfer.

Assignment to insured's creditors, see post § 122.

Validity of transfer of life insurance made to avoid creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances § 14.

¶ 488. The insured assigned to his fiancee a fully paid-up endowment insurance policy in consideration of the approaching marriage, which in due time took place.—Held, the assignment was supported by a valid consideration.—Graves v. Von Below, 160 Mich. 408.

¶ 489. An assignment, absolute in form, of a life insurance policy, and an agreement of even date by which, in consideration of said assignment, the assignee agrees to furnish the assignor a life support and all necessary medical attendance, and after his death a decent burial, and which provides that the present indebtedness of the assignor to the assignee is included in the consideration of the assignment, and canceled by it, are not conclusive that the assignment was absolute.—McDonald v. Birss, 99 Mich. 329.

§ 122. Assignment to secure or pay insured's creditors.

See also post ¶ 507.

¶ 490. An assignment of a life insurance policy to secure creditors is valid.—McDonald v. Birss, 99 Mich. 329.

¶ 491. An assignment of a policy to a bank for the husband's debt, which though joined in by him and his wife was invalid as to her because the debt had no relation to her separate estate, cannot be regarded as valid against a conflicting assignment by the husband to the wife made previously although no proof was offered by her that she had any interest by reason of an earlier assignment by him to her to support her joinder in the assignment. The taker of the joint assignment could not contend that it was unnecessary for her to join or that she had no interest, and thereby treat the joint assignment as tantamount to an assignment by the husband in which his wife joined unnecessarily.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

¶ 492. An assignment, by a member of a mutual benefit association to a person not interested in his life, of a benefit certificate is not validated by the fact that amended articles are subsequently filed by the society to conform, How. St. § 3960, wherein the object is stated to be "to secure to the family, heirs, creditors, or other persons having an insurable interest in the life of any member, upon his or her death, the payment of a sum of money," etc.—Michigan Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Rolfe, 76 Mich. 146.

¶ 493. Where the assignee of a policy issued by a mutual benefit society was not eligible as a beneficiary, the assignment was held valid as security for the amount due her from the assignor.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 584.

¶ 494. Where a certificate of a mutual benefit society is assigned by the insured to secure a creditor, who is ineligible to be beneficiary, such creditor can take only what is necessary to indemnify him, and the representatives of the insured are entitled to the balance.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 584.

¶ 495. Whether an absolute assignment in payment of a debt would be valid as against other creditors where the amount of the policy is largely in excess of the amount of the debt, quære.—McDonald v. Birss, 99 Mich. 329.

§ 123. Assignment after loss.

¶ 496. A clause in an insurance policy providing for its forfeiture if assigned without the company's consent cannot prevent its assignment after the loss.—Roger Williams Ins. Co. v. Carrington, 43 Mich. 252.

¶ 497. An assignment of an insurance policy made before loss, but not delivered until afterwards, does not take effect until delivery, and then as an assignment of a money demand against the insurers.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 131.

¶ 498. The interest of the beneficiary named in a mutual benefit certificate is not assignable until vested by the member's death.—Michigan Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Rolfe, 76 Mich. 146.

§ 124. Rights and liabilities of assignees.

Effect of acts or admissions of assignors, see post § 125.
Equitable assignees, see post § 126.
Sufficiency of evidence as to rights and title of assignee, see post ¶ 1271.

¶ 499. One who accepts an assignment of a policy takes subject to all the invalidating clauses therein.—Ranspach v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 699.

¶ 500. The assignee of a policy of insurance, under an assignment made after a loss has occurred, stands in the shoes of the assignor, and takes the policy subject to any forfeiture incurred by a violation of its conditions by the assignors.—Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 653.

¶ 501. Where a life insurance policy is assigned by the insured and the beneficiary on a blank furnished by the company, the assignee cannot be divested of her right to collect the funds by a showing that she did not fully comply with her agreement to care for the insured.—Malburg v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 568.

¶ 502. Where a policy of insurance is transferred with the sale of a building which is destroyed before the assignment of the policy is approved by the secretary as required by the provisions of the policy, there can be no recovery even if the secretary approved such assignment with knowledge of all the facts.—Harper v. Michigan Mut. Tornado Cyclone & Windstorm Ins. Co., 173 Mich. 459.

¶ 503. Where defendant, living with complainants, her relatives, is unable to pay the assessments levied on a policy of insurance, and complainants pay the assessments for a number of years under a contract whereby defendant assigns to them all rights under the policy, the insurance company having arranged with defendant for a cash settlement complainants may have specific performance of the contract assigning all rights under the policy.—McBride v. Thompson, 175 Mich. 136.

¶ 504. How. St., § 4238, which protects the money payable on a life insurance policy taken out by a husband or father for the benefit of his wife or children from the claims of his creditors, does not cover the assignment to them of a policy payable to himself, his executors, administrators or assigns.—Ionia County Savings Bank v. McLean, 84 Mich. 625.

¶ 505. If the vendee in a land contract, obtains insurance without stating or being asked his interest, and subsequently sells the premises, the purchaser going into possession under a contract providing that in case of default his occupancy shall be that of tenant holding over without permission, and afterwards, with the insurer's assent, assigns his interest to a person, who, on default in payment by the then holder of the land contract proceeds to recover possession, pending which proceedings the premises still occupied by such holder are burned. The insurer's consent to the assignment made a new contract with the assignee and the latter having an insurable interest can recover under the policy.—Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 184.

¶ 506. A policy of insurance was made payable to the beneficiary, his executors, administrators, or assigns, in sixty days after due notice and proof of death of the assured. The assured, who was named in the policy as the beneficiary, assigned to his wife all rights thereunder, with a provision that, in case of her death before the policy should become "due," the proceeds should go to the heirs or assigns of the assured. Held, that the policy was not due, at the earliest, until sixty days after the death of the assured, and that, under the terms of the assignment, his heirs were entitled to the proceeds of the policy where the assignee died within such period, to wit, in a common disaster with her husband, the insured.—Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Greiner, 115 Mich. 639.

¶ 507. Where the title to fire insurance policies is, after a fire, vested by assignment in creditors whose claims exceed the faces of the policies, the rights of such assignees cannot be defeated or impaired by any admission or confession made by the assignors, or any of them, in the absence, and without the consent, of the assignees.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 195 Mich. 18.

¶ 508. A lease provided that the lessee should keep the property insured and should assign the insurance policy to the lessor. Held, that in equity no formal written assignment was needed, and if there was none the stipulated insurance would be deemed to be held in trust.—Eberts v. Fisher, 54 Mich. 294.

§ 127. Presumptions and evidence.

¶ 509. Where an assignment of insurance policies to defendant was for her benefit and interest, assent to the assignment and acceptance is presumed.—Kaufman v. State Sav. Bank, 151 Mich. 65.

¶ 510. On a bill by complainant to gain possession of an insurance policy held by defendant which complainant claimed had been assigned to him by his father, defendant refusing to deliver it on the claim that the assignment was a forgery, the evidence was held to sustain a finding upholding the validity of the assignment.—Kirchberg v. Union Trust Co., 179 Mich. 495.

XII. RESCISSION AND CANCELLATION, FORFEITURE AND AVOIDANCE.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 128. Right to cancel and grounds for cancelling.

Necessity and sufficiency of notice of cancellation, see post § 129.
Cancellation through agents, see post § 130.
What constitutes cancellation, see post § 131.
Effect on rights of parties, see post § 132.
Necessity for refund of unearned premium on cancellation, see post § 212.
Right to forfeiture for nonpayment of assessment illegally levied, see ante ¶ 329.
Notice requisite to declaring of forfeiture for nonpayment of assessment, see ante ¶ 343.
Liabilities of withdrawing member for assessments of mutual company, see ante ¶¶ 314, 317.
Construction and interpretation of provisions of policy for forfeiture or avoidance, see ante § 67.
Validity of by-law of mutual company providing for cancellation when any risk considered unsafe, see ante ¶ 253.
Breach of warranty, misrepresentation, or breach of condition, as ground for cancellation or as working forfeiture, see post XII, B.
Jurisdiction of equity to compel surrender of policy for cancellation where fraudulently obtained, see Rescission.
Provision for cancellation of policy at request of insured, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

§ 511. Where an insurance agent in issuing a new policy to take the place of one issued by him for another company failed to call the attention of the insured to a clause taking away the right of cancellation which had been exercised under a former policy, but misled him by reference to another matter, held, that there was such concealment by the agent as avoided the cancellation clause.—Hartford Steam Boiler Inspec. & Ins. Co. v. Cartier, 89 Mich. 41.

¶ 512. In a manufacturers' mutual insurance company organized under Comp. L. 1883, Act No. 78 (How. St., chap. 134a) the corporation has no power to allow members to surrender their policies and withdraw from the company without further liability for losses; since the contract is not only with the corporation but also with each other policyholder.—Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, 101 Mich. 393.

¶ 513. A policy, having been left in force pending adjustment of a small claim for loss on a previous policy, may be canceled for failure of insured to appear and have such adjustment within a reasonable time only after notice of insured of intention to cancel.—Dove v. Royal Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 122.

¶ 514. The doctrine that losses by insurance companies through fire, accident or death cannot be avoided, under ordinary provisions, although due to want of care, is approved.—Courtemanche v. Supreme Court I. O. F. 136 Mich. 30.

§ 129. Necessity and sufficiency of notice of cancellation.

See also post ¶ 886.
Necessity for refund of unearned premium on cancellation, see post § 212.

¶ 515. A provision for the cancellation of an insurance policy by the company upon five days' notice to the insured cannot be made operative without such notice, or a waiver thereof.—Mallory v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112.

¶ 516. A notice of cancellation of employer's liability insurance must be according to the provisions of the policy, peremptory, explicit, and unconditional.—American Fidelity Co. v. R. L. Ginsberg Sons' Co., 187 Mich. 264.

¶ 517. A provision for five days' notice to cancel a policy may be waived by consent to an immediate cancellation.—Buick v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 103 Mich. 75.

¶ 518. After a policy had been executed and delivered by the insurers' duly authorized agent, he and the insured signed a memorandum that the insurance should take effect "when approved by the general agent at Buffalo." Held, that the insurers were liable for a loss, although the insurance was disapproved by the general agent, who directed the agent to return the premium and cancel the policy; no notice of disapproval having been given to the insured till after the loss. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Webster, 6 Wall. (73 U. S.) 129, 18 L. ed. 888.

¶ 519. An insurer whose policy has replaced a canceled one issued for another company cannot complain that the former policy was canceled instanter by consent waiving the stipulated five days' notice. Its liability is not affected thereby.—Buick v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 103 Mich. 75.

§ 130. Cancellation through agents.
Agents in general, see ante III.

¶ 520. An agent intrusted with the whole business of insurance for his principal, including the cancellation as well as the procuring of it, may bind the insurer by consenting to a cancellation, although the principal is not made acquainted with the fact of cancellation at the time.—Buick v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 103 Mich. 75.

¶ 521. Authority on the part of an insurance agent to procure insurance for the insured does not imply authority to consent to cancellation, so as to bind the insured.—Buick v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 103 Mich. 75.

¶ 522. An insurance broker, who merely places insurance, has no authority to receive notice of cancellation.—Snedicor v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 83.

¶ 523. An insurance broker agreed to place a certain amount of fire insurance for plaintiff at a specified rate. The policies were accordingly procured, and delivered to plaintiff. One of the companies thereafter reduced the amount of its policy, and the broker thereupon obtained a policy from defendant, and delivered it to plaintiff, taking up the canceled policy. Held, that notice of cancellation given to the broker by defendant, with knowledge of the circumstances, did not bind plaintiff.—Snedicor v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 83.

¶ 524. Where a fire insurance policy containing a provision for cancellation on five days' notice to the assured is delivered to the insurer's agent upon the understanding that it may be canceled and to enable him to get other insurance in case of cancellation, such agent does not become the agent of the assured so as to render notice to him of cancellation notice to such assured.—Mallory v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112.

¶ 525. An insurance agent to whom plaintiffs had long intrusted the entire subject of their insurance except as to amount, secured insurance for them in a Michigan company and delivered the policy to the insured, but receiving, fifteen days later, notice that the insurer desired to cancel the policy, he assented, and immediately replaced the insurance in a Pennsylvania company, mailing to the insured a letter which informed them of the cancellation of the first policy and requested the return thereof. The letter was burned, before being opened, by the same fire which destroyed the insured property. Thirty-seven days after the fire the agent paid the premium on the new policy. No premium was ever paid on the first policy, which at the time of the fire was, unknown to the insured, in their safe. Held, that the agent had, under the circumstances, authority to consent to the cancellation of the first policy, and that such waiver did not affect the libaility of the other company upon its policy.—Buick v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 75.

Cancellation by consent, see ante ¶ 517.
Cancellation for breach of warranty, representation or condition, see post XII, B.

¶ 526. A partner's consent to cancellation binds his firm, and a formal surrender of the policy is unnecessary.—Hillock v. Traders' Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 531.

¶ 527. A surrender of an insurance policy such as to discharge the insured from liability on a premium note, under an arrangement that upon surrendering the policy the note should be delivered up, must be accompanied by a dealing immediately and directly with the company or its agents; and a delivery to a stranger, with notice to the company, is not enough.—American Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 34 Mich. 6.

¶ 528. The mere fact that a life insurance policy is returned to the general agent of the company, and by him to the company, for the sole purpose of changing the terms of the payment of the premiums and the beneficiary, does not operate to cancel the policy, or give the company the right to demand a new health certificate.—Krause v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 99 Mich. 461; same case, second appeal, 105 Mich. 329.

¶ 529. The plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy, which provides, among other things, that it may be canceled upon five days' notice to the assured, in which action the question is whether the policy was canceled, and it appears that effective cancellation depends largely on what this party's agents have done, may show the acts and declarations of such agents in the premises.—Mallory v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112.

¶ 530. A letter from the general state agents of an employers' liability insurance company claiming that the existing rate is insufficient and regretting the necessity of retiring the policy, but proposing a higher rate and offering to negotiate on such basis, and to take up the matter with the head office, or otherwise to give notice of cancellation, is insufficient to constitute a cancellation of the policy.—American Fidelity Co. v. R. L. Ginsberg Sons' Co., 187 Mich. 264.

§ 132. Effect on rights of parties.
Necessity for refund of unearned premium on cancellation, see post § 212.
Necessity for proof of loss after insurer asserts that policy has been canceled for breach of condition, see post ¶ 998.

¶ 531. The cancellation of an insurance policy has no effect, in itself, upon a right of action which has previously accrued under the policy.—Baker v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 51 Mich. 243.

Forfeiture or avoidance for breach of condition or warranty as question of law or fact, see post § 334.

¶ 532. Laws 1897, Act No. 167, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 8348-8350, and the Standard Policy Act of 1905, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 277, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 8328-8333, were not designed to make forfeitures more available to insurance companies, but to curb the right to declare forfeitures.—Gordon v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 197 Mich. 226.

¶ 533. Pub. Acts 1911, No. 128, § 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 8348, providing that no policy of fire insurance issued thereafter shall be declared void for the breach of any condition, where a loss has not occurred during such breach and by reason of such breach of condition must be construed as meaning that no forfeiture is to take effect if the insurer has not been injured by a breach of the condition, nor if the fire was not caused by a breach of the condition, even though the breach was existing at the time of the fire.—McPhee v. Millers' Nat. Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 215.

¶ 534. Wherever in a policy of insurance there is a clear breach of the warranty contained therein, however immaterial it may be, the policy will be avoided.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

¶ 535. Unless the warranties in the application for an insurance policy are substantially true or their truth waived the policy issued thereon is void, and good faith is no defense to untruths appearing in the answers.—Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Co., 143 Mich. 290.

¶ 536. Where an applicant for insurance warrants the statements in his application to be true, the policy is invalidated by their falsity despite the fact that the statements may be of little importance to the company.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 160 Mich. 137.

¶ 537. The test as to whether a representation in the application as to previous employer's liability insurance is false so as to render the policy void from the beginning is whether there was, under all the circumstances at the time the policy was underwritten, a fair representation, or a concealment, fraudulent, if designed; or, though not designed, varying materially the object of the policy, and changing the risk understood to be run.—American Fidelity Co. v. R. L. Ginsberg Sons' Co., 187 Mich. 264.

¶ 538. A policy of accident insurance held not vitiated by the assured's denial in his application, that he had ever previously made a claim for or received indemnity for an accident, disease or illness, where he had been paid by another company for an injury to his knee which in no way contributed to the accident which caused his death.—Rathman v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 186 Mich. 115.

¶ 539. In order to invalidate a policy for accident insurance it is not necessary that either the insured or the agent be guilty of intentional fraudulent conduct, for if the misrepresentations contained in the application and warranty tend to induce the issuance of a policy which, had the facts been truthfully set forth, might not have been issued, these misrepresentations amount to constructive fraud upon the company.—Bone-well v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

§ 135. Warranties pertaining to person insured or family history.

Representations in application as warranties, see ante §§ 105-107.
Effect of falsity of statement in application for life or casualty insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. II, § 17.

¶ 540. Under a provision in a life insurance policy that, if statements of the insured were untrue in any particular which would have led to the insured's rejection had they been stated in accordance with the facts, whether intentionally or otherwise, the contract should be void; any material misrepresentations would avoid the contract.—New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish, 133 Mich. 68.

¶ 541. A statement that the death of a sister of the insured was due to kidney inflammation when in fact it was due to chronic pneumonia, which furnished no evidence of hereditary disease, was not regarded as a material misrepresentation, in the absence of testimony that information of such fact would have enhanced the premium or have led to a rejection of the risk by life insurance companies generally.—New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish, 133 Mich. 68.

¶ 542. Testimony tending to prove that the insured, a man 40 years of age and not living in the family of a sister having tuberculosis, would have been an acceptable risk in ordinary insurance companies notwithstanding the fact of the sister having such disease, authorized the assumption that a misrepresentation of the condition of health of the sister was immaterial, and did not avoid the contract.—New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish, 133 Mich. 68.

¶ 543. A representation in a life insurance application that the insured has not been attended by a physician is held not to include treatment for a temporary indisposition.—Blumenthal v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co., 134 Mich. 216.

§ 136. ——Statements as to health.

¶ 544. The insured stated in her application for insurance that she had been attended by a physician for la grippe three years previously, when in fact she had been so attended two years and nine months before making such application. Held, that there was not such a variance as would invalidate the policy for breach of warranty.—Plumb v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 94.

¶ 545. A mere temporary ailment or indisposition, which does not tend to weaken or undermine the constitution of the assured at the time of taking membership, does not render a policy or certificate of insurance void by reason of a warranty by the assured that to the best of his knowledge and belief he was in good health at the time of application.—Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513.

¶ 546. In order to defeat a recovery upon a life insurance policy for the breach of a warranty by the assured that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, he was in good health when the application was made, defendant must show that the applicant knew or had reason to believe that the warranty was untrue.—Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513.

¶ 547. A mere temporary ailment or indisposition which does not tend to weaken or undermine the constitution at the time of taking membership does not render a policy or certificate of insurance void on the ground of false statement in the application that insured was in sound health.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

§ 137. ——Representations as to age.

¶ 548. Representation as to age in an application for membership in a benefit association is a material warranty where person's age determines risk and measures membership dues, and where misrepresentation is made a ground of forfeiture.—Hunt v. Supreme Council of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

¶ 549. A representation in an application for life insurance that the insured is in good health or has not been subject to illness is construed to mean that he has not suffered an illness of a serious and constitutional nature and that he is free from a disease that affects the general soundness of the system.—Blumenthal v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co., 134 Mich. 216.

¶ 550. The defendant, the sole beneficiary of an insurance policy, sued on the same as the executor of the estate of his father, the insured. The father made false statements in the application as to his age and his rejection by other companies. Held, that though the father made these statements in ignorance, and only as the weak tool of his son, equity would enjoin the defendant from suing on the policy.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Freedman, 159 Mich. 114.

¶ 551. The insured made false statements in the application as to his age and his rejection by other companies. He kept the policy containing a copy of the application in his possession during his lifetime. Held, it was his duty to know whether his statements in the application were true, and his silence for many years was persuasive proof of his fraudulent intent.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Freedman, 159 Mich. 114.

§ 138. Warranties pertaining to property insured.

Warranties as to title or interest, see post § 139.
Warranties against incumbrances, see post § 140.
Overvaluation of property, see post § 141.
Representations as to other insurance, see post § 142.
Representations in application as warranties, see ante §§ 105-107.

¶ 552. Where an insured falsely represents in his application that the chimneys of the house covered by the policy are brick, he cannot recover for the goods contained in said house.—Benham v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 165 Mich. 406.

¶ 553. Under Miller's Compiled Laws of 1897, § 5180, a fire insurance company is exempted from liability where the insured contrary to the express warranties of the application has stored the property involved nearer than five hundred feet to buildings which were "exposing buildings" at the time of the fire, although the company is not so exempted if said buildings, "exposings" at the time of placing the policy cease to be "exposing buildings" at the time of the fire.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 365.

¶ 554. Where an insured building is described as used for stores and a residence, the fact that it includes a bakery and a restaurant does not render the policy void.—Richards v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 420.

¶ 555. It was one of the conditions of the policy that the application should specify the situation of the building containing the insured property "with respect to contiguous buildings, and their construction and materials." The application contained the following question and answer: "Q. Describe all other buildings and how occupied, and all other exposures to fire, their distance from risk and from each other within one hundred and fifty feet. A. North, nothing within one hundred and fifty feet; east, fifty feet to small building; south, ninety feet to a cross street; west, sixty-six feet to brick hotel across street." Held, that as the company issued a policy upon this application, they must be deemed to have accepted this answer as a substantial compliance with the policy and conditions.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 380.

§ 139. ——Warranties as to title or interest.

Conditions as to title or interest, see post § 162.
Omission in good faith to state condition of title, see also post ¶¶ 579, 580.

¶ 556. A fire insurance policy is not void because the insured life tenant stated in the application that she was "owner" where statements are not expressly made warranties and the agent of the company should have known or could easily ascertain the insured's interest.—Convis v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Calhoun County, 127 Mich. 616.

¶ 557. A warranty of unconditional and sole ownership by a vendor is broken, where the property is described as "his dwelling" and at the time it is occupied by the purchaser, though insured told the agent for insurer "that he thought he had a land contract out with some people," but they had abandoned it.—Hamilton v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 535.

¶ 558. The statement of an applicant for insurance, that he holds the property sought to be insured on contract, does not, in itself, amount to a misrepresentation of his interest, although the contract runs to himself and wife.—Miotke v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 166.

¶ 559. Where a fire insurance policy describes the property insured as contained in a "corrugated ironclad building," testimony that the structure was of brick, given in reply to a query as to whether it was a frame building is no evidence of misrepresentation by the insured.—Johnston v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 96.

¶ 560. A policy contained a clause of forfeiture for the omission to state any material fact, and made the application of the insured a warranty. Held, that it was avoided by the statement of the insured that his title to the property was absolute, when in fact it was held by him and his wife under the same deed.—Aetna Ins. Co. v. Resh, 40 Mich. 241.

¶ 561. Where a policy requires that, if the title of the assured is anything less than a sole, unconditioned and entire ownership, the fact shall be stated—otherwise the policy shall be inoperative—and the only statement of the title in it is by the word "their" before the description of property, proof that assured had, at the time, contracted to sell the premises, and that their vendee had paid the entire purchase price, would defeat the policy.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 562. Where an insurance policy is issued as to an assignee the insurer is fairly put upon inquiry as to the conditions of the ownership of the property; and if the insurer makes no further inquiry, and there has been no deception or concealment, he must be presumed satisfied.—Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14.

Omission in good faith to state amount of incumbrances, see post ¶ 578.

¶ 563. In an application for additional insurance, the answer to the question, "What encumbrance is there upon the property?" was recorded, "None." There was in fact a levy of $850, which existed at the time of filing the original application, and which was therein designated as a mortgage. It was claimed by the insured, in an action upon the policy, that both applications were written up for his signature by the company's secretary, who had the old application before him when he made out the new one, and that the answer "None" was not written in the new application when it was presented for his signature. Held, that the first application was properly admitted in evidence in support of the contention that the company knew of the incumbrance.—Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 114 Mich. 386.

¶ 564. The original application for insurance being in evidence to show that the insurer therefrom had knowledge of an incumbrance, described as "mortgage," but in fact a levy of execution, it was also proper to permit the insured to establish the identity of the levy with the "mortgage" by showing that the secretary was informed of the true character of the incumbrance designated by him as a "mortgage" at the time of filing the first application.—Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 114 Mich. 386.

¶ 565. A fire insurance policy provided that it should be void if the insured had misrepresented any material fact, or if his interest was not truly stated in the policy, or in case of any false swearing by the insured, or, unless otherwise provided, if the property was or should become incumbered by a chattel mortgage. Held, that a policy making the loss, if any, payable to J., as his chattel-mortgage interest might appear, was not invalidated because the mortgage was in fact made to D., the note which it secured having been indorsed to J., who was recognized by all parties to be the owner of the mortgage.—Johnston v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 96.

¶ 566. An erroneous description as to the amount of a mortgage in a fire insurance policy will not avoid it where it appears that the applicant not being able to read had signed without having had the application read to him and defendant's agent had made out the application for him, and there was evidence that the amount had been correctly stated.—Baumler v. Farmers' Northern Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 148 Mich. 430.

¶ 567. Failure on owner's part to mention an incumbrance on the equity of insured and to write it in the policy, if not inquired about and no deceit practiced, is not a material misrepresentation of title.—Guest v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., 66 Mich. 98.

¶ 568. Where a fire insurance policy provides that it shall be void if the subject be personal property and it "be or becomes incumbered by chattel mortgage," the existence of a mortgage upon the property unknown to the insurer will defeat the policy.—Meech v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 147 Mich. 343.

¶ 569. Where the plaintiff insured had given a chattel mortgage as security to one for indorsing his note, which note was cancelled by the giving of a new one, but nothing further done with reference to the chattel mortgage, in view of the fact that the mortgage prima facie constituted security for renewals until the note had been paid in full, an insurance policy providing that it shall be void where the property becomes mortgaged is void, because a valid chattel mortgage existed unknown to the insurer.—Meech v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 147 Mich. 343.

§ 141. ——Overvaluation of property.

Principles of valuation in general, see Value.

¶ 570. Overvaluation in the application for insurance renders the policy void if the policy so provides.—Briggs v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 52.

¶ 571. The rule that a noninjurious breach of condition in a policy shall not avoid it, as enacted by Pub. Acts 1897, No. 167, does ont change the rule that where valuation of property to be insured is made a warranty, a substantial overvaluation would avoid the policy, irrespective of motive.—Shelden v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 124 Mich. 303.

¶ 572. A warranty of the value in an insurance policy is not rendered immaterial by a provision in the policy that the insurer shall in no case be liable to pay more than the true cash value of the property insured.—Briggs v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 52.

§ 142. ——Representations as to other insurance.

Conditions as to other insurance, see post § 163.

¶ 573. An insurance company will be considered satisfied with the answer to a question as to previous insurance if the answer is substantially true and it issues the policy and enters into contract for insurance.—Emery v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co., 51 Mich. 469.

§ 574. A man insured property in a company whose policy provided that further insurance without the company's consent would avoid it. He took a policy in another company, whose agent knew of the first, and, in answer to a question as to what insurance there was already, he answered that there would be none after a particular date, being the time at which he supposed the first policy would run out, though it was, in fact, to be good for a year longer. Held, in an action on the latter policy, and in view of the clause of avoidance in the former one, that the former became void on getting the policy in suit, and the latter was therefore not void as for an untruthful answer.—Emery v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co., 51 Mich. 469.

¶ 575. At the time the policy sued upon was taken out the property was already insured in another company. Each of the policies contained a condition avoiding it upon other then existing or subsequent insurance being had, whether such insurance was valid or invalid. Held, that the condition in the earlier policy did ipso facto become a nullity upon the issue of the later, and the later policy was therefore open to the defense that it was void.—Keyser v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 66 Mich. 664.

¶ 576. In order to assert a forfeiture of the later of two fire policies issued on the same property, where, at the time of application therefor, notice of the first was withheld, such later policy must have been made to the same persons mentioned in the first and on the same interest in the same property.—Haire v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 481.

Effect of omissions made in good faith, see ante § 107.

§ 577. Where the fact of a pending litigation, affecting premises insured, was not communicated to the insurer at the time of executing the policy, it was held that the omission to disclose did not vitiate the policy.—Hill v. Lafayette Ins. Co., 2 Mich. 476.

¶ 578. Where an insurance agent himself fills out a policy upon a mere oral application for insurance, and the applicant is not asked the amount of incumbrances, and does not know that it should be stated, his omission to state it is no defense to the payment of a loss, unless in cases involving unusual risk not likely to be contemplated by the insurer.—O'Brien v. Ohio Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 131.

¶ 579. Where an application for fire insurance is verbal and the applicant is not asked as to the state of the title, and he does not act fraudulently, he is not required to disclose the exact condition of the title.—Crossman v. American Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., 198 Mich. 304.

¶ 580. An insurance policy containing a clause of avoidance for misrepresenting the interest of the insured covered an organ claimed by him but actually held under a contract of purchase, paid in part, but providing that title should not pass until it was fully paid. His equitable interest in the organ was insured for more than its value. Held, that the omission to state the facts as to the actual ownership invalidated this part of the insurance.—Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown v. Montague, 38 Mich. 548.

§ 144. Fraud or false swearing.

Effect of fraud or false swearing in proof of loss, see post § 234.
Effect of fraud to make misstatements or omissions warranties, see also ante ¶ 436.

General principles of fraud, see Fraud.
Provision in standard fire insurance form relative to invalidity for fraud or misrepresentation, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 581. Fraud or false swearing by an insured within a provision of a fire policy making the policy void in case of any fraud or false swearing by the insured touching any matter relating to the insurance, whether before or after a loss, is a swearing to that which is false with fraudulent intent.—Barrett v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 209.

¶ 582. The defense of fraud or false swearing in the application for fire insurance must be based upon actual fraud, and requires proof of fraudulent intent.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 195 Mich. 18.

¶ 583. Where an agent of the insured, who had the entire management and control of the business, and who held a power of attorney from the insured authorizing him to settle for the loss, executed and delivered to the adjusters a false affidavit regarding the books of account which had been kept by him, it was held that the insured, if not a party to the deceit, and, if acting in good faith, was not precluded from recovering upon the policy under a clause therein providing that the same should be void in case of any fraud or false swearing by the insured touching any matter relating to the insurance, whether before or after loss.—Metzger v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 102 Mich. 334.

¶ 584. A fire insurance policy provided that, in case of loss, the insured should submit to an examination under oath, if required by the insurer, and that any fraud or false swearing by the insured should avoid the policy. Upon an examination so had, the insured included in his statement of loss a sewing machine, which had not been destroyed. In an action on the policy, he testified that, at the time of making such affidavit, he thought that the machine had burned, but that he afterwards ascertained to the contrary. The machine was subsequently discovered in an out-building, underneath some wood, admitted to have been drawn and piled by the insured the day before the fire. Held, that an instruction that the policy was avoided by the false statement of the insured was properly refused.—Knop v. National Fire Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 323.

Estoppel or waiver of right to avoid or cancel for breach of warranty, see post XII, C.
General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 585. In an action on a life insurance policy, where the applicant, upon his attention being called to the alleged falsity of certain representations, gave explanations upon which the company relied, the warranties could be insisted upon, in the event of the explanations proving untrue.—Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 133 Mich. 526.

§ 146. Breach of promissory or "continuing warranties."

Breach of conditions, see post § 147 et seq.

¶ 586. A question in the application for fire insurance "Do you agree to keep a watchman on the premises when not in use?" answered affirmatively and incorporated in the policy as a "continuing warranty," but not included among the many causes expressed for avoiding the policy does not avoid liability by the company for loss of a building by fire during the absence of a competent watchman who has gone home on account of the serious illness of his wife without the knowledge of his employers, the insured. Grant, J., dissents.—McGannon v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 636.

§ 147. Breach of conditions in policy.

Notice or knowledge of conditions, see post § 148.
Necessity that breach caused or contributed to loss, see post § 149.
Forfeiture for default in payment of premium or assessment, see post §§ 150-155.
Breach of conditions respecting person insured or his occupation or status, see post §§ 156-160.
Breach of conditions respecting property insured, see post §§ 161-171.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to breach of conditions, see post § 301.
Validity, propriety and reasonableness of conditions, see ante §§ 108, 109.
Breach of promissory or "continuing warranties," see ante § 146.
Validity, propriety and reasonableness of conditions, see ante §§ 108, 109.

¶ 587. Any attempt to defraud insurers by not complying with the conditions of the policy will prevent recovery.—Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467.

¶ 588. A notice given to an indemnity insurance company three months after knowledge of an accident is not made within a reasonable time, as required by the terms of a policy providing for "immediate written notice" as a condition precedent to liability. Oakland Motor Car Co. v. American Fidelity Co., 190 Mich. 74.

¶ 589. Forfeiture of insurance cannot be declared nunc pro tunc after the loss if the policy was in force when the loss took place.—Olmstead v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 200.

¶ 590. Forfeitures for breach of condition cannot be established except for the violation of the precise condition made.—Bates v. Detroit Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 587.

§ 148. ——Notice or knowledge of conditions.

¶ 591. The insured is held to a knowledge of the conditions of his policy in the absence of any fraud in the making of the same.—Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 527.

¶ 592. Conditions and restrictions in insurance policies, to be binding upon the insured, must be inserted without fraud, misrepresentation or concealment.—Hartford Steam Boiler Inspect. & Ins. Co. v. Cartier, 89 Mich. 41.

¶ 593. An insured person is held to a knowledge of the conditions of his policy as in the case of any other contract, and the fact that he has never seen his policy does not excuse a want of such knowledge any more than would his failure to read it, unless it was kept from him by fault or fraud.—Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 414.

¶ 594. Whether a condition in a policy precluding any waiver or evasion of any of its terms or conditions as printed and contained in the application or in the policy is not to be construed as referring to terms, etc., in the policy alone from the time when it was received, instead of being made to operate by relation from the date of the application, quære; it not appearing that any conditions other than those named in the application were then brought to the knowledge of the applicant.—Michigan State Ins. Co., v. Lewis, 30 Mich. 41.

¶ 595. In order to charge the insured with the duty of an examination of his policy with reference to new matter introduced into it, he must be left free to discharge that duty unaffected by the company's representations, and not be led to neglect it by the conduct of the company itself.—Hartford Steam Boiler Inspec. & Ins. Co. v. Cartier, 89 Mich. 41.

¶ 596. Where no written application for insurance is made, or any terms of the policy agreed upon by parol except the amount of the insurance, the insured is chargeable with knowledge that the policy he receives contains the contract binding upon him as well as the insurer, and that it contains the usual terms of such instruments.—Wierengo v. American Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 621.

§ 149. ——Necessity that breach caused or contributed to loss.

¶ 597. Comp. L. 1897, § 5180, providing that no policy of fire insurance shall hereafter be declared void for breach of conditions where such breach did not contribute to the loss, applies to losses on policies issued subsequent to the act whether standard or not.—McGannon v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 636.

¶ 598. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5180, providing that no policy of fire insurance shall hereafter be declared void for breach of conditions where such breach did not contribute to the loss, a policy is not voided by failure to keep a watchman on the premises during the day on Sunday where the loss does not occur during such time or by reason of such failure.—McGannon v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 636.

¶ 599. Laws of 1897, No. 167, as amended by Laws of 1911, No. 128, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 8348, providing that no policy of fire insurance shall be declared void by the insurer for breach of any condition in the policy if the insured has not been injured by such breach or where a loss has not occurred during such breach, and by reason of such breach of condition construed as declaring that no forfeiture is to take effect if the insurer has not been injured by a breach of condition, nor, if the fire was not caused by a breach of condition, even though the breach was existing at the time of the fire.—Lagden v. Concordia Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 188 Mich. 689. (Ostrander, Stone and Steere, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 600. A fire insurance policy issued upon a manufacturing plant, before the taking effect of Comp. L. 1897, § 5182, requiring the insertion after the clause containing the conditions for breach of which, without consent of the company, the policy is declared void, a proviso that a loss shall occur while such breach of condition continues or is a primary or contributory cause of the loss; such policy was rendered void, where the plant, contrary to a prohibition in the policy, was idle for more than ten consecutive days although it was in operation within ten days immediately preceding the fire.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 123 Mich. 277.

¶ 601. Comp. L. 1897, § 5180, limiting the defense of breach of condition to losses caused thereby, has no application where loss under an insurance policy occurred during a breach of a condition in the policy which rendered it wholly void.—A. M. Todd Co. v. Farmers' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co. of Allegan & Ottawa Co., 137 Mich. 188.

§ 150. Forfeiture for default in payment of premium or assessment.

Necessity and sufficiency of demand, see post § 151.
Note for premium not paid at maturity, see post § 152.
Right to charge against cash surrender value, see post § 153.
Rights under charter and by-laws of mutual companies, see post § 154.
Excuses for nonpayment generally, see post § 155.
Premiums and assessments in general, see ante VI.
Waiver of nonpayment of premium or assessment, see post §§ 188, 189.
Validity, propriety and reasonableness of conditions in general, see ante §§ 108, 109.
Forfeiture for nonpayment of premium as jury question, see post § 336.
Actions for premium or assessment, see ante §§ 89-94.

¶ 602. Nonpayment of the premium at the time of loss does not invalidate a policy prepared in blank and left for delivery in anticipation of renewal and by mutual understanding renewed but not manually delivered, the law treating it as delivered in effect, and where an attempted cancellation by the insurer was abortive because notice thereof did not reach insured until after the fire.—Lum v. United States Fire Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 397.

¶ 603. Where a policy of insurance provides that in case of default in paying in advance the annual instalments of a note given for the whole premium, the policy shall be null and void until payment is made, the insurance is not to be construed as for a term of years, but as an annual insurance renewable every year for a period not exceeding such term.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

¶ 604. There is an indefinite extension of time for payment of premium under a policy containing a clause for avoidance of the premium be not paid when due, where a solicitor, authorized to collect the premiums and deliver the policy, delivered another policy on payment but responded to an offer to pay for the policy in question by telling the holder to let it rest until the insurer decided whether or not it would cancel the policy.—Mallory v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112.

¶ 605. Plaintiff's decedent was a member of defendant mutual insurance company, and there was an arrangement whereby the railway company in whose employment decedent was, should deduct the premiums from the member's pay each month. The insured drew a fixed salary but through misapprehension the premiums were not deducted therefrom.

The decedent paid no premiums. Held, it being decedent's duty to pay the premiums, and having knowledge that they had not been deducted, he had forfeited his policy.—Geddes v. Ann Arbor Railroad Employees' Relief Ass'n, 178 Mich. 486.

¶ 606. An assured, having failed to pay a quarterly life insurance premium due August 1st, wrote on October 27th to know how much was due. The company answered on October 31, stating that the amount of the past due premium with interest, which assured remitted November 4th and the company receipted for November 7th. Held, in an action on the policy that the fact that the company received and retained the remittance of November 4th was not a waiver of the forfeiture occurring by reason of the nonpayment of the premium due November 1st.—Jewett v. Northwestern Nat. Life-Ins. Co., 149 Mich. 79.

§ 151. ——Necessity and sufficiency of demand.

Sufficiency of notice for assessment which does not comply with by-laws of mutual company, see post ¶¶ 615, 617-619.

¶ 607. Where assurances made by an insurance agent charged with the duty of collecting premium amount to an indefinite extension of time for payment, the insurer must show a demand for payment and failure to respond before it can take advantage of an original nonpayment.—Mallory v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112.

§ 152. ——Note for premium not paid at maturity.

Payment of premium by note, see ante § 86. General principles governing promissory notes, see Negotiable Instruments.

¶ 608. The premium on a policy was paid by note, and the policy contained a clause that, if the note should not be paid at maturity, the premium should be considered as earned, and the policy become void while the note remained overdue and unpaid. The note was not paid when due; a loss occurred, and the note was paid afterwards. Held, that the condition was valid; that its effect was to defeat any recovery for a loss while the note remained overdue and unpaid, and that a subsequent payment of the note would only revive the policy for the remainder of the term.—Williams v. Albany City Ins. Co., 19 Mich. 451.

¶ 609. Where an insurance company takes a note when a premium falls due, and gives therefor renewal receipts, the policy continues in force, and the company cannot afterwards insist upon its forfeiture as for nonpayment.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bowes, 42 Mich. 19.

¶ 610. Where an insured person gives a premium note in payment of his policy he is bound to attend to its payment himself at maturity, and is not excused by the nonpresentation of the note, especially if it specifies no place of payment.—McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 188.

¶ 612. Relator's life insurance premium becoming due on December 21, 1910, he gave two promissory notes payable respectively April 25, 1911, and May 23, 1911. The notes stated that they were not given as payment of premium and that the nonpayment of either of them at maturity should ipso facto lapse the policy. Relator did not pay the note due April 25th on time, but paid same on May 2, 1911. Respondent accepted the money on the condition that the relator furnish a health certificate, which he failed to do. Act No. 187, Pub. Acts of 1907, provides that a grace period of one month for the payment of premiums must be granted. Held, the policy lapsed and relator was not entitled to compel defendant by mandamus to treat the same as in force since said statute did not contemplate the granting of a second period of grace upon the falling due of the notes.—Schmedding v. Northern Assur. Co., 170 Mich. 528.

¶ 613. An oral agreement of the agent of an insurance company that the applicant for fire insurance would be notified when to pay his note given in part payment for the premium, does not make the company liable for loss to the beneficiary on the policy, where payment of the note was not tendered until after maturity and after a fire had occurred to the property insured, where it was stipulated in the policy and also in the note that the company would not be liable under the policy for loss or damage to the property insured while any premium or note or obligation given for the premium, or part thereof, remained unpaid.—Robinson v. Continental Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 641.

¶ 614. A provision in a life insurance policy to the effect that upon default in premium payments, the insured may, upon request made within the month allowed by other provisions in the policy for the payment of arrears, have his arrears charged as an indebtedness against his policy for the payment of accruing premiums to the extent permitted by the cash surrender value, thus avoiding a default and keeping the policy alive, is not obnoxious to the statute (Act

No. 187, Pub. Acts 1097, § 1, subd. 8) securing to the policyholder upon default, a stipulated form of insurance the net value of which shall be at least equal to the reserve at the date of default, less certain specified deductions, although, in case the interest of the insured should be exhausted, he will have received a smaller value under this loan provision than under provisions conforming to the statute.—Mutual Ben. Life-Ins. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 151 Mich. 610.

¶ 615. No forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments can be based upon a notice which fails to comply with the by-laws in that it does not contain a list of the deaths or notify the members assessed of the amount due by them to the benefit fund.—Miner v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 63 Mich. 338.

¶ 616. The charter of a mutual insurance company provided that if a member did not pay his assessment within thirty days after demand his insurance might be suspended by the secretary or board of directors; but if suspended by the secretary appeal might be made to the board of directors when in session. Held, that such forfeiture could not properly be imposed as an ex parte result of mere default in payment, and without giving the assured an opportunity for hearing.—Olmstead v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 200.

¶ 617. The articles and by-laws of a mutual benefit association required that assessments be made by the secretary, and the certificates of membership provided that assessments be payable within thirty days after notice from the secretary. Held, that the notice contemplated was notice of the assessment; and that insurance was not forfeited by neglect to pay assessments that were not imposed by the secretary or by the trustees, but only, if at all, by persons claiming to be managers, and where the only notice from the secretary was a notice of forfeiture.—Bates v. Detroit Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 587.

¶ 618. The charter and by-laws of a mutual fire insurance company provided that when the board of directors ordered an assessment the secretary should prepare it and it should be signed by him and a majority of the board. Held, that an unsigned and uncertified paper containing no headings to explain the figures set down in it could not be treated as an official assessment for the purpose of forfeiting the policy of one who had not paid the amount of his assessment until after the expiration of the period fixed by notice to him.—Baker v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 51 Mich. 243.

¶ 619. The charter of a mutual insurance company provided that members should be notified of assessments by circular or orally, and that if they did not pay within a fixed time they would forfeit protection through their policy. Held, that such a personal liability could not attach from merely mailing the notice, if it was not actually received.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 273.

Defenses in action for premium or assessment, see ante § 94.

¶ 620. The failure by the holder of a life policy to make a monthly payment cannot work a forfeiture, when he has relied on the agent's statement, on the issuing of the policy, that the company's collector would call, and has kept the money on hand awaiting such call having received no counter directions.—Henderson v. Grand Rapids Accident & Health Ins. Co., 150 Mich. 105.

¶ 621. A policy of insurance does not lapse because of delay in making payments by the insured where the agent informed such insured that a collector would call for the money at his residence, and where no notice was given that the dues should be paid elsewhere, and where the beneficiary promptly tendered dues on learning that the insurer had an office in the city.—Baker v. Michigan Mut. Protective Ass'n, 118 Mich. 431.

§ 156. Breach of conditions respecting person insured or his occupation or status.

Condition against death by violence or design, see post § 157.

Condition against suicide or self-destruction, see post § 158.

Intoxication, intemperance or vice as contributing cause, see post § 159.

"Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," see post § 160.

Validity, propriety and reasonableness of conditions in general, see ante §§ 108, 109.

¶ 622. Recovery for the death of an insured under a benefit certificate policy, occurring in an affray in which it was claimed that he was the aggressor, was not precluded under a by-law providing that no benefit shall be paid for the death of a member while violating the laws of the land; where the question as to who was the aggressor was in dispute.—Payne v. Union Life Guards, 136 Mich. 416.

¶ 623. A provision in an accident policy that it shall be void as to all accidents occurring to the insured when "engaged in any profession, employment, or exposure" not rated as preferred does not apply to the casual performance of an act pertaining to an excepted risk, if in the particular case it pertains only incidentally and not intrinsically to the regular employment of the insured.—Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 112 Mich. 196.

¶ 624. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the person insured as secretary of a mercantile corporation "engages" in a more hazardous occupation and changes his occupation to farming by returning to his farm before the expiration of his contract with his city employers, on account of their disposing of their business; or that he thereby limits his recovery upon the policy, for injuries received a week later from being tossed by a bull, to the amount of indemnity which the premium paid by him would have purchased at the rates fixed for the increased hazard.—Johnson v. London Guarantee & Acc. Co., 115 Mich. 86.

¶ 625. One having recently had regular clerical employment in a city, which has not yet been changed, and whose home is upon a farm, where he spends his Sundays and one night in each week, the management of which farm is, in his absence, entirely in the hands of men hired by him for the purpose, is not a "farmer," within the terms of an accident insurance policy classing farming as a hazardous employment.—Johnson v. London Guarantee & Acc. Co., 115 Mich. 86.

¶ 626. An exception in an accident policy of death or injuries resulting directly or indirectly from poison extends to cases where the poison is administered through the mistake of a druggist or physician.—Early v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 58.

§ 157. ——Condition against death by violence or design.

When policy covers death, injury or disability caused by criminal, illegal or violent acts, see ante § 101.

¶ 627. A soldier whose life was assured by an accident policy providing that the insurance should not extend to any case of death unless the claimant establish by direct and positive proof that it was caused by external violence and accidental means, and was not the result of "design, either on the part of deceased or any other person," deserted and was shot by an officer instructed to arrest him; but the evidence was conflicting as to whether the officer knew at the time of the shooting that the person shot was the deserter, and as to whether the killing was in self-defense. Held, that if the officer did not know that the person he fired at was the deserter, and did not intend to kill the deserter, it could not be said that deceased lost his life by the officer's design; and that the case was for the jury.—Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545.

¶ 628. Where an insured soldier having deserted is shot by a sheriff seeking to arrest him as a deserter, but he was not then in the act of deserting or not shot because of that but because the officer feared he would shoot, it cannot be held as matter of law that he was engaged in an unlawful act within the meaning of a provision in a policy of insurance that no claim shall be made when the death has happened while the assured was engaged in or in consequence of any unlawful act.—Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545.

§ 158. ——Condition against suicide or self-destruction.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to insanity, see post ¶¶ 1174, 1175.

Validity of condition as to effect of insanity in case of suicide, see also ante ¶ 446.

When policy covers death or disability caused by or as result of insanity or temporary derangement, see ante § 100.

When policy covers death caused by criminal, illegal or violent acts, see ante § 101.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to suicide, see post § 302.

Admissibility of evidence as to cause of death of insured, see post § 315.

¶ 629. A condition forfeiting a life insurance policy for suicide must be strictly construed, being in the nature of a penalty or a forfeiture.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41; Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592.

¶ 630. In a life insurance policy a condition against suicide cannot be construed to cause a forfeiture for acts involving no evil will, such as self-slaughter by an insane person.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41.

¶ 631. The act of self-killing as a cause of forfeiture being classed in an insurance policy among others involving such wrongful conduct as death by dueling, by the hands of justice, or in the violation of the laws, or conduct impairing health by vice or intemperance, it is to be inferred that it is regarded as ejusdem generis and depending on the same reasons.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41.

¶ 632. A clause in a policy avoiding it "if the insured shall die by his own hand, sane or insane," covers an act done for the purpose of self-destruction; it matters not that the insured had no knowledge of the wrong involved in its commission.—Streeter v. Western Union Mut. Life & Accident Soc. of United States, 65 Mich. 199.

¶ 633. An insurance policy limiting the payment, in cases of insane suicide, to the legal reserve, is valid if not prohibited by law, and if the reserve is ascertainable, even though the policy does not declare what such reserved sum shall be.—Frey v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 56 Mich. 29.

¶ 634. Where a mutual benefit certificate is issued under provisions prohibiting payment of any benefit upon the death of a member who commits suicide, whether sane or insane at the time, there can be no recovery in a case where a member employs a rope, adjusts it, and commits suicide by hanging.—Sabin v. Senate of National Union, 90 Mich. 177.

¶ 635. Suicide by a person non compos mentis does not come within the forfeiture clause of an accident insurance policy providing that no claim shall be made thereunder when death or injury has been caused by suicide.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592.

§ 159. ——Intoxication, intemperance or vice as contributing cause.

Burden of proof to prove insured died of delirium tremens, see post ¶ 1185.
Waiver by agent's knowledge that insured was intemperate, see post ¶ 856.
Question as to whether intemperance caused death as one for jury, see post ¶ 1370.

¶ 636. Where an accident insurance policy contains a condition against recovery for a death resulting from intoxication, it is proper to show the condition of the insured when he received the injuries, and for this purpose witnesses may be asked whether he impressed them as being intoxicated, whether he was drunk or sober at the time, and whether in their judgment he was in as good a condition to take care of himself as though he were sober.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12.

See also post ¶ 904.
Increase of risk or voluntary exposure to danger, as jury question, see post § 337.

¶ 637. The term "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," as used in an accident insurance policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries caused by such exposure, means a conscious or intentional exposure, involving gross or wanton negligence on the part of the insured.—Johnson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 115 Mich. 86.

¶ 638. The term "voluntary exposure to danger" as used in an accident insurance policy means a realization that an accident will in all probability result and an injury follow, from the action about to be taken. The danger of injury must be obvious.—Hunt v. United States Accident Ass'n, 146 Mich. 521.

¶ 639. A clause in an accident insurance policy exempting from liability in case of either voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger limits the exception to cases of exposure to recognize dangers and does not exempt the company from liability for death caused by mere thoughtlessness on the part of the insured. The word "exposure" is coupled with "voluntary" sufficiently to require an intentional act.—Irwin v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Ben. Ass'n, 127 Mich. 630.

¶ 640. A bank cashier cannot be said, as a matter of law, to have been engaged in an exposure not incident to his employment, where he had gone to a planing mill to show how work was to be done, and had operated a saw, and then while waiting slipped and cut off his hand; and whether he thereby voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger is also for the jury to determine.—Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Accident Ass'n, 112 Mich. 196.

¶ 641. A person playing indoor baseball in a gymnasium who broke his ankle by putting out his foot to prevent running against a wall is entitled to recover on an insurance policy although he had agreed that the benefits under the policy "shall not extend to or cover * * * voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger," inasmuch as a jury would be justified in finding that he had no anticipation of accident and did not realize there was any danger, and it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant.—Hunt v. United States Accident Ass'n, 146 Mich. 521.

§ 161. Breach of conditions respecting property insured.

Breach of condition as to sole and unconditional ownership, see post § 162.
Condition against other insurance, see post § 163.
Change in location of property insured, see post § 164.
Conditions against vacancy of fire risks, see post § 165.
Introduction or use of prohibited articles in buildings, see post § 166.
Want of watch or protection service, see post § 167.
Incumbrance on property, see post § 168.
Change of title or possession, see post § 169.
Levy of attachment or execution, see post § 170.
Foreclosure or execution sale, see post § 171.
Burden of proof and presumptions as to breach of conditions, see post § 801.
Validity, propriety and reasonableness of conditions in general, see ante §§ 105, 109.

¶ 643. A policy that is to be void on a certain contingency cannot be regarded, where that occurs, as existing for any purpose; and whether ended by agreement or lapse of time or breach of condition is to be considered as no policy.—Emery v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co., 51 Mich. 469.

¶ 644. A provision in an insurance policy for avoidance thereof "if the title or possession be now or hereafter involved in litigation" is not violated by a proceeding brought to recover possession from a purchaser under contract of sale who has defaulted in payment and whose occupancy after such default is that of tenant without permission.—Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 184.

¶ 645. A provision in the by-laws of an insurance company that notice of other insurance, of increased hazard by mortgage, and of whatever else affects the rights of the parties, must be made to the secretary, and that his approval must be indorsed, is not necessarily to be construed as providing for the avoidance of the policy if such notice is not given.—Tiefenthal v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 306.

¶ 646. Painters are not "mechanics," within the meaning of that term as used in a fire insurance policy providing that it shall be void "if mechanics be employed in building, altering, or repairing the premises for more than 15 days" without the consent of the insurer.—Smith v. German Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270.

¶ 647. Using a stove in a room that has no chimney does not release an insurance company from liability to pay a loss by fire resulting therefrom, if the premises are not within corporate limits or if the charter or by-laws of the company do not furnish a basis for refusing to pay.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 273.

¶ 648. The failure to observe that part of the "iron-safe rider" of an insurance policy requiring the keeping of the books of the assured in an iron safe or in another building not exposed to the hazard of a fire in the building of the assured, rendered the policy void; and prevented recovery for loss by fire of the property insured, occurring during such breach, even though the insured was not injured thereby, Comp. L., § 5180, not applying to such case.—King v. Concordia Fire-Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 258.

¶ 649. The filing of a telegram at 8:30 a. m. which was not transmitted until 11:52 a. m., giving a live stock insurance company notice of the illness of a horse, which was first observed at 10:30 p. m. of the preceding day, is a sufficient compliance with a requirement of an insurance policy that notice of the illness of the animal should be given the insurer "forthwith by registered mail or telegraph."—Simmons v. National Live Stock Ins. Co., 187 Mich. 551.

See also ante ¶¶ 432, 439, 557, 561; and post ¶ 708.

Warranties as to title or interest, see ante § 139.

Burden of proof as to breach of condition respecting ownership, see post ¶ 1201.

Waiver by agent's knowledge of title or condition of property, see post § 204.

Omission in good faith to state condition of title, see also ante ¶¶ 579, 580.

Avoidance for representation of sole ownership where held under deed to insured and his wife, see also ante ¶ 560.

Waiver of forfeiture for breach as to title, ownership or condition of property, see post § 190.

¶ 650. In an action upon an insurance policy issued upon plaintiff's dwelling-house and household effects, it was insisted that under a clause in the policy which provided that it should be void "if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership," inasmuch as plaintiff held under a land contract, he could not recover. Plaintiff made no written application, nor any representations as to ownership. Held, that such a condition will not invalidate the policy in such a case.—Knop v. National Fire Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 359.

¶ 651. The owner of lumber has unconditional ownership of lumber covered by a fire insurance policy where he has no knowledge of the mixing of a small amount of lumber wrongfully taken by trespass with his own until after a fire, and the value of his own timber exceeded the amount of the policy.—First Nat. Bank of Sault Ste. Marie v. Aetna Ins. Co., 188 Mich. 251.

¶ 652. A Michigan standard fire insurance policy issued on a verbal application, with nothing said at the time of the issuance of the policy relative to the title or interest of the insured in the building, accepted by the president of the insured without reading or examining it, placed in his safe and retained without his knowledge of the contents is void where the insurance company has no knowledge of the fact that the ownership was not in the insured.—Wyandotte Brewing Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 144 Mich. 440.

¶ 653. The provision that the policy "shall be void * * * if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership" does not avoid a policy issued to a conditional seller in whom title was reserved covering the amount of its interest in the property, which was described as "their saloon furniture and fixtures," the only outstanding interest having been that of the conditional buyers.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 142 Mich. 29.

¶ 654. Where plaintiff in an action upon a policy of insurance had sold the property insured, retaining a lien thereon, and the policy recited the fact that the property was purchased upon contracts, defendant company has sufficient notice of the interests of both parties, and its claim that the policy is void for the reason that plaintiff was not the sole and unconditional owner of the property insured is untenable.—O'Neill v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, England, 155 Mich. 564.

¶ 655. A provision in an insurance policy that the policy shall be void if the insured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property, or if any building intended to be insured stands on ground not owned in fee-simple by the insured, unless the insurer's consent is indorsed in writing on the policy, does not apply to the condition of the property at the time the policy is issued, but only to such changes as arise after its execution.—Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 184.

¶ 656. The omission of the owner of the equitable title to state the nature thereof will not avoid a policy of insurance, under a condition forfeiting the insurance if the interest of the insured is other than the entire, unconditional and sole ownership, if the fact is not so represented to the company.—Dupreau v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 615.

¶ 657. A vendee legally in possession under a part-paid land contract, who is legally obligated to pay the balance of the purchase price, and to keep the buildings on the land insured in favor of the vendor, may be said to be the entire, unconditional and sole owner within the meaning of a policy providing for such ownership as a condition to the validity of the policy.—Dupreau v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 615.

¶ 658. A fire insurance policy stipulated that it should be void if the interest of the assured were other than "the entire, unconditional, free and unencumbered ownership." The applicant for insurance had only an undivided half interest in the property, having transferred the other half to his son, who had mortgaged it to his mother, and afterwards assigned it for the benefit of creditors. The applicant went to the assignee and to the mortgagee to obtain their interests, and they told him orally that he could have them, and upon these assurances he had the property insured. Held that, as no consideration appeared for the transfer of their interests, the policy was void.—Miller v. Amazon Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 463.

§ 163. ——Condition against other insurance.

Admissibility of evidence as to other insurance, see post § 308.
Waiver by agent's knowledge of other insurance, see post § 203.

Sufficiency of permit for other insurance, see ante ¶¶ 477-479.
Representations amounting to warranties respecting other insurance, see ante § 142.
Waiver of breach as to other insurance, see post §§ 191, 192.

¶ 660. Breach of a condition in an insurance policy that it shall be void if additional insurance on the property is procured, renders the policy not voidable simply, but wholly void.—A. M. Todd Co. v. Farmers' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co. of Allegan & Ottawa Co., 137 Mich. 188.

¶ 661. That a vendee in a land contract insures the property which is the subject of the contract without vendor's knowledge and with knowledge that the vendor holds a policy on the property upon which the vendee has paid the premium, will not invalidate the contract of insurance between vendor and his insurer.—Smith v. American Ins. Co., 177 Mich. 123.

¶ 662. A policy of insurance which provides that it shall be void if the insured now has, or shall hereafter "make or procure, any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not," is voided by a subsequent insurance, even though it may not be binding and enforceable, because it contains the same words.—Donogh v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 503.

¶ 663. Where an insurance policy contains a provision of avoidance if other insurance on the property is effected without notice to the insurer, such provision is not violated by insurance placed without the knowledge of the insured or notice to the insurer by the partner of the insured, who has an undivided interest in the property.—Hall v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 403.

¶ 664. Insurance against fire, procured by a widow for the benefit of minor heirs, is not forfeited by reason of her subsequently procuring insurance of her dower interest in the same property.—Haire v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 481.

¶ 665. The clause against additional insurance without consent, etc., is not violated by the fact that the insured has a prior policy in another company, the existence of which was known to both parties when the policy in suit was negotiated, it being understood between them that it was to be canceled if the second policy was taken, and it being in fact canceled, if not actually before the manual reception of the second policy, at least contemporaneously with its complete delivery.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

¶ 666. Insurance obtained by a mortgagee to cover his interest, without the mortgagor's knowledge or consent, is not "other insurance" such as avoids a policy issued to the mortgagor.—Carpenter v. Continental Ins. Co., 61 Mich. 635.

§ 164. ——Change in location of property insured.

See also ante ¶ 395.

¶ 668. If household goods, insured as goods contained in a dwelling-house, are burned while stored in a barn on the same premises there can be no recovery of insurance.—English v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 55 Mich. 273.

¶ 669. A mutual insurance company organized under How. St., ch. 132, is allowed to insure "live-stock, wagons, carriages, harness," etc., "being upon farms as farm property." The by-laws of a certain company did not allow it to insure village property that was within one hundred feet of other buildings, and provided for cancelling the policy if the situation of insured property was so changed as to increase the risk. Held, that the company would not be liable for a horse, harness, cushion and blanket insured as "personal farm property in buildings and on farm," but destroyed by fire while in the barn of a village hotel that stood within one hundred feet of other buildings.—Wildey v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Van Buren County, 52 Mich. 446.

¶ 670. A shingle-mill company which has insured, under a blanket policy, its shingles then piled upon five docks near its mill, and has warranted that a continuous clear space of one hundred and fifty feet shall be maintained between the insured property and the mill, the insurance rate being much less where the designated space was maintained, and the company having paid that rate of premium violates its contract by having shingles then piled on two of the docks within twenty-five or thirty feet of the mill, and such violation, since the warranty was one in futuro, renders the policy void.—Michigan Shingle Co. v. London & Lancashire F. Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 441.

¶ 671. The general rule is that place is of the essence of the risk; and a permanent removal of the property from the place where insured withdraws it from the protection of the policy; so held, where insurance had been effected upon a barn and its "contents" without specifically describing the latter, and where such contents, without notice to the insurer, were removed to another barn subsequently erected, and were burned.—Benton v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 281.

§ 165. ——Conditions against vacancy of fire risks.

Validity of condition against vacating, see ante ¶ 444.

Waiver of condition against vacancy, see also post ¶ 774.

Vacancy of premises as question of law and fact, see post § 338.

¶ 672. Vacancy of insured premises is not such an increase or change of risk as to forfeit a fire insurance policy thereon, without express agreement.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103; Becker v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 48 Mich. 610.

¶ 673. A house occupied by a tenant was insured. The tenant moved out and the landlady at once moved her own things in and began to clean up, meaning to live there herself, but the next day she had to go away for three days' absence. While cleaning the house she did not eat or sleep there, and after a few days she went off again on a business trip. While she was gone the house was burned. Held, that the policy had not become void on the ground that the premises were vacant.—Shackelton v. Sun Fire Office of London, Eng., 55 Mich. 288.

¶ 674. Where an insurance policy is subject to forfeiture if the property be left vacant for more than thirty days, or if it be levied upon, it seems that there must be proof of a continuous vacancy of more than thirty days, and that the levies must be after the date of the policy and under valid proceedings.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 48 Mich. 148.

¶ 675. A clause avoiding an insurance policy in case the premises should "become vacant or unoccupied" did not apply where a man and his family left home for twelve days to visit a sick daughter, and engaged a person to go to the house daily to look after it.—Stupetski v. Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 373.

¶ 676. A house is not vacant within the terms of a policy during the temporary absence of the occupants.—Stupetski v. Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 373.

¶ 677. During the onset of a forest fire, insured plowed furrows around his premises and then while numerous persons remained there fighting fire, took his wife and belongings to a place of safety, and her thence to a nearby village because of her physical condition; whereupon he returned to assist in fighting the fire. The policy sued upon contained the following provision: "Any member vacating insured premises, and not placing some one else in charge of the same, shall bear his own risk for such time as such premises are vacant. * * * Temporary absence, like on a visit, does not create vacant property." Held, that there was no vacation of the premises in question, within the meaning of the policy.—Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 114 Mich. 386.

¶ 678. The seller of property by a conditional sale does not, by taking a chattel mortgage to secure the purchase price, waive title so as to prevent him from maintaining a suit on a fire insurance policy covering the property thus sold.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 150 Mich. 311.

¶ 679. A dwelling-house from which a tenant has removed without intention to return, although he has left there some goods not then needed for housekeeping in his new quarters, and which remains unoccupied, is "vacant" within the meaning of the provision declaring the policy void if the premises become "vacant or unoccupied."—Richards v. Continental Ins. Co., 83 Mich. 508.

¶ 680. Occupancy implies the actual use of a house as a dwelling place, and the insurer has a right to the care and supervision involved in such occupancy, under a policy forfeitable if the building shall be or become vacant or unoccupied without the consent of the company; and leaving some one to look after the property when vacated by the assured will not prevent such forfeiture. —Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 653.

¶ 681. Where at the time of insuring a farm barn it was occupied by a tenant who lived on another farm and used the barn for the storage of produce until sold, of which facts the agent of the company had notice,—the application being an oral one, and the policy being silent as to occupancy, —the cessation of such occupancy by the tenant, after which an agent of the owner of the barn went to the premises frequently to see that the doors were fastened, etc., will not avoid the policy.—Fritz v. Home Ins. Co., 78 Mich. 565.

¶ 682. In determining whether a condition against vacancy has been broken so as to avoid the insurance the intent of the parties to the insurance policy in respect to occupancy is to be gathered from the usual and ordinary use of the premises for the purposes to which they are devoted.—Fritz v. Home Ins. Co., 78 Mich. 565.

¶ 683. The shutting down of a shingle-mill for forty-two days for want of logs which were in transit, and detained by reason of low water, but which were daily expected to arrive, and which began to be delivered the day the mill was burned, will not avoid a policy of insurance providing for forfeiture in case "the mill shall cease to be operated" without notice to or the consent of the insurance company.—City Planing & Shingle Mill Co. v. Merchants' M. & C. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 654.

¶ 684. On the question whether an insured mill "ceased to be operated" it is proper for insured to show that a planing-mill owned by it, and distant from the shingle-mill about one hundred and twenty-five feet, and connected with it by cable power which operated both mills, was kept in operation, and that other mills were shut down the same season on account of low water, thus showing that such stoppages were incident to and to be expected in that locality.—City Planing & Shingle Mill Co. v. Merchants' M. & C. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 654.

¶ 685. A dwelling-house, occupied by the assured when the policy was written, does not become vacant or unoccupied, within the meaning of a clause voiding the policy if the building "be or become vacant or unoccupied, and so remain for 10 days," by reason of the temporary absence of the assured in a neighboring city, without any intention on her part of giving up her home or residence, she leaving all of her household goods in the house, as also a quantity of provisions, and a horse in the barn, and engaging a neighbor and his wife to care for the house and horse during her absence, which they do for about two months, and up to the time of the fire.—Hill v. Ohio Insur. Co., 99 Mich. 466.

§ 166. ——Introduction or use of prohibited article in building.

See also post ¶¶ 780, 853.
Waiver by agent's knowledge that illuminating gas was generated on insured premises, see post ¶ 859.
Instruction as to increase of risk, see post § 347.

¶ 686. Insurance is not recoverable where, contrary to a prohibition in the policy against keeping gasoline on the premises, the insured placed a can of gasoline for use as fuel in a stove, in a building in the rear of that described in the policy but used in connection therewith, without obtaining the consent of the company, though the can was found empty by the firemen and the goods in the front store were a total loss while those in the rear store were not injured, there having been little fire in that portion of the building.—Boyer v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins. Co., 124 Mich. 455.

¶ 687. The keeping of gasoline in the insured premises without written consent of insurer contrary to a condition avoiding the policy for such cause is not a breach of condition which is prevented from having its effect, though it did not contribute to the loss, under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5180-5182, where the loss occurred during the breach of the policy and while its terms were being violated.—Boyer v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins. Co., 124 Mich. 455.

¶ 688. A provision in a fire insurance policy that benzine, gasoline, naphtha, or other explosives shall not be "kept, used, or allowed" upon the premises insured is to be understood as prohibiting only the habitual keeping, using, or allowing of these articles on the premises, and not their occasional introduction for some temporary purpose connected with the occupation of the premises, such as making ordinary or necessary repairs. Thus, the keeping of a five-gallon can of gasoline in the building for several weeks, from which to supply torches used in removing old paint from the outside of the building preparatory to repainting it, does not constitute a violation of this provision of the policy.—Smith v. German Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270.

¶ 689. A fire insurance policy insuring property in a three-story building, described by its street number, includes a one-story building in the rear, where both buildings were used as one at and prior to the issuance of the policy, and a prohibition against the keeping of gasoline applies to both buildings.—Boyer v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins. Co., 124 Mich. 455.

¶ 690. A fire insurance policy will be forfeited for drawing kerosene in a manner prohibited by the policy, although the latter specifically covered a stock of merchandise in a village hardware store, including "paints, oils," etc.—Vandervolgen v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 123 Mich. 291.

¶ 691. Fire insurance cannot be recovered where contrary to a prohibition in the policy against keeping gasoline without consent on the premises, the insured kept a gallon of gasoline in a can in a building in the rear of premises specifically described in the policy, but used in connection therewith.—Boyer v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins. Co., 124 Mich. 455.

¶ 692. Keeping gasoline on insured premises, contrary to a provision in the policy, does not prevent plaintiff from recovering in a suit on the policy, unless it be proved that the gasoline caused the fire which destroyed the property.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 150 Mich. 311.

§ 167. ——Want of watch or protection service.

Promise to furnish watch or protection service as "continuing warranty," see also ante § 146.

¶ 693. A condition in a policy insuring a saw-mill that "a watchman shall be employed about the premises night and day," cannot be said not to have been complied with where it appears that the assured was operating another mill from 425 to 450 feet distant, the space between the two being open and used for piling lumber and where the assured's foreman, who had charge of piling the lumber testified that he watched the mill every day down to the time of the fire, and that the yard men under him also watched it.—Spies v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 97 Mich. 310.

¶ 694. An application for insurance of mill property contained an agreement on the part of the insured to keep a watchman on the premises at all times when the mill was not in operation, and the policy provided that, if the insured should fail to keep any of the agreements therein contained, the company should not be liable in case of loss under the policy; which forfeiture clause is construed as though the words "during such failure" followed the word "policy," so far as the agreement to keep a watchman is concerned.—Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Manufacturer's Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 407.

¶ 695. The temporary absence of a watchman on saw-mill premises, for the purpose of obtaining a padlock and key which he had left at the boarding house three hundred feet from the mill, and which he desired to use on the premises, cannot be regarded as a violation of an agreement on the part of the mill-owners in an insurance application to keep a watchman on the premises at all times when the mill was not in operation.—Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 407.

See also ante ¶¶ 433, 434, and post ¶¶ 773, 821.

Effect of parol waiver as to condition against other insurance, see post ¶ 847.

Validity of condition against incumbering, see ante ¶¶ 444, 450.

Omission in good faith to state amount or fact of incumbrance, see ante ¶ 578.

Mortgage incumbrances in general, see Mortgages; Foreclosure; and Chattel Mortgages.

¶ 696. A mortgage on a homestead being void if not signed by the wife constitutes no incumbrance, whatever the parties may have intended; and does not, therefore, avoid the condition in an insurance policy against subsequent incumbrances.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Balser Sewing Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 131.

¶ 697. An insurance policy is not rendered void by the fact that the applicant incumbered the property insured without notice to or the consent of the company, where there is nothing contained in the by-laws or contract of insurance making void the policy under such circumstances.—Tiefenthal v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 306.

¶ 698. The execution by one partner of a chattel mortgage upon the firm property to secure his individual debt so changes the interest of the firm as to avoid a policy of insurance that stipulates for avoidance if any change other than by the death of the insured takes place in the "interest, title or possession" of the property.—Olney v. German Ins. Co., 88 Mich. 94.

¶ 699. A policy insured plaintiff to a specified amount in a certain building without stating her interest, which was in fact that of the vendee in a land contract. Held, that a prohibition in the policy against changes in the title without the insurer's consent would not operate to avoid the policy where the property was mortgaged not by the insured but by the person in whom the legal title stood.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

¶ 700. Chattel mortgages on growing crops are not to be regarded as increasing the hazard of insurance until the crops are harvested.—Tiefenthal v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 306.

§ 169. ——Change of title or possession.

Validity of condition against change of title, see ante ¶ 444.

¶ 701. Where possession and control of the property and an insurable interest are retained by the insured under a fire policy, an executory agreement for its sale does not so violate the spirit of the conditions of the policy respecting the transfer of said property as to render the policy void.—Zeitler v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 169 Mich. 555.

¶ 702. Defendant fire insurance company issued a policy on a dwelling house to the "estate of Katherine Munson, deceased," while said estate was in the process of administration. Shortly thereafter the administrator made an executory contract for the sale of said house to a third person to be paid for in instalments. Prior to the completion of said instalments and before said vendee was entitled to specific performance, said dwelling house burned. The administrator had all the time remained in possession and control thereof. The policy contained the condition making the same void if any change should take place in the interest, title or possession of the property. Held, said policy was not voided by the said contract of sale.—Zeitler v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 169 Mich. 555.

¶ 703. A policy of insurance provided that it should be void if the insured was not the sole and unconditional owner, or if the property should be conveyed without the defendant company's consent. One Pfunter owned a piece of land and contracted to build a brick plant on the same, and convey the land and building to a brick company, a corporation. He placed the above policy of insurance on the brick plant after its completion, and conveyed the plant and the land to the brick company, assigning the policy to plaintiff, Dull, as trustee for the corporation. Held, in a suit on the policy that it was void.—Dull v. Royal Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 671.

¶ 704. The mixing of lumber, wrongfully taken by trespassing upon other lands with lumber belonging to a person, and covered by a fire insurance policy, without his knowledge or consent, does not increase the moral hazard where the insured does not know of the claim of the owner of the timber wrongfully taken until after the fire and the value of the timber owned by the insured exceeds the amount of the policy.—First Nat. Bank of Sault Ste. Marie v. Aetna Ins. Co., 188 Mich. 251.

¶ 705. In an action on an insurance policy the court properly directed a verdict for the defendant where it appeared that one partner had executed a chattel mortgage upon the firm property to secure his individual debt, and the policy specifically provided that it should be void if any change other than by the death of the insured takes place in the "interest, title or possession" of the property.—Olney v. German Ins. Co., 88 Mich. 94.

¶ 707. Under the provisions of a Michigan standard policy against change of interest or title, the policy in question was avoided, where at the time of the issuance of the policy the premises were held under a part-paid land contract from W., and where subsequently W. agreed to purchase the plant and the contract was reassigned to him, and where the insured had been paid a large part of the purchase price and held a note for the balance, and such note was paid within 20 days of the fire.—Excelsior Foundry Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 135 Mich. 467.

¶ 708. A policy of insurance, one of the conditions of which is that, "in case of any sale, transfer or change of title in the property insured, such insurance shall be void and cease," is avoided by a conveyance which is absolute in form, though given as security for a debt merely.—Western Massachusetts Ins. Co. v. Riker, 10 Mich. 279.

¶ 709. Where the insurance is upon a single building, and the conveyance is of an undivided interest only, the conveyance avoids the whole policy, notwithstanding the interest of the insured remaining unconveyed is shown to exceed in value the sum insured.—Western Massachusetts Ins. Co., v. Riker, 10 Mich. 279.

¶ 710. Where a loss under an insurance policy is made payable to a mortgagee as his mortgage interest may appear, the death of the insured cannot make the policy void under the provision that it shall become so if any change takes place in title or possession. Whether it would have that effect in any case, quære.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 Mich. 420.

¶ 711. Where, on an oral application for insurance, the agent was informed that the applicant held under a land contract, and where the policy merely stated that the assured was insured to a certain amount on the property against loss not exceeding her interest, without stating what such interest was, a clause requiring indorsement of the consent of the company on the policy if the building insured stood on ground not owned in fee-simple by the assured was held to apply also to changes in ownership arising after its delivery and acceptance.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

¶ 712. Where a fire insurance policy provided that it should be void "if the interest of assured in said property now is or shall become any other or less than a perfect legal and equitable title," it was not forfeited by the fact that after a loss by fire the grantor of the insured executed a quitclaim deed to the insured to correct an erroneous description in the previous deed to him.—Diehlman v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 78 Mich. 141.

¶ 713. The sale by contract of land, the buildings upon which are insured under a policy forfeitable if the assured sells or transfers the insured property without the indorsed consent of the company, will not avoid the policy where the agent who wrote the insurance had full knowledge of such sale, and made indorsements on the policy referring thereto, and to the interest of each party in case of fire; and, even if such a sale had that effect, such action of the agent would operate as a waiver.—Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 653.

¶ 714. The conveyance of land to a vendor on default by a vendee in a contract of sale is not a change of title or interest in the property which is within a condition of a policy of fire insurance issued in the name of the vendee, with a loss payable clause in favor of the vendor, that any change of the interest of the insured in the property should avoid the policy unless the change should receive the written assent of the insurer. (Affirmed by equally divided court.)—Gourlay v. Insurance Co. of North America, 181 Mich. 286.

¶ 715. Where the insurance company has notice when the policy is taken out that the property has been sold under a contract by the insured, there is no breach of a condition that notice must be given of the transfer of the interest in the insured property when the contract of sale is forfeited by the purchaser who quitclaims his equitable interest to the insured and no notice thereof is given to the company.—Foiles v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 175 Mich. 716.

¶ 716. The receipt of two small payments by an assured, after the issuance of a policy of fire insurance on lumber, to apply on a contract of sale thereof, of which the insurer's local agent had knowledge, did not effect such a change of the title or interest of the assured as to avoid the policy.—Fuhrman v. Sun Ins. Office of London, 180 Mich. 439.

General law of attachment, see Attachment.
General law of executions, see Executions.

¶ 717. Where a policy provides for its avoidance if the property shall be levied on, levies to work forfeiture must be made after the date of the policy and under valid proceedings.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 48 Mich. 148.

¶ 718. The levying of a writ of attachment upon land, the buildings appurtenant being insured, there being no change of possession, is not such a change in interest or title as avoids the policy of insurance.—O'Toole v. Ohio German Fire Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 187.

§ 171. ——Foreclosure or execution sale.

Validity of condition avoiding for commencement of foreclosure proceedings, see ante ¶ 443.
Execution sales, see Executions, VII.
General law of foreclosure, see Foreclosure.

¶ 719. Conditions of avoidance for false representations of the condition, situation or occupancy of the property, or for omission to make known any fact material to the risk, or for such use of the premises as to increase the risk, refer to the representations and concealments attending the inception of the policy, and to the increased risks arising from changed physical conditions; they do not include the subsequent commencement of a foreclosure of a mortgage that was known to the insurer.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 720. Insurer had actual notice of the existence of a mortgage on the insured property, and the policy provided that it should be void upon the passing or entering of a decree of foreclosure. Held, that the policy was not annulled by the mere commencement of foreclosure proceedings.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 721. Foreclosure of a mortgage upon insured property is not such a sale by the assured as will forfeit the policy, so long as the period of redemption has not expired.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 48 Mich. 148.

¶ 722. Notwithstanding that an insurance policy may expressly become void on the beginning of proceedings to foreclose a mortgage on the premises, if, to the knowledge of the insurer's agent when issuing the policy, the mortgage was long over due, and this agent neglected to make the policy payable to the mortgagee, and the insured, being ignorant of English, relied upon the agent, the beginning of foreclosure proceedings will not avoid the policy.—Butz v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 268.

¶ 723. Where a policy contained the general condition that if any proceedings for the sale of the insured property be "had, commenced or taken," the policy shall be void, the words quoted, on being applied to the foreclosure of a mortgage by advertisement, were held satisfied by confining them to the actual offer of the premises for sale at the time specified in the notice. Where insurance is taken on such a condition on property covered by an overdue mortgage of which the insurer has notice, the mere commencement of adverse foreclosure proceedings will not be held to annul the policy if such an intent is not most clearly expressed in the language of the condition. Whether such a condition as applied to steps to be taken by the insured himself would not include a mere advertisement or offer to make a sale in the future, or a mere effort to find a purchaser, or would be limited, especially in a contract drawn by the insurer, strictly to the entering upon the final consummation of the sale, quære.—Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 30 Mich. 41.

¶ 724. Under a policy providing that if any proceedings are "had, commenced or taken" for the sale of the property without the consent of the company, the policy shall be void, the failure of the insured to notify the company of adverse proceedings against him would not alone operate to defeat the policy until after the lapse of a reasonable time for that purpose; what would be such reasonable time is left to the jury.—Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 30 Mich. 41.

¶ 725. Where an insurance policy is issued to the owner of the property, the contract being with him alone and he alone being liable for the premiums, there is no contract with a mortgagee of the property, though it had indorsed thereon "Loss if any payable to E * * *, mortgagee, as his interest may appear," and where the policy is avoided by breach of a condition therein by the owner, it is also void as to the mortgagee.—Jaskulski v. Citizens' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 603.

¶ 726. If a policy sued on by insured owner was in fact based upon a written application, the fact that the mortgagee supposed that it was issued upon his oral application only, and that he was thereby misled to his prejudice, would not deprive the insurer of the right to avail itself, by way of defense, of a misrepresentation in the written application, in an action for the mortgagee's benefit brought in the name of the insured; and if the mortgagee had any remedy it would be in equity or by action on the case.—Cronin v. Fire Assoc., 112 Mich. 106.

§ 173. Breach of marine policies or conditions.

Custom against law of navigation, see Customs ¶ 27.

¶ 727. A provision in the application of a marine insurance policy covering a gasoline launch, to the effect that the insured would keep said boat five hundred feet from "exposing buildings," refers not to all buildings, but only to such as would tend to increase the risk of fire by their proximity.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 365. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 728. In the survey of a fire policy the insured was asked to describe fully the building in which the boat would be contained while laid up, and the answer was, "In water at Macatawa Bay." The policy contained the warranty that the boat "shall be safely stored at outside," and contained privilege "to lay up either afloat or ashore." Held, the insured was privileged to store said boat in a boathouse fifteen feet from the shore and in comparatively deep water.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 365.

¶ 729. The exception of losses occasioned by unseaworthiness is in effect a warranty that a loss should not be occasioned, and it is immaterial whether the fact of unseaworthiness was known or unknown.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 730. If there were any defects in the compass rendering it unsafe or unsuitable for use, and the stranding of the vessel was caused by or consequent upon such defects, the vessel was not seaworthy and thereby the policy was avoided.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 731. If the peril to an insured vessel in stranding was occasioned by negligence or unseaworthiness, notwithstanding it was the fog that prevented the land from being seen, the negligence or unseaworthiness was the efficient and proximate cause and avoid the policy.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 732. The conduct of an insurer, knowing the facts, may be such as to estop him from insisting on the conditions of a policy or indicate a waiver of them, when it is inconsistent with any intent to rely on them.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

¶ 733. Mere knowledge on insurer's part of violation of policy does not operate as an estoppel so as to revive the contract.—New York Central Ins. Co. v. Watson, 23 Mich. 486.

¶ 734. A mutual fire insurance company may waive a forfeiture of its policy if its assumed action is taken by those authorized to act for it, and with full knowledge of the facts.—Towle v. Ionia, Eaton & Barry Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 219.

¶ 735. The conditions of an insurance policy may be waived by the company, not only by express agreement, but by conduct which amounts to an estoppel.—Miotke v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 166.

¶ 736. An insurance company, in issuing a second policy upon a life, is not bound to take notice of the answers made to the same questions in the application for the first policy, and is not precluded thereby from showing the untruth of the answers in the first application.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 737. While a knowledge of facts brought home to an insurance company at the time its policy is extended by renewal may operate as a waiver of some of the provisions of the policy, it cannot operate to incorporate new provisions into the contract.—Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 289.

§ 175. Sufficiency of notice to ground estoppel.

Notice to agent as notice to insurer, see post § 176.

§ 176. ——Notice to agent as notice to insurer.

Waiver or estoppel by knowledge of agent or officer, see post §§ 202-206.
Notice to principal to or through agent, see Agency, II, D.

¶ 739. The rule which holds that notice to the agent is notice to the principal in insurance cases, applies in Michigan to cases arising under fire insurance policies where the agent has authority to countersign and issue the policy, or where the insured is ignorant of or misled as to misrepresentations contained in his application.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

¶ 740. A statement by insured to an agent of the insurer, made some two or three years before the issuance of the policy, as to unpaid taxes which he expected to pay on the property to be insured, is no notice to the insurer of the state of the title with reference to taxes on the subsequent issuance of the policy.—Kennedy v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co., 157 Mich. 411.

¶ 741. Notice to the agent or collector, who is also a director of a mutual fire insurance company raising its funds by assessments, is not notice to the company.—Kamm & Schellinger Brewing Co. v. St. Joseph Co. Village Fire Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 606.

¶ 742. Whether notice by letter to an agent of an insurance company that additional insurance had been obtained, and the fact of subsequent conversations between the insured and the agent in which it was mentioned without the agent's objecting to it, would estop the company from defending on the basis of the clause in their policy against additional insurance, quære.—Sun Ins. Co. v. Earle, 29 Mich. 406.

¶ 743. Where an insurance policy provided that it should be void if the ground on which the insured building was located was not owned by the insured, and the agents of the company had been notified that the insured had a mere interest under an executory contract for the purchase of the fee, the company must be held to have waived a provision of the policy requiring indorsement thereon of such fact.—Bryant v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co., 174 Mich. 102.

¶ 744. Where, in an application for accident insurance, the insured makes false statements relating to the refusal of insurance to him by other companies and to the receipt by him of indemnity for accident, and is immediately advised of the erroneous statements by his perusal of the application before signature, he is not entitled to recover despite such false statements and warranties on the ground that notice to the agent is notice to the principal, where the authority of the state agent is limited to taking the application and forwarding it to the home office of the company.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

¶ 745. The liability of a fire insurance company does not cease because an insured stock of goods is removed to a new location without consent being indorsed on the policy as provided by its terms, where the insured notified the agent from whom he procured the insurance, the agent acquiesced and notified the agent of the insurance company, this being exchange insurance placed through that agent, and no steps were taken by the company either to give its written consent or to cancel the policy.—Pollock v. German Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 460.

§ 177. ——Facts stated in previous application as notice to insurer.

See also ante ¶ 736.

¶ 746. The fact that a true state of affairs appeared in the records of an insurance company in a previous application for insurance which had been postponed is not notice to the company so as to prevent the defense of breach of warranty as to good health.—Rhode v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 129 Mich. 112.

§ 178. Waiver by misleading advertisement or proposal to insure.

¶ 747. Defendant accident insurance company's advertisement of its post card policies posted in a depot contained no limitations as to age of the insured. The post card itself in fine print limited the age to sixty-five. Defendant, sixty-six years old, who might have seen the advertisement, purchased a policy of the railroad agent and was not informed by the latter and did not know about the age limit. Held, the condition limiting the age at which the policies would be valid was waived and the beneficiary might recover.—Hause v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 172 Mich. 59.

§ 179. Waiver by delay in claiming forfeiture.

See also post ¶ 807.
Delay in claiming forfeiture for nonpayment of premium or assessment, see also post ¶ 793.

¶ 748. In an action for loss under a fire insurance policy, the defendant does not waive its defense that the policy was voided by the taking out of other insurance, by its failure to deny liability on that ground at once upon receiving a letter from plaintiff stating that the representative of another company had already been to see him, and by making inquiry as to the other insurance in its reply.—Shelden v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co., 124 Mich. 303.

¶ 749. Where a mortgagee undertook to get insurance for his own benefit and paid for it, but the local agent had the owner sign the application and the policy issued in the name of the owner, with loss payable to the mortgagee, and where the company until after suit was brought always treated the mortgagee as the party interested in the insurance, and where after it knew the nature of plaintiff's claim and of a conveyance by the mortgagor to his wife, it did not treat the policy as forfeited but called for further proofs, it waived the special defenses that there was no privity between plaintiff and the company and that the conveyance to the mortgagor's wife, without notice to the company, voided the policy.—Granger v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 177.

¶ 750. In a correspondence over an adjustment of insurance losses, the fact that the company fails in its first letter to stand on a forfeiture does not amount to a waiver of the conditions of the policy, where the first letter does nothing to induce the holder of the policy to do or fail to do anything to his detriment.—Dull v. Royal Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 671.

¶ 751. Waiver of forfeiture for nonoccupancy and cessation of operations of a mill is properly found, where defendant's president was speedily notified of the loss, where one of its members said, in reference to the condition, that the company did not intend to stand on technicalities, and where no intention of resisting payment was shown until six months after the loss.—City Planing & Shingle Mill Co. v. Merchants' M. & C. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 654.

¶ 752. Defenses based upon breaches of warranty and consequent forfeiture are waived if the insurer, with full knowledge of the facts, remains silent as to such matters until the trial, and puts the assured to the cost and trouble of perfecting proofs of loss. —Marthinson v. North British & M. Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 372.

§ 180. Recognition of policy after knowledge of breach of condition.

Imposition of expense on insured or beneficiary, see post § 181.
Participation in adjustment of loss, see post § 182.
Offer of compromise, settlement or arbitration, see post § 183.
Agreement or order to pay loss, see post § 184.

¶ 753. An insurance company is estopped from claiming that the right of a policyholder is already suspended if it recognizes its continued existence by notifying him that "it is now liable to immediate suspension unless he gives prompt attention to the notice." —Olmstead v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 200.

¶ 754. A condition in a mutual fire insurance policy, requiring the clearing of logs and all brush 100 feet all around a house in question and to notify the company of the doing thereof, was waived by the making of an assessment and subsequently taking a new application on a barn and accepting premium and fees thereon, after the agent of the company had been on the ground and seen the condition of the premises when the barn was built, thereby indicating the company's satisfaction with what had been done and leading the nonresident plaintiff to so understand.—Duby v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 133 Mich. 661.

¶ 755. The assumption of the burden of a defense by an indemnity insurance company in an action against insured for damages for personal injuries does not constitute a waiver of want of immediate notice as required by the policy where the insurer thought that insured had just learned of the accident and did not know that insured obtained such information three months before giving notice of the accident.—Oakland Motor Car Co. v. American Fidelity Co., 190 Mich. 74.

¶ 756. The provision in a policy that "if at any time during the continuance of this policy * * * the insured property * * * shall become vacant or unoccupied" the insurer shall be absolved from all liability does not apply to the case of buildings that are vacant at the time the policy is issued, the insurer having notice of the fact; the issue or renewal of the policy with such knowledge waives the provision.—Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 289.

¶ 757. Insurer's knowledge that household goods insured as being in a dwelling-house were in fact stored in a barn does not waive the condition of the policy requiring the goods to be kept in a dwelling-house.—English v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co., 55 Mich. 273.

¶ 758. Where premises are vacant at the time of solicitation of fire insurance to the knowledge of the company and are vacant for several months before the loss the company is precluded from availing itself of a provision in the policy rendering it invalid where a loss occurs after the premises have been vacant for more than 10 days, and it is immaterial that the premises were occupied within 10 days from the date of the policy, as the controlling consideration is whether there is a change in condition of the premises from the condition known when the risk was accepted.—Gordon v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 197 Mich. 226.

¶ 759. The general statement appended to blank proofs of loss reserving a right to insist upon a breach of condition cannot be held to reserve a defense known to the insurer at the time the blanks were furnished. —Burnham v. Interstate Casualty Co., 117 Mich. 142.

¶ 760. The fact that a mutual company defends against a claim for loss on the ground of a violation by the insured of certain by-laws, the penalty for which does not forfeit the policy, but only the right to recover for a loss thereunder, is not inconsistent with the action of the board of directors in treating the policy as in force by assessing it after such loss.—Towle v. Ionia, Eaton & Barry Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 219.

¶ 761. Where a mutual fire insurance company knowing of prior insurance does not, until after suit, disclaim liability, but orders an assessment for, and promises to pay, the loss, it waives any breach of warranty by reason of such other insurance.—Eddy v. Merchants' M. & C. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 651.

¶ 762. In a suit upon an insurance policy containing a provision against other insurance it appeared that, in the first conversation had by the agent of defendant with plaintiff's agent, the defense growing out of a violation of said provision was clearly foreshadowed, and that afterwards, in a letter acknowledging the receipt from plaintiff's agent of formal notice of the loss, the general agent of defendant declined to adjust the loss and forecast "such action as the facts demand," if claim should be made. Held, that plaintiff's contention that defendant waived said condition by inviting proofs of loss in said letter is untenable, it appearing that all that was promised was that, if plaintiff saw fit to furnish such proofs, defendant would take such action as the facts demanded, but that plaintiff was appraised in the same letter that the loss could not be adjusted for the reason that other insurance, provided against in the policy, existed.—Donogh v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 503.

§ 181. ——Imposition of expense on insured or beneficiary.

See also ante ¶ 752.

¶ 763. Where an insurance policy had been forfeited by revoking a submission to arbitration, such forfeiture was waived by the company's subjecting the assured, two months after the revocation, to the additional expense of an examination under oath.—Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

¶ 764. Forfeiture because of additional insurance taken contrary to conditions of policy is waived where the insurer, with full knowledge of the facts, and without notifying the insured as if they intended to pay the loss forfeiture, leads him to spend time and money in informing it as to the extent and amount of the loss.—Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 414.

¶ 765. Where after full knowledge of grounds of forfeiture of a mutual policy the officers of the company continue to deal with insured as if they intended to pay the loss and permit him to go to the expense of the employment of an attorney to attend meetings of the board of directors of the company, they cannot set up such ground of forfeiture in an action on the policy.—Reimold v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 162 Mich. 69.

¶ 766. An insurance company which, in compliance with a request for blank forms for proofs of death, furnishes such blanks, but fails to disclose a defense that would render such proofs unavailable, and thus puts the beneficiary to expense and trouble, it waives such defense.—Burnham v. Interstate Casualty Co., 117 Mich. 142.

¶ 767. The fact that the information upon which defense is based—e. g., that deceased did not notify defendant of other insurance—was not derived from the beneficiaries does not affect the waiver of such defense by furnishing the insured claim blanks and putting him to expense without disclosing a defense.—Burnham v. Interstate Casualty Co., 117 Mich. 142.

¶ 768. "Other insurance," as a cause of forfeiture, is waived if the insurer, having knowledge thereof, does any act recognizing the existence and validity of its contract, or puts the assured to inconvenience, cost or expense under circumstances that recognize its continued liability.—Carpenter v. Continental Ins. Co., 61 Mich. 635.

¶ 769. Forfeiture of a policy for additional insurance is waived where the adjusting agent, with knowledge of such insurance, puts the insured to the expense of making up proofs of loss and requires him from time to time to correct them, without giving him to understand that the company will rely upon the forfeiture.—Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Kittle, 39 Mich. 51.

¶ 770. A fire insurance company may investigate the circumstances attending a loss by an adjuster, or other agent, even if the insured is thereby put to some expense or is delayed, and may have an appraisal of values made, without waiving its rights under the policy.—Wilms v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 194 Mich. 656.

¶ 771. A defense of a refusal of the insured to submit to an examination under oath as provided by the policy is waived when negotiations for a settlement are renewed causing the insured to expend time and money to effect the settlement.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

§ 182. ——Participating in adjustment of loss.

Adjustment of loss in general, see post XVI.

Acknowledging receipt of notice of loss or furnishing forms for proofs of loss as no waiver of insurer's rights, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. II, § 18.

¶ 772. Where an independent insurance adjuster sends on proofs of loss to the company, and thereafter learning of the existence of a chattel mortgage making void the policy inquires of the insured concerning said mortgage, and advises company to await an investigation before making payment, the insured, even assuming said adjuster to be defendant's agent, cannot recover upon the theory that the adjuster and himself reached a settlement of the policy.—Moloney v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 269.

¶ 773. The insured at the time of taking out a policy of fire insurance had a chattel mortgage on the premises, which fact rendered the policy void under the terms of said policy. Defendant had no knowledge of the existence of said mortgage until after the fire occurred. An independent adjuster sent on the proofs of loss to the company, the evidence being disputed as to whether he had, at the time of sending same, knowledge of the existence of the mortgage. Held, even assuming said adjuster to be the agent of defendant, his course did not result in reviving the policy, which was void from the date of placing same.—Moloney v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 269.

§ 183. ——Offer of compromise, settlement or arbitration.

Adjustment of loss in general, see post XVI.

¶ 774. Where circumstances constituting vacancy of insured premises, contrary to the policy, were, after a fire, stated to the insurer's adjuster, who replied with an offer of compromise which plaintiff declined to accept, held no waiver of the defense of vacancy.—Richards v. Continental Ins. Co., 83 Mich. 508.

¶ 775. A waiver of a provision, that action must be brought within three months after the cause of action shall accrue on a sick benefit policy, is not shown by evidence that insured sent in a proof of disability whereon the claim was rejected on the ground that there was no liability under date of January 7th, and that on July 15th an offer of a stated sum was made "for the sole purpose of avoiding litigation and attendant expenses thereof" followed three days later by another letter emphasizing that the offer was made solely for the purpose stated; and where the insurer never receded from its original position that there was no liability.—Cooper v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Ben. Ass'n, 141 Mich. 478.

¶ 776. Where an insurance policy provided that, in case differences should arise concerning the amount of any loss, arbitrators should be appointed at the request of either party, and their award shall be binding as to the amount of loss, but they should not decide the company's liability under the policy,—one-half of the appraiser's fee to be paid by the assured,—and the insurer requested such arbitration, this was not a waiver of a forfeiture on the ground of overvaluation.—Briggs v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 52.

(5 Mich. Dig. 15)

¶ 777. Where defendant insurer tenders the amount upon which it would have been liable had insured died of ordinary sickness in the classification in which he was insured, and contends that insured's death was not the result of accident, it cannot afterwards claim that death resulted from sickness while insured was employed in a different classification.—Thompson v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 167 Mich. 31.

§ 184. ——Agreement or order to pay loss.

¶ 778. Where the by-laws of an insurance company provide that there shall be no waiver of the terms of the policy without the concurrence of the secretary of the company, indorsed or specifically acknowledged, it was held that if the secretary signed orders for payment, on the adjustment of the loss, it should be regarded as a very conclusive waiver in writing if he knew all the facts.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289.

¶ 779. If the directors of a mutual insurance company, knowing that the insured included in his proof of loss property belonging to other members of his family, gave orders for the payment of the policy, they thereby waived any condition for forfeiture on which they might have insisted to avoid the policy, in so far as the condition concerned the matters within their knowledge.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289.

§ 185. Denial of liability on specific grounds as waiver of other grounds.

Waiver of one condition or warranty as waiver of others, see post § 186.

Denial of liability on other grounds as waiver of filing proof of loss, see post § 243.

¶ 780. Where an insurance company, with knowledge of all of the circumstances attending a loss, undertakes to notify the insured of its specific reasons for denying liability (keeping gasoline), it cannot, when sued upon the policy, set up any additional grounds of defense (repairing without consent).—Smith v. German Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270.

¶ 781. An insurance company, by placing its refusal to pay a loss solely upon the ground that the policy had been canceled, waives its right to assert as a defense to an action thereon that the insured had not submitted his claim to arbitration, that he was not the owner of the property insured, or that he had failed to disclose incumbrances.—Douville v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 158.

¶ 782. A general reference to other possible defenses does not prevent the waiver thereof which follows from the insurer's action in pointing out defects in proofs of loss.—Marthinson v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 372.

¶ 783. Setting up of grounds of defense by a life insurance company, consistent with its primary liability upon the policy in question, did not constitute a waiver of others which were stated, for breach of warranties.—Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 133 Mich. 526.

¶ 784. A fire insurance company, on being sued for a loss, cannot defend on the ground that the risk was increased by a neighboring dry-house which was not described in the application for insurance, where, in fact, the proof of loss showed its position, and the notice of refusal to pay treated it as included in the policy, but not properly heated, and did not rely upon undue concealment of its proximity.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 46 Mich. 15.

¶ 785. Where a fire insurance company, in acknowledging receipt of an affidavit setting forth that the fire in question was caused by the breaking of a lighted lamp as the insured was drawing oil from a tank in the nighttime, denied liability by reason of the use of coal oil instead of referring to kerosene oil, such error did not waive a defense on the ground of breach of a condition by drawing kerosene oil in a manner prohibited by the policy.—Vandervolgen v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 123 Mich. 291.

¶ 786. Where an insurance company, with full knowledge of the facts afterwards relied upon in support of its claims of forfeiture for the alleged false swearing of the insured in making out proofs of loss, and for the violation of one of its by-laws, bases its refusal to pay the loss solely upon the failure of the insured to state in his application for insurance the true condition of the title to the property, after which he is subjected to loss of time in trying to adjust the loss, and incurs the expense of bringing suit for its recovery, the company is estopped from asserting such claims of forfeiture as a defense in said suit.—Towle v. Ionia, Eaton & Barry Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 219.

¶ 787. An accident insurance company which, before the expiration of the time allowed for furnishing the company with proof of the duration of disability, refuses absolutely to pay any amount, on the ground that immediate notice of the injury was not given, cannot deny the right of the insured to recover for the full time of disability on the ground that less time was claimed in the proof of disability furnished.—Hohn v. Inter-State Casualty Co., 115 Mich. 79.

¶ 788. In garnishment against a life insurance company as the creditor of a beneficiary in one of its policies, where the disclosure in its first answer unqualifiedly denied indebtedness to the beneficiary, and in a subsequent answer, filed before the trial pursuant to a showing under oath that it was unable to make a full showing at the time of filing the first answer by reason of matter then being under investigation, fully set up the breaches relied upon to defeat the policy; such acts did not constitute a waiver of the defenses by a failure to seasonably rely upon them.—Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 133 Mich. 526.

§ 186. Waiver of one condition or warranty as waiver of others.

Denial of liability on specific grounds as waiver of other grounds, see ante § 185.

¶ 789. The waiving of certain warranties in an application for life insurance, known to have been false, did not operate as a waiver of others shown to have been false, which were never brought to the knowledge of the company and were never directly or by inference waived.—Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 133 Mich. 526.

§ 187. Waiver of charter or by-laws of mutual association.

¶ 790. The officers of a mutual fire insurance company cannot waive any of the provisions of the charter or by-laws.—Leonard v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Monroe and Wayne Counties, 192 Mich. 230.

¶ 791. A farmers' mutual fire insurance company is not estopped to deny liability for loss by fire to property not insurable by the company under its charter, by the fact a policy was issued by the president of the company insuring such property, even though there is evidence tending to show that the president knew at the time the character of the property sought to be insured.—Geraghty v. Washtenaw Mut. Fire-Ins. Co., 145 Mich. 635.

¶ 792. Where the application for insurance in a mutual fire insurance company, limited by How. St., § 4247, to insure building that constitutes detached risks "in villages and cities," located the building in the "town of Sumpter," and the word "village" was substituted in the policy at the home office, the company was estopped in an action upon such policy, from denying that the place described was a village because neither platted nor incorporated as such.—Russell v. Detroit Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 407.

§ 188. Waiver of nonpayment of premium or assessment.

Waiver of notice of assessment, see ante § 82.

By acceptance and retention after default, see post § 189.

Forfeiture for default in payment of premium or assessment, see ante §§ 150-155.

¶ 793. The fact that a fire insurance company made no further demand or other move for more than a year after the insured was in default in his assessment does not constitute a waiver of a provision that the insured shall have no claim for losses while in default.—Hill v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Manistee, Benzie & Mason Counties, 129 Mich. 141.

¶ 795. Waiver of forfeiture for nonpayment of assessment within the time limited in a life insurance certificate, by the filing of a health certificate approved by the company's physician, is not avoided by inducing the physician subsequently to indorse on the health certificate that he could not recommend insured as a good risk.—Jones v. Preferred Bankers' Life Assur. Co., 120 Mich. 211.

§ 189. ——By acceptance and retention after default.

¶ 796. Collecting and retaining assessments on an insurance policy does not constitute waiver of breach of a condition in the policy against additional insurance, where the company had no knowledge of the additional insurance until after the fire, and when it learned thereof it disclaimed liability, and no demand was made for the return of the premiums and the company never refused to return them.—A. M. Todd Co. v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Allegan & Ottawa Co., 137 Mich. 188.

¶ 797. Where the insurer with full knowledge of the facts retains assessments paid after the claimed forfeitures occurred until after suit is brought on the policy, the grounds of forfeiture are waived.—Reimold v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 162 Mich. 69.

¶ 798. Defendant benefit fire insurance company organized under Act No. 262, Sess. Laws 1895, provided in its membership articles that insurance against fire would be accorded to members in good standing. After plaintiff received his policy and some two or three years before the fire he took a demit or withdrawal card from his local grange and did not present same to any other grange or pay his grange dues. He did, however, pay his insurance assessments up to and after the fire, to defendant, and the jury found that when defendant was accepting said assessments, its secretary had knowledge of the plaintiff's status and did not cancel his policy. Defendant retained all of said assessments, except one received after the fire, which it tendered back. Held, the verdict and judgment for plaintiff should stand.—Laxton v. Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, Ltd., 168 Mich. 448.

¶ 799. A fire insurance company is not estopped to defend an action upon a policy, on the ground that plaintiff wilfully burned the property insured, by the fact that one of its officers made a criminal complaint against plaintiff for such burning, and that plaintiff was discharged upon the examination, or by the fact that, with knowledge of all the circumstances, it demanded and collected an assessment from him for the loss of his property.—Barnett v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 247.

¶ 800. Where a mutual insurance company imposes forfeiture in case a loss occurs while its assessments are still unpaid, but its local agent receives past-due assessments with knowledge of a loss, and forwards them to the company without notifying them of it, and they receive them, and two or three weeks afterward order the loss to be paid when adjusted, they cannot afterward refuse payment on the ground of the delay in paying the assessments, since they have waived that by receiving them when overdue and ordering payment.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Mich. 147.

¶ 801. Agent's knowledge of situation of insured lumber, held, in connection with acceptance of premium and omission to cancel insurance, to be a waiver of warranty in policy of certain clear space between lumber and "any woodworking or manufacturing establishment."—Michigan Shingle Co. v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 609.

¶ 802. By taking the premium and issuing the policy, the insurer must be regarded as having waived the condition which prohibited gunpowder being kept.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 803. The payment of a past due assessment to a fire insurance company after loss by fire and the receipt by the treasurer does not constitute a waiver of a provision that the insured shall have no claim for losses while in default where the payment was promptly returned by the treasurer.—Hill v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Manistee, Benzie & Mason Counties, 129 Mich. 141.

¶ 804. By retaining the order on his employer, given by the insured for the payment of instalments of premium on his policy of insurance, and neglecting to give notice of nonpayment, the insurance company, it seems, waived the forfeiture of the policy, which would result from nonpayment.—Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 55 Mich. 141.

¶ 805. The provision of a policy of life insurance, that no obligation is assumed unless at the date thereof the assured is in sound health, is waived by the collection of premiums thereon after an inspector of the company, authorized to "lift" the policies of people who were not in sound health when their policies issued, and pay them back their money, learned of the sickness of the assured at the time the policy was issued, notwithstanding a further provision that "its terms cannot be changed except by a written agreement signed by the president or secretary of the company."—Hilt v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 517.

§ 190. Waiver as to title, ownership or condition of property.

Forfeiture for breach of condition as to sole or unconditional ownership, see ante § 162.

¶ 806. A fire insurance company will be held to have insured the interest of a tenant by the entirety in property, where it issues a policy of insurance to such tenant on an application containing a question as to the tenant's title which is answered by the word, "deed," as the answer given does not convey any information upon the question of the estate conveyed, but is a representation of the applicant's possession of a deed to the entire parcel of land, and when the agent as well as the insurance company knew of such fact, the policy will not be held void because of a misrepresentation of the plaintiff's title. Whenever the writings constituting such a contract show an express waiver, or facts putting the company upon inquiry in relation to the title, it is not unreasonable to say that there is a waiver.—Clawson v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 121 Mich. 591.

§ 191. Waiver as to additional insurance.

Other insurance with insurer, see post § 192.
Forfeiture for breach of condition as to other insurance, see ante § 163.

¶ 807. Where an insured wrote the insurance company that he had taken out additional insurance and that he did not remember the terms of the policy which was in a bank, and stated that "if there is anything that conflicts with your policy, please advise me," and the company received the letter but did not reply, it is estopped to set up that the taking of additional insurance avoided the policy.—Rauch v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 281.

¶ 808. Other insurance being, in fact, obtained, if the first insurer, on being afterward informed of it, raises no objection further than to ask why it was not obtained from him, and otherwise treats it as a matter of course, he estops himself from repudiating his liability for loss that occurs after his conduct has induced the assured to rest satisfied with his policies.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

§ 192. ——Other insurance with insurer.

¶ 809. An accident insurance company cannot question the validity of either of two policies issued by it, because of a printed statement in the last application to the effect that the insured had no other insurance in the company, where it knew at the time of the issue of the second policy that such statement was untrue.—Emlaw v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 554.

§ 193. Misstatements or omissions in application prepared by agent of insurer.

See also ante ¶ 566.
Contradiction or disregard of applicant's statements, see post § 194.
Applications signed in blank by applicant, see post § 195.
Misstatements or omissions in proof of loss prepared by agent of insurer, see post ¶ 949.
Misstatements of matters agent of insurer assumes to know, see also ante ¶ 440.
Misstatements in application prepared by agent of insurer as defense in action for premium, see ante § 94, ¶ 391.
Notice to agents as notice to insurer, see ante § 176.

¶ 810. Where an agent, having full power to issue policies, and knowing the amount of incumbrances upon property sought to be insured, misstates such amount in an application for insurance filled out by himself and signed by the assured without being read, the agent stating that the application is all right and that the assured is fully protected, the insurer is liable notwithstanding a condition against misstatements; the agent's knowledge being the insurer's.—Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 514.

¶ 811. An insurance agent with authority not limited by the application, who makes out an application stating the applicant to be the owner in fee of the premises and that no other person is interested therein, though he had been informed that the property had been sold on a land contract, and that the insurance was designed to protect both vendor and vendee, binds the company in that respect, since the agent's information was that of the company, and the latter cannot avoid the policy, or limit recovery thereunder to the applicant's insurable interest.—Crouse v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 249.

¶ 812. The owner of a factory situated on leased ground orally applied for additional insurance to an agent who knew the facts, and at whose instance defendant's local agent (who did not know them) wrote part of such insurance in a policy providing that it should be void—unless otherwise stated or indorsed—if the insured property were on ground not owned by insured. Held, that the policy was valid.—Ahlberg v. German Ins. Co., 94 Mich. 259.

¶ 813. False answers written in an application for life insurance by the insurer's agent in reliance upon his own knowledge will not avoid the policy, where the application was signed by the insured after answering other questions, and without knowing that the former answers were contained therein.—Van Houten v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 682, 111 Mich. 160.

¶ 814. Where an application for life insurance is filled out by the agent without knowledge of its contents by the applicant, who supposes that the agent has acted honestly, a recovery may be had on the policy though certain representations are materially false.—Temmink v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 388.

¶ 815. Where an insurance agent knowing of a mortgage on the premises makes out an application without asking the applicant about incumbrances, and states therein that there is no incumbrance, he acts as the company's agent, and the insurance is not avoided for misrepresentation.—Russell v. Detroit Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 407.

¶ 816. Where one who applied for insurance under a policy that required a statement of the whole amount of incumbrance on the property did in good faith apprise the insurer's agent of all the facts regarding a mortgage upon which considerable interest had accrued, and the agent prepared the application with a statement of the incumbrance at its original amount in round numbers, held, that the applicant had a right to assume that the agent had set forth the amount of the mortgage with such accuracy as his principal deemed important. Also, that a company which issued its policy on such an application with full notice of the facts, and received the applicant's money under circumstances leading him to suppose he was receiving in consideration thereof a valid contract of indemnity, was estopped from afterward repudiating the contract for such an understatement of the incumbrance.—Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 30 Mich. 41.

¶ 817. Where an insurance company employs, as a solicitor of insurance, a foreigner who is not possessed of a sufficient knowledge of the English language to enable him to fill the blanks in his daily report, and the solicitor, having secured the application of a foreigner of a different nationality, with whose language he is likewise unfamiliar, leaves blank the space designed to show the holding of the applicant, being advised by his superior that, if the blanks are not filled, he will "fix it over," and the company accepts the consideration and issues the policy, it will be estopped to assert, after a loss, that it took it for granted that the blank indicated title in the applicant by deed, and will be held to have contracted to insure the interest which the applicant actually had, notwithstanding a provision in the policy that it should be void if the interest of the insured were other than unconditional and sole ownership.—Miotke v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 166.

§ 194. ——Contradiction or disregard of applicant's statements.

See also ante ¶ 391.

¶ 818. In making an oral application for insurance the applicant told the agent that there was a mortgage upon the property, and the agent in reporting to the company stated that there was no mortgage. Held, that the agent's knowledge was the company's, and that the policy was not void for misrepresentations.—Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 161.

¶ 819. Where an agent, whose authority is confined to soliciting applications, the form of which provides that the company shall not be bound by any act done or statement made by or to any agent or other person not contained in the application, is correctly informed of the amount unpaid on a land contract under which the applicant holds, and by mistake or otherwise inserts a less sum in the application, which he fills out, and the applicant without carelessness on his part, and in reliance upon the acts and conduct of the agent in preparing the application, signs it without reading it or having it read to him, and without notice or knowledge of such misrepresentation, which application is not attached to the policy, the company cannot avoid liability under a provision of the policy that by its acceptance the assured covenants that the application shall form a part of the policy, and a warranty by the assured.—Tubbs v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 646.

¶ 820. One who truthfully states to an agent all of the essential facts required by an application for insurance is not bound by an application which he signed without knowledge of its contents, where the agent had materially altered the facts therein recited.—Simmons v. National Live Stock Ins. Co., 187 Mich. 551.

¶ 821. An oral application for insurance mentioned a mortgage on the property, but the company's agent filled out and signed an application declaring the property to be unincumbered. Held, that the company was liable on the policy, although it contained provisions exempting the insurer from liability in case of misrepresentations.—Baker v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 70 Mich. 199.

¶ 822. Where in an action on an insurance policy it appears that defendant's local agents had also placed other insurance upon the property, that their clerk wrote out the application and at the time was informed by the plaintiff of such other insurance, and nevertheless failed to incorporate a statement thereof in the application, the policy is not avoided as for a representation in the application that there was no other insurance.—Steele v. German Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 81.

¶ 823. Where the secretary of a mutual accident insurance company, after being informed by a solicitor that a prospective applicant is carrying other insurance which, with that he proposes to take out, will exceed the limit prescribed by the company, and that he has agreed with the solicitor to drop such prior insurance at its expiration, sends the solicitor to take the application, and he, in answer to a question in the application whether the applicant is carrying other insurance, writes in a negative answer, the knowledge of the secretary and the solicitor is that of the company, and it will be held to have waived the right to insist upon a forfeiture of the policy on account of the prior insurance.—Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 102 Mich. 289.

§ 195. ——Applications signed in blank by applicant.

¶ 824. Where it had been shown that an application for insurance was signed by the applicant and afterwards filled out by the agent, it was proper to show that the answers made by deceased were incorrectly filled in by the agent, or that answers were filled in that had not been made.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 825. An insurance agent told the person whose insurance he was soliciting to sign an application, and said he would fill it out at his office, he having asked her some questions; held, that such conduct of the agent would not preclude the insurer from defending on the ground of false statements in the application, unless it appeared that none of the false answers was made in answer to the questions actually asked.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

§ 196. Waiver of warranty or condition by agent.

Provisions in policy prohibiting waiver by agent, see post § 197.
Unauthorized indorsements and modifications, see post § 198.
False statements included by suggestion or advice of agent, see post § 199.
Effect of agent's mistakes or omissions, see post § 200.
Efficacy of parol waiver, see post § 201.
Authority of agents in general, see ante §§ 23-25.
Limitations on agent's authority, see ante §§ 26, 27.
Authority of agent to waive proof of loss, see post § 242.

¶ 826. Where the conduct of an insurance agent in giving a policy has misled parties into making applications or accepting conditions, under a misapprehension as to their literal accuracy, the company is estopped by his action.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

¶ 827. Where additional insurance is taken with the consent of the insurer's agent in a manner outside of his authority, forfeiture is not precluded by the fact that such agent had authority to consent in a certain way and manner to the taking of such insurance and had done so in other cases.—Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 414.

¶ 828. An insurance company is bound by oral statements made to its agent, and upon which it issues a policy and receives the premium; and it cannot repudiate in such policy the authority of the agent, or responsibility for his acts.—Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309.

¶ 829. Where a submission to arbitration of loss under a policy has been revoked by the assured under circumstances that constitute such revocation a forfeiture of the policy, the subsequent silence of the company's adjuster is not an acquiescence in the revocation; the company not being called upon to speak or act until affirmative action by the assured.—Morley v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

§ 197. ——Provision in policy prohibiting waiver by agent.

See also post ¶ 844.
Provisions in policy limiting authority in general, see ante § 27.

¶ 830. A provision in an accident insurance policy that none of the company's agents can waive any of the conditions therein is valid.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12.

¶ 831. The customary provision that no agent has power to waive any provision of the policy except by writing indorsed thereon, does not prevent an adjuster from waiving proofs of loss, since the company can only act by agents and has power to waive them.—Young v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 68.

¶ 832. The conditions prescribed by an insurance policy as to the payment of a premium note cannot be waived by an insurance agent if the policy expressly stipulates that they shall not be.—McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 188.

¶ 833. Where an insurance policy prohibited the company's agent from waiving or modifying any of its conditions the company is not estopped by his representations from setting up a breach of the conditions against additional insurance.—Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 527.

§ 198. ——Unauthorized indorsements and modifications.

Changes and substitutions in subject-matter, policy or rights, see ante X.

¶ 834. Plaintiffs applied for insurance on their mill to insurance agents, who, being unable to place the entire amount in their own companies, asked defendant's agent to write the excess, which he did. On examining the policy the agents first mentioned called the attention of defendant's agent to the fact that the mill was subject to a mortgage in process of foreclosure, and asked that the policy be indorsed accordingly, to which he replied that it was contrary to his orders to write upon mortgaged mill property, but in answer to their question whether he could not make an explanation and get the company to carry the risk, he replied that he would submit the matter to the company; and thereupon he indorsed the policy and delivered it to the agents, who delivered it to plaintiffs. The latter had no notice of the conversation, and paid the premium to said agents. The second day after the policy's delivery the mill was burned. Notice of the loss was telegraphed to defendant, which on the same day wrote to its agent directing cancellation of the policy. The policy provided that in any matter relating to the procuring of the insurance covered by it no person, not duly authorized in writing, should be deemed defendant's agent. Held, that plaintiffs were not chargeable with notice of the want of authority on the part of defendant's agent to make the indorsement.—Miller v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 49.

§ 199. ——False statements induced by suggestion or advice of agent.

¶ 835. An applicant for an accident policy stated to the agent taking the application that he had been before insured in the Iowa State Traveling Men's Association. The agent told him that he need not so state in answering the question in the application as to whether he had been previously insured, since the said association was really not an insurance company. Applicant followed this advice, knowing his statement to be untrue. The applicant warranted the truth of his statements in the application. By the terms of the policy the agent had no authority to waive its terms. Held, in a suit on the policy, that it was invalidated by the applicant's false statement.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 160 Mich. 137.

§ 200. ——Effect of agent's mistakes or omissions.

¶ 836. Where the agent of an insurance company had full knowledge of the existence of an overdue mortgage upon property, and issued a policy thereon, from which a clause making the loss, if any, payable to the mortgagee, was omitted by his own mistake, the insured being ignorant of the English language and relying upon such agent in the premises, the mere commencement of foreclosure proceedings upon said mortgage will not avoid the policy under a clause providing for such a result in case proceedings were taken to foreclose any lien upon the property.—Butz v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 263.

¶ 837. Where at the time of issuing a policy of fire insurance, the assured informed the agent that the insured building was used for purposes other than as a dwelling, and by mistake, without the knowledge of the assured, the policy issued covered a dwelling only, the insurer is estopped from denying liability on the ground that the policy did not cover the property destroyed.—Simpson v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 184 Mich. 547.

¶ 838. Where a policy conditioned against liability in case of an incumbrance without written notice to and indorsed permission of the insurer was delivered to the assured without indorsement of permission and without calling his attention to such condition—although he had told the agent (there being no written application) that there was a mortgage on the premises,—held, that the condition was waived.—Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 428, on rehearing affirming 84 Mich. 161.

¶ 839. A stipulation that other insurance shall render the policy void unless indorsed thereon is waived where the agent receives a fire insurance policy with the request to fix it for that purpose and returns it saying that he had so arranged it.—Kotwicki v. Thuringia Ins. Co., 134 Mich. 82.

¶ 840. Under a condition in a policy that it should be void if the property insured was vacant for more than 10 days, and that no agent should have power to waive any conditions unless the waiver was written on or attached to the policy, an insurance company cannot set up the vacancy of the property as a defense to its liability where insured applied to the local agent, and paid for, a permit to leave it vacant and the agent forwarded the policy to the company and told insured that the permit was attached, though in fact the policy was marked canceled.—Morgan v. Illinois Ins. Co., 130 Mich. 427.

¶ 841. A condition avoiding a fire policy for want of indorsed consent to chattel mortgages covering the insured property is waived—notwithstanding a further condition against waiver by agent—where the insurer's agent (being also the assured's legal adviser and knowing the condition of the property) has full power to issue policies, and has filled out the application for insurance, procured and advised the placing of such mortgages, and omitted to indorse the consent.—Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 514.

¶ 842. A provision in an insurance policy against an oral waiver by agents of conditions in policy must be presumed to have been known to the insured.—Gould v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 302.

¶ 843. Where the applicant for life insurance has agreed to be governed by the company's regulations, among which is one prohibiting agents from waiving forfeitures, and from receiving premiums on lapsed policies except in connection with an application for revival, which shall not become operative until officially accepted by the company at its home office, the beneficiary cannot set up or rely upon an agent's saying that payment of past-due premium on a future day "would be all right."—Mallory v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 97 Mich. 416.

¶ 844. A provision in a policy of insurance that the same shall be void, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon, if the property become incumbered by a chattel mortgage, may be orally waived by the agent who issued the policy, although the policy provides that "no officer, agent, or other representative" of the insurer shall have power to waive any provision thereof except in writing.—Rediker v. Queen Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 224.

¶ 845. As the terms of a Michigan standard policy cannot be waived except by writing, and as the insurer's local agent cannot waive the provisions of the policy except as the policy provides, conversations with such an agent showing waiver of proofs of loss must be excluded.—Wadhams v. Western Assur. Co., 117 Mich. 514.

¶ 846. Where the holder of a fire insurance policy applied to the local agent of the company for a vacancy permit, and was informed by such agent that the company had instructed him not to grant the permit, a waiver of the condition avoiding the policy for vacancy cannot be shown. It makes no difference that he had oral permission from the agent that the premises remain vacant, and that he was not asked to surrender the policy, and that no tender of the unearned premium had been made.—Sutherland v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 668.

¶ 847. The insurer was estopped from claiming forfeiture by reason of additional incumbrance under the provision of the policy "if the property, or any part thereof, shall be * * * incumbered by mortgage or otherwise," then "this policy shall be absolutely void," where an agent who had authority to make and deliver policies, and who knew of an existing incumbrance and of the intent to incumber further, agreed with the applicant that she might incumber to a given amount, and that he would indorse such agreement upon the application, even though he failed to make such indorsement.—Copeland v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 77 Mich. 554.

¶ 848. A condition, voiding a fire insurance policy in the event of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings with the knowledge of the insured, was waived by the action of the company's agent in telling the mortgagee to go on with the proceedings, upon being informed that they were in contemplation and being asked to fix the policy.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 74.

§ 202. Waiver or estoppel by knowledge of agent or officer.

Agent's knowledge of other insurance, see post § 203.

Agent's knowledge of title or condition of property, see post § 204.

Knowledge of brokers and subagents, see post § 205.

Effect of applicant's want of good faith, see post § 206.

See also ante ¶¶ 733, 734.

Notice to agent as notice to insurer for purpose of grounding estoppel, see ante § 176.

¶ 849. The agent's knowledge of situation of insured lumber and that the stipulated clear space did not and could not exist, in connection with acceptance of premium and omission to cancel insurance, to be a waiver of warranty in policy that certain clear space should be maintained between lumber and "any woodworking or manufacturing establishment."—Michigan Shingle Co. v. State Investment & Ins. Co., 94 Mich. 389.

¶ 850. Where a decedent's widow procuring insurance for the benefit of the heirs represents the property to be unincumbered, whereas, as is fully known to the insurer's agent at the time he issues the policy and accepts the premium, she has a dower interest therein, the policy is not avoided.—Haire v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 481.

¶ 851. A mutual fire insurance company is estopped from avoiding payment of a policy on the ground of fraud of the insured in making false answers to an application where its duly authorized agent has knowledge of the falsity of the answers at the time they are made.—Blake v. Farmers' Mut. Lightning Protected Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, 194 Mich. 589.

¶ 852. The assured under a fire policy may insist on estoppel based on the agent's actual knowledge had at the time of the applicant notwithstanding the statement in the application that the applicant warrants his answers are true, and that no statement contradictory thereof was made to or by the insurer's agent, and that such declaration shall form part of the contract of insurance.—Robison v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 533.

¶ 853. The policy provided that the keeping of gunpowder "without written permission in the policy" should render it void. It was held that if the agent taking insurance on a stock of goods knew that gunpowder was kept and to be kept, the keeping it would not render the policy void, whether permission to keep it was indorsed or intended or neglected to be indorsed or not.—Peoria Marine & Fire Insurance Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 854. A fire insurance company is estopped from asserting a breach of warranty because of the failure of the insured to keep a clear space between property insured, where the agent is fully informed of the situation before the policy is written.—Collins v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 281.

¶ 855. Knowledge of an agent of a fire insurance company at the time of delivery of the policy that the factory in question was being operated at night, was the knowledge of the company, and waived a condition in the policy against operating after ten o'clock at night, notwithstanding that the policy contained a clause providing that no agent had the power to waive any provisions or conditions unless in a writing attached to the policy; as under the circumstances the right to run after that hour became part of the contract itself.—Improved Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 256.

¶ 856. Where an accident insurance policy provides that none of the company's agents can waive or alter any of the conditions therein, it cannot be claimed that a condition against recovery for a death resulting from intoxication was waived by knowledge on the part of the agent, who received and filled out the application for the policy, that the applicant was an intemperate man, though the application stated that the habits of the applicant were correct and temperate.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12.

¶ 857. The clause in a fire insurance policy that the insured should "keep his books and inventory in an iron safe at night, or at some place secure against fire in another building," was not waived by knowledge of the soliciting agent that the insured did not have an iron safe; since the insured remained bound to keep his books in another building.—King v. Concordia Fire-Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 258.

¶ 858. The clause in a fire insurance policy that the insured should "keep his books and inventory in an iron safe at night, or at some place secure against fire in another building," was not waived because there was no other building in town safer than that of the insured; since the purpose of such clause, i. e., the preservation of the best evidence of the amount of the loss of the insured in the event of the destruction of the insured goods by fire, would be accomplished if such books were placed in a building not exposed to the hazard of the fire which might endanger such goods; even though the assured did not own an iron safe in which to keep such books.—King v. Concordia Fire-Ins. Co., 140 Mich. 258.

¶ 859. Where a policy of fire insurance contained a provision that, no agreement to the contrary being indorsed thereon, the policy should be void "if illuminating gas or vapor be generated in the described building or adjacent thereto for use therein," and the insurer's agent knew of the existence of a system for lighting by gas generated by gasoline known as a hollow wire gasoline lighting system, in which gasoline was carried to burners in a hollow copper wire and gas generated at the burners, at the time of the issuance of the policy, such condition was waived when the policy was issued, and it is immaterial that a change of the system was made without the knowledge of the agent whereby gasoline was forced from a tank to a generator, where it was generated by heat into gas, the gas being then forced through galvanized iron pipes to the burners.—Marx v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co., 192 Mich. 497.

§ 203. ——Agent's knowledge of other insurance.

¶ 860. There is no implied waiver of a stipulation in a policy that it shall be void if other insurance is taken on the property without the written consent of the first insurer, from the fact that the agent of the first insurer read a second policy which was shown to him, and did not object to it.—Robinson v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 63 Mich. 90.

§ 204. ——Agent's knowledge of title or condition of property.

¶ 861. Where an applicant for fire insurance discloses the exact condition of his interest in the property insured in a verbal application to the agents of the insurer the latter cannot claim a breach of condition so as to work a forfeiture of the contract and render it void from the beginning on the ground that insured was not the sole and unconditional owner of the property.—Crossman v. American Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., 198 Mich. 304.

¶ 862. Where the agent who takes the application and issues the policy is fully cognizant of the state of the title, and where the assured accepts the policy after a full statement to him and under his advice, the assurer is estopped from asserting that it was misled by statements in the application to the effect that the assured have absolute title in fee, whereas one of them has merely a life estate.—Robison v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 533.

¶ 863. A condition in a policy of fire insurance that it shall be void if the building insured "be or become vacant, and so remain for 10 days," is not waived by the fact that, at the time an agent of the company consents to an assignment of the policy, he is informed that the building is then unoccupied.—Ranspach v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 699.

ises. The applicant, before taking it, told the insurance agent that he expected to leave his house vacant a year or more, and was informed it would make no difference. During the vacancy the place was burned. Held, that the company was not estopped from relying on the clause of forfeiture.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

§ 205. ——Knowledge of brokers and subagents.

¶ 865. An insurance company is not bound by the knowledge of the facts possessed by the persons taking the application where at the time the insured communicates the information to them, they are acting as insurance brokers, and not as agents for the company.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

¶ 866. Where the insured communicates information, in applying for his policy, to the persons taking the application in their capacity as brokers, the company does not become bound by such information by reason of the fact that said persons at the time of the renewal of the policy have become state agents for the company.—Bonewell v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 274.

¶ 867. Defendant fire insurance company's authorized agency for a county was located at Sault Ste. Marie. At Brindely, in the same county, one Miller delivered to the insured a policy, collected the premiums, notified said agency of the fire loss in question, received a reply, and gave the reply to the insured. At the time the policy was placed Miller knew of a chattel mortgage on the premises. The policy contained no waiver with respect to said mortgage. Miller's connection was solely with said agency, defendant knowing nothing thereof. Held, Miller's part in the transaction did not amount to a waiver by defendant of the condition against incumbrances contained in said policy.—Moloney v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 269.

¶ 868. One Pfunter contracted to build a brick plant on a certain piece of land owned by him, and to convey the land and building to a brick company, a corporation. One Beiderman solicited Pfunter to take a policy of tornado insurance on the building, and the checks in payment of premiums were made out to Beiderman and indorsed by nim to defendant's agency. The policy of insurance provided that it should be void if the insured was not the sole and unconditional owner, or if the property should be conveyed without the defendant company's consent. Beiderman was a stockholder and officer of the brick company. Held, his supposed knowledge in such capacity of the facts with regard to the ownership of the property insured would not be imputed to defendant company so as to hold it to have waived the conditions of the policy.—Dull v. Royal Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 671.

¶ 869. A life insurance company is not estopped from denying the truth of the answers given by an applicant for insurance to questions concerning his health in the past, in an action on the policy, by the facts that both the agent who took the application and the physician who conducted the medical examination knew the answers were false, where it appears that such applicant intentionally falsified in such answers; since good faith is always essential to an estoppel.—Mudge v. Supreme Court I. O. F., 149 Mich. 467.

¶ 870. Where the beneficiary of a life insurance policy procured such policy knowing that the insured, his wife, had a disease of the heart, and would die suddenly from it, he will not be heard to assert that the company is estopped from setting up the defense that the policy was obtained under false representations as to the health of the insured because of the fact that the company's agent was informed of the true condition of her health.—Haapa v. Metropolitan Life-Ins. Co., 150 Mich. 467.

¶ 871. An insurer is not bound by statements contained in the application when both the agent and the insured know they are untrue and calculated to deceive, and where the application is to be forwarded to the insurer as the basis of its action.—Ketcham v. American Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 117 Mich. 521.

D. REINSTATEMENT.

See also post ¶ 1031.
Authority of agent to reinstate, see post § 208.
Waiver or estoppel to deny reinstatement, see post § 209.
Remedies and actions for reinstatement, see post § 210.
Reinstatement of insured as jury question, see post § 340.
Right to cancel policy where reinstatement fraudulently obtained, see Rescission.

¶ 872. A policy of insurance that has become void by a violation of one of its conditions cannot be revived by anything short of a new contract, or by such conduct as, by misleading the insured to his prejudice, operates as an estoppel. Mere knowledge of the violation, without other action of the insurance company, is of no account.—New York Central Ins. Co. v. Watson, 23 Mich. 486.

¶ 873. The mere deposit of money with the local agent of a life insurance company, to be applied to the payment of premiums on a lapsed policy in case an application for its revival should be approved at the home office, which, by express stipulation, alone has authority to revive policies is insufficient to effect a revival of the policy.—Clark v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 160.

¶ 874. The fact that a life insurance company, in reply to a letter written on behalf of the wife of a policyholder, apprising it of the latter's disappearance, suggesting the inadvisability of her continuing the payment of premiums, and inquiring whether, in case the policy should lapse, the insured could be reinstated upon his return, or would be obliged to apply anew, wrote advising the cancellation of the policy, and stating that, in the event of his return, it would do whatever was right in regard to a new policy, after which no further premiums were paid, will not, in the absence of fraud, entitle the wife to a reinstatement of the policy, where the husband died without having returned.—Mosser v. Knight Templars & Masons Life Indemnity Co., 115 Mich. 672.

¶ 875. A delinquent member of an insurance association who has done all that the law requires of him to procure reinstatement after failure to pay assessments within time limited in his certificate, may rest upon his rights and the fact that he took no further steps to secure reinstatement is no evidence of acquiescence in a forfeiture set up by the insurer.—Jones v. Preferred Bankers' Life Assur. Co., 120 Mich. 211.

§ 208. Authority of agent to reinstate.

Limitations on agent's authority in general, see ante §§ 26, 27.

¶ 876. An agent of an insurance company cannot revive a canceled policy already rejected by the company, unless he has its authority to rescind or revoke its action, and that, too, in the specific case; this authority cannot be presumed.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502.

§ 209. Waiver or estoppel to deny reinstatement.

General law of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 877. An insurance company is estopped from refusing to reinstate a delinquent member who is in good health, where its conduct clearly indicates that it does not insist upon a forfeiture of a member under similar circumstances, and the member knows of this and relies upon it.—Jones v. Preferred Bankers' Life Assurance Co., 120 Mich. 211.

¶ 878. An understanding between the managing officer of an insurance company and a certificate holder that the only thing necessary for him to do to be reinstated after forfeiting his rights by nonpayment of an assessment within the time limited, was to file a certificate of health in accordance with the usage of the company, is sufficient to establish a waiver of the forfeiture upon compliance with such condition, express waiver not being necessary.—Jones v. Preferred Bankers' Life Assur. Co., 120 Mich. 211.

¶ 879. Revival of policy, forfeited by breach of condition, cannot be effected by any act of waiver or estoppel unless done upon full knowledge of the facts. To constitute an estoppel there must be such conduct on the part of the insurers as would otherwise operate as a fraud on the insured, who, in reliance on it, had taken some action to his own prejudice. Where nothing has been done by their authority, express or implied, or where no act has been done by the insured in honest reliance on such waiver, there can be no estoppel.—Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467.

¶ 880. Forfeiture for nonpayment of assessment within the time limited in a life insurance certificate is waived where the manager of the company informs the insured that he will have to furnish a health certificate from the company's physician a blank for which is handed to him, and which he promptly returns properly filled out and indorsed by the physician.—Jones v. Preferred Bankers' Life Assur. Co., 120 Mich. 211.

§ 210. Remedies and actions for reinstatement.

Equitable relief of beneficiary to revive policy surrendered because of insurer's fraud, see post ¶ 1081.

Actions on policy in general, see post XX.

Reinstatement of insured as jury question, see post § 340.

¶ 881. A life insurance agent by false representation that a policy had become forfeited, and by great urgency, persuaded the insured, who was too feeble to withstand his arguments, and whom he would allow no time for consultation, to give up his policy, which was for the benefit of his wife, and accept instead a policy for its surrender value. The wife was not consulted as if she had any rights, and the husband died soon afterwards. Held, that a bill seasonably brought as here, within two months, by the wife to compel the re-establishment of the policy, should be sustained.—Tabor v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 Mich. 324.

¶ 882. In a suit to revive a policy the surrender of which has been procured by false representations, it is not a defense that a premium which fell due after the surrender has not been paid or tendered; the insurer's action in procuring the surrender being equivalent to a declaration that the premium if tendered would not be received.—Heinlein v. Imperial Life Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 250.

¶ 883. Where, prior to the surrender of an insurance policy and to the maturity of a premium thereon the insurer has sent to the insured a written notice that the premiums on her policy will thereafter be collected at the home office instead of at a certain bank, and that she will receive due notice of the day when a premium becomes due, failure to pay or tender a premium falling due of which notice is not given will not defeat a suit to revive the policy.—Heinlein v. Imperial Life Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 250.

E. UNEARNED PREMIUMS AND SURRENDER VALUES.

§ 211. In general.

See also ante ¶¶ 335, 336.

Necessity for refund of unearned premiums on cancellation, see post § 212.

Surrender values and privileges, see post § 213.

Right to charge premium in default against cash surrender value, see ante § 153.

Premium or assessment in general, see ante VI.

¶ 884. In case of loss under an absolute insurance for a term of years, the company need not return anything as "unearned premium," and may recover on an unpaid note given for the premium. But where the insurance is on the instalment plan, and the policy is to be void so long as there is any default in the advance payment of an instalment, it cannot recover on a note given for successive instalments of the premium.—American Ins. Co. v. Stoy, 41 Mich. 385.

¶ 885. An insurance policy purporting to be for five years stipulated that the company might at any time cancel it on returning the unexpired premium pro rata, and permitting the assured to have it canceled on paying the customary short rate for the period expired; it also provided that in case of loss the company might deduct any note or instalment thereof given as a consideration for the policy. An instalment note given on the policy provided that, in case of the nonpayment of any instalment at maturity, the policy should be void until revived, and the whole amount of instalments remaining unpaid on said policy should be considered earned. Held, that these provisions distinguished the policy from one under which there was no absolute insurance for the whole period for which it was taken.—Cauffield v. Continental Ins. Co., 47 Mich. 447.

§ 212. Necessity for refund of unearned premiums on cancellation.

Right to set off unearned premiums in action for special assessment, see ante ¶ 389.

¶ 886. The insurer cannot cancel the policy without notifying the assured and refunding, or offering to refund, the unearned premium.—Home Ins. Co. of Columbus, Ohio v. Curtis, 32 Mich. 402.

¶ 887. An insurance company which has taken up, because there was no medical examination, a policy procured by a daughter on her father's life, cannot retain both the policy and the premiums which she has paid, there having been no fraud on her part in procuring the insurance; and is liable for the premiums in assumpsit.—Frain v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 67 Mich. 527.

¶ 888. The actual tender of unearned premium is unnecessary to the cancellation of an insurance policy if the minds of the parties have met on the point that the policy is to be canceled; and if the insured directs the insurance agent to procure other insurance for him, it is presumable that he means him to use for the purpose the money that he would have to return, and the direction would be a waiver of such tender.—Hillock v. Traders' Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 531.

¶ 889. One sentence in a clause of a fire insurance policy provided that the company might cancel it at any time by giving five days' notice. The next sentence stated that after cancellation by the company the insured should be entitled to the return of the unearned premium, upon surrender of the policy. Held, the return by the company of the unearned premium was not a condition precedent to its right of cancellation.—Webb v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co., 164 Mich. 139.

§ 213. Surrender values and privileges.

Statutory provision for surrender value, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. II, § 2.

¶ 890. A provision in an insurance policy that if a policy for its surrender value is taken it must be demanded within one year from the time an accrued premium falls due refers to an accrued premium for the nonpayment of which the company can determine the policy.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bowes, 42 Mich. 19.

XIII. REINSURANCE AND CONCURRENT INSURANCE.

§ 214. Reinsurance.

Concurrent or other insurance on risk covered, see post § 215.

Coinsurance, see post § 216.

Insured as coinsurer, see post § 217.

Authority of insurance companies to reinsure, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. I, § 2.

Right of reinsurance belonging to fire, marine and automobile insurance companies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. I, §§ 7, 10.

¶ 891. A reinsurance contract is not within the provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 7217, How. 2nd Ed., § 8151, providing that life insurance companies shall not make any insurance contract with any citizen of the state which shall not state distinctly the amount of life benefits, manner of payment, period of continuance and amount of premiums, and that any person who may have paid money therefor may recover same back at any time within six years from date of payment.—

Warren v. Federal Life Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 342.

¶ 892. Even if a reinsurance contract is within the provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 7217, How. 2nd Ed., § 8151, providing that life insurance companies shall not make any insurance contract with any citizen of the state which shall not distinctly state the amount of life benefits, manner of payment, period of continuance, and amount of premiums, and that any person who may have paid money may recover back same, it complies with such statute where the original policy states not only the amount of insurance, but the monthly premium, and the insurer assumed all obligations of the policy, subject to the terms of a reinsurance contract between it and a third insurance company with which the risk had been previously reinsured.—Warren v. Federal Life Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 342.

§ 215. Concurrent or other insurance on risk covered.

Provision in standard fire insurance policy for pro rata liability where concurrent insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 893. The pro rata insurance clause in a Michigan standard policy, providing that the company shall not be liable for a greater portion of any loss than the amount insured shall bear to the whole insurance, whether valid or not, permits the insurer to prorate the insurance in case another policy had been written on the property at the time of the second policy, although such first policy is rendered void by the making of the second.—Webb v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 167 Mich. 144.

§ 216. Coinsurance.

Anti-coinsurance act as public regulation, see ante § 5.

¶ 894. All persons issuing policies on the same property are known as coinsurers, and they are never jointly liable, but their proportion of liability depends on the amount which each insures.—Chesbrough v. Home Ins. Co., 61 Mich. 333.

¶ 895. Where a fire insurance policy, issued to a firm, provided that, in case of other insurance, the amount recoverable upon it should be no greater proportion of the loss than the amount thereby insured should bear to the whole amount insured thereon, "without reference to the date of the different policies or their invalidity," etc., it was held that, in determining the amount recoverable upon such policy, a policy in another company covering the same property should be treated as liable to contribute, though it had been issued to one of the plaintiffs individually, and was claimed to have been forfeited by change in the ownership of the property by reason of the insured having taken in the other plaintiff as a partner, though after the loss it had been assigned to other companies, insurers of the same property, on payment of their full share of the loss, and under an arrangement that they should prosecute it for their benefit.—Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Verdier, 33 Mich. 138; Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Verdier, 35 Mich 395.

Anti-coinsurance act as public regulation, see ante § 5.

Limitations upon and prohibitions against requirement of coinsurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, §§ 9, 10.

Standard fire insurance form for rider clause for coinsurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, §§ 9, 10.

¶ 896. An insurance policy provided that the assured should maintain insurance on the property to the extent of four-fifths of its cash value and in case of failure to do so should be a coinsurer to the extent of such deficit. Held, that the assured was bound either to procure from others, or to carry himself, insurance to the extent, with this policy, of four-fifths of the value of the property, and to contribute ratably in case of loss.—Chesbrough v. Home Ins. Co., 61 Mich. 333.

XIV. AMOUNT OF INSURANCE, EXTENT OF LOSS AND ABANDONMENT TO INSURER.

§ 218. Life, accident and disability insurance.

Disability or sickness, see post § 219.

Reductions for negligence or misconduct, see post § 220.

Instructions as to amount or extent of loss, see post § 349.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to amount of loss or benefit payable, see post § 304.

Admissibility of evidence as to amount of insurance, extent of loss or abandonment, see post § 316.

Sufficiency of evidence of amount and extent of loss, see post § 327.

Accrual and amount of benefits in fraternal society, see Fraternal Associations, VI.

¶ 897. Under a provision in an accident policy requiring notice of disability for which claim is made to be given within ten days after the disability, insured is entitled to receive indemnity for disability continuing after the date of notice, although the notice is not given within ten days of the time the disability begins.—Miner v. National Casualty Co., 166 Mich. 669.

§ 219. ——Disability or sickness.

¶ 898. A barber insured against accidents by a policy providing that if the injuries, independent of all other causes, shall "immediately, continuously, and wholly disable and prevent the insured from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation," the company will pay a specified indemnity during the continuance of such "total disablement," is not prevented from recovering for an accident as for a total disablement because he goes to his place of business for several days after the accident, where he is practically unable to perform any work while there because of his injuries, and after a few days is forced to remain at home for several weeks.—Hohn v. Inter-State Casualty Co., 115 Mich. 79.

¶ 899. The disability of a banker and real estate dealer resulting from the dislocation of his shoulder in an accident is not, as matter of law, partial only, so as to deprive him of the right to recover the indemnity provided by an accident policy insuring against loss resulting from injuries which "immediately and wholly disable and prevent him from prosecuting any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation," where, although he goes to his office every day, he is practically unable to do any kind of work.—Turner v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 112 Mich. 425.

¶ 900. Insured was not "necessarily, entirely and continuously confined to the house" within the terms of an indemnity against disability, where he occasionally went out for an airing though disabled to do any manual labor because of a felon and amputations occasioned thereby.—Cooper v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Ben. Ass'n, 141 Mich. 478.

¶ 901. "Loss" of a member of the body insured against in an accident policy means the destruction of the usefulness of the member, but the rule is otherwise where the word loss is eliminated and the insurance is against "an injury that shall have caused the amputation of a limb (whole hand or foot)".—Fuller v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. L. & A. Ins. Ass'n, 122 Mich. 548.

¶ 902. Under a by-law of a mutual accident insurance association providing for payment of the full amount of the policy to a member receiving injuries "which alone shall cause amputation of a limb (whole hand or foot)," a member suffering amputation of one third of a foot from the toe down and rendering the foot useless for the performance of its natural functions, was not entitled to recover.—Fuller v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Life & Acc. Ins. Ass'n, 122 Mich. 548.

¶ 903. Under an accident and sick benefit policy providing for payment of a stated sum per month while the insured was wholly incapacitated from transacting any and every kind of work or business and entirely confined to the house or bed, etc., a member was not entitled to sick benefits after such time as he went to his store and sat around for several hours a day and then went there every day and did some work.—Shirts v. Phoenix Acc. & Sick Ben. Ass'n, 135 Mich. 439.

§ 220. ——Reductions for negligence or misconduct.

Condition against "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," see ante § 160.

¶ 904. In an action on an insurance policy containing a clause for a reduction of the insurance in the event death results from "unnecessary exposure to obvious risk of injury or obvious danger" the test of the insured's conduct is whether he was guilty of gross or wanton negligence.—Walter v. People's Health & Accident Ins. Co., 173 Mich. 581.

§ 221. Property, casualty and liability insurance.

Measure of value of property insured, see post § 222.

Prorating loss where other insurance on risk, see ante ¶ 893.

Sufficiency of evidence of amount and extent of loss, see post § 327.

¶ 905. Under a Michigan standard fire insurance policy limiting insurer's liability in case of total loss to what it would then cost the insured to replace the property with material of like kind and quality, the insured can recover the market value of the property at the time of the fire.—Mitchell v. St. Paul German Fire Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 594.

¶ 906. Where, in an action upon a policy of insurance, two different appraisals constitute the only evidence as to the amount of loss, the jury are bound to adopt one or the other, and a verdict consistent with neither of them will be set aside.—Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

§ 222. ——Measure of value of property insured.

¶ 907. Under a provision in an insurance policy that damages for loss shall not exceed the actual cost of producing the lumber destroyed, the assured, if he bought the logs, can recover the price paid, with interest from date of purchase, and cost of manufacturing and storing; if he bought the stumpage, his recovery is limited to the price paid, with like interest and costs; and if he owned the land from which the logs were cut he can recover the fair value of the stumpage, with interest and the other costs added.—Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116.

¶ 908. Where the property was lumber, and where the insured were the owners of a large quantity of standing timber, the proper measure of insurance at actual cash value not beyond cost of replacement was the actual cash value at the time of loss, and not the cost of manufacturing at their own mill a like quantity of lumber from their own timber.—Mitchell v. St. Paul German Fire Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 594.

¶ 909. An insurance company is liable for the full value of a residence where it is insured by the life tenant rather than for the value of the life tenant's interest alone.—Convis v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., of Calhoun County, 127 Mich. 616.

§ 223. Marine losses generally.

Abandonment for total loss, see post § 224.
Sufficiency and form of notice or deed of abandonment, see post § 225.
Acceptance of abandoned vessel, see post § 226.
Effect of abandonment, see post § 227.
Breach of marine policies or conditions, see ante § 173.
Disability to insure vessel subsequent to its loss where loss known to owner, see ante ¶ 178.
Conditional contracts for insurance, see ante § 55.
General shipping law, see Shipping.

¶ 910. The cost of removing part of a cargo of coal from a stranded vessel in order to float it, is not "expense incurred on account of the cargo" so as to exclude it from consideration in determining whether the loss exceeds one-half of the valuation, since such expense is for the benefit of the vessel.—Harvey v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 601.

§ 224. ——Abandonment for total loss.

¶ 911. There is no right to abandon where the loss is the result of a peril not insured against.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 912. Under a policy providing for abandonment to the underwriter as total loss where the loss exceeded one-half the value, and silent as to the time for such abandonment, the owner has a reasonable time within which to act, and where a vessel was aground and later was floated and repaired, an abandonment within 60 days is reasonable since it was not readily determined whether the loss exceeded one-half the value.—Harvey v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 601.

¶ 913. To reinstate an abandonment of a steamer to the underwriters as a total loss it is a prerequisite that the underwriters have whatever advantage there can be obtained from the transfer to them of the vessel.—Loud v. Federal Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 60.

§ 225. ——Sufficiency and form of notice or deed of abandonment.

¶ 914. No particular form is necessary to an abandonment of the vessel insured, and, unless required by the policy, it need not be in writing.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

¶ 915. No particular form of notice of abandonment is necessary, and, unless required by the policy, it need not be in writing.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214; Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Thames & Mersey M. Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 571.

¶ 916. A notice that an insured vessel is ashore at a stated place and that the owners abandon the boat and claim a total loss, with request to the agent to whom the notice is directed to inform the underwriters, is a sufficient notice of abandonment.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Thames & Mersey Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 571.

¶ 917. That the vessel had to be beached in a harbor during a storm, on the 12th of November, and was remaining there, notwithstanding efforts to get her off, on the 13th of December following, is a sufficient statement of cause of abandonment in an action upon a policy of marine insurance.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

¶ 918. Where the policy of marine insurance requires an abandonment to be in writing, and that it must be sufficient, if accepted, to vest in the insurer an unincumbered title to the vessel, a notice of abandonment signed by the president of the corporation owners, who was himself a mortgagee of the vessel, must be construed so as to be effectual, if accepted, and to operate as a discharge of the mortgage by way of estoppel.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

¶ 919. A deed of abandonment is not essential to the rights of either party, as the title passes, and the property vests in the insurer, immediately on abandonment.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214; Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Thames & Mersey M. Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 571.

¶ 920. Upon abandoning a vessel to the underwriter as a total loss, the owner must convey a perfect title to such share of the vessel as is covered by the policy, and hence must convey such proportion as the amount of the policy bears to the value as expressed in the policy.—Harvey v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 601.

¶ 921. On receiving notice of abandonment the underwriters have a right to refuse acceptance until they can inquire whether the accident was occasioned by a cause which their liability does not cover, but they cannot accept the vessel and defer inquiries until after suit is brought, and then for the first time claim that their acceptance is not conclusive.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Thames & Mersey M. Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 571.

¶ 922. Where, upon receiving notice of the abandonment of a vessel by the owners, the insurers take her in charge, put her in the dry-dock, and cause her to be repaired at an expense exceeding one-half of her value, and do not return, or offer to return, the vessel to the owners, these acts amount to an acceptance, and the title passes to the insurers. —Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Thames & Mersey M. Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 571.

¶ 923. Any act of an underwriter in consequence of an abandonment, that could be justified only under a right derived from it, may be decisive evidence of an acceptance.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 924. Any act done for the purpose of making the most of the property to whomsoever it may prove to belong ought not to be construed against the party who thus seeks the common interest.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 925. Notwithstanding a provision in a policy of marine insurance that acts of the insurer or insured in recovering, saving or preserving the property in case of disaster should not be considered a waiver or an acceptance of abandonment, yet if the insurer, after notice of abandonment, and after suspension of previous efforts for recovery, proceeds to take possession, or if he proceeds for the first time to recover the property after abandonment, such acts tend to signify an acceptance of the abandonment.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

¶ 926. Under a policy of marine insurance providing that if the insured should neglect to take measures to recover the vessel, or to repair it when recovered, then the insurer might recover and repair it, for account of the insured, held, that the insurer's neglect to cause repairs to be made was evidence from which an acceptance by it of an abandonment might be found.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

¶ 927. An abandonment once made and accepted fixes the rights of the parties, and renders the insurers liable as for a total loss. —Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Thames & Mersey M. Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 571.

¶ 928. By an abandonment and acceptance of a vessel insured the title passes to the insurer, and if the loss turns out to be less than the proportion stipulated in the policy, that fact does not retransfer the title.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

¶ 929. Where there is no acceptance of an abandonment the captain in placing his vessel in a dry-dock and repairing her does not act as the insurer's agent; it is only after an actual abandonment and the passage of the title that the captain becomes such agent. Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 930. Where the owner of a hired vessel, the substantial ownership of which he had transferred for the time being to the charterer, formally abandoned its wreck to the underwriters, his action had no effect either to adopt a certain indebtedness contracted by the vessel master in the charterer's interest, or to affect the rights and liabilities of the charterer himself, without whose consent such abandonment was res inter alios.—Hinman v. Eakins, 26 Mich. 83.

¶ 931. An abandonment relates back to the time of the disaster, and the underwriters are treated as in possession from that time, and any expenses incurred in endeavoring to save from the wreck are considered as incurred in their behalf.—First Nat. Bank of Marquette v. Stewart, 26 Mich. 83.

¶ 932. An act of abandonment of a vessel, under a policy of marine insurance, when accepted, has all the effect that a full assignment could accomplish.—Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames & Mersey Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

XV. NOTICE AND PROOFS OF LOSS, DEATH OR CASUALTY.

§ 228. Notice of loss in general.

Time for notice and proof, see post §§ 229, 230.

Persons entitled to furnish notice and proof of loss, see post § 231.

Sufficiency of proof of loss, see post §§ 232-238.

Estoppel arising from proof of loss, see post § 239.

Effect of failure to furnish proofs, see post § 240.

Waiver of notice or proof of loss, see post §§ 241-244.

Amount of insurance and extent of loss, see ante XIV.

Notice as question of law and fact, see post § 341.

Instructions as to notice of loss, see post § 348.

Notice and proofs of loss in fraternal societies, see Fraternal Associations, VII.

Provisions in standard form of fire insurance as to requirements in case of loss, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 933. Notice of the loss of insured property is distinct from proof of loss, and its sole purpose is to enable the company to take proper action to protect its interests.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 131.

§ 229. Time for notice and proof.

See also post ¶ 976.
Excuses for delay, see post § 230.
Satisfying requirement for immediate notice, see also post ¶ 944.

¶ 934. A notice of an accident after a delay of more than six months is insufficient under an accident policy requiring "immediate written notice."—Sweeney v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 199 Mich. 584.

¶ 935. Under an accident certificate requiring notice within five days, it is sufficient if notice is given within five days after it is ascertained that the illness is due to accident, and the fact that notice that illness was due to disease was first given because of wrong diagnosis, does not affect the second notice.—Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Soc., 120 Mich. 142.

¶ 936. The failure of an insured person, without excuse, to give notice of an accidental injury until nearly five months after receiving it, warrants an instruction that it was not a compliance with a requirement of a policy of accident insurance that written notice should be given as soon as possible after the happening of an accident.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 937. Quære, whether, where a policy required proofs of loss to be furnished within a specified time, but did not declare the effect of a failure to furnish them as required, while for a violation of other provisions of the policy it is expressly provided that the company shall be absolved from all liability, the failure to furnish proofs within the time fixed would in any case deprive the insured of all rights.—Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 289.

¶ 938. Where a fire insurance policy provides that proofs of loss shall be furnished within sixty days after a fire, that the loss shall not become payable until sixty days after such proofs have been received, and that no action shall be sustainable until after compliance by the insured with the requirements of the policy, nor unless commenced within twelve months after the fire, the insured has at least ten months within which to make his proofs of loss, but where he brings an action and permits the year to expire without furnishing such proofs and the provision has not been waived by the insurer, there can be no recovery.—Allen v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 204.

¶ 939. Whether a mortgagee's rights in insured property belonging to a deceased person can be impaired by delay in appointing an administrator and in furnishing proofs of loss, quære.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 Mich. 420.

¶ 940. Under an employers' liability policy requiring the assured, "upon the occurrence of an accident, and upon notice of any claim on account of an accident," to give immediate notice, in writing, "of such accident or claim" to the company, notice need not be given until there has been both an accident and a claim for damages by reason thereof.—Grand Rapids Electric Light & Power Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 111 Mich. 148.

¶ 941. Where an insurance policy requires the insured to send the company notice of the injury within a certain time, the insured is excused from doing so, despite the absolute language of the provision, where he is prevented by mental incompetency or other act of God.—Reed v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 154 Mich. 161.

¶ 942. Where an accident policy requires the insured to send the company notice within fourteen days after the injury, he is not excused from doing so on the ground of inability, where the testimony simply shows that he was in a more or less dazed and unresponsive frame of mind, but was not irrational during the fourteen-day period.—Reed v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 154 Mich. 161.

§ 231. Persons entitled to furnish notice and proof of loss.

¶ 943. A mortgagee of insured property is one of the parties assured within the meaning of the policy, and notice of loss given by him will inure to the benefit of all other interested parties and need not be in writing.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 131.

¶ 944. The requirement in an insurance policy that the assured shall give immediate notice in case of loss is satisfied if notice is given by the person to whom the policy was made payable, and by the assignee of all the interest held by the assured, to the local agent, and if knowledge of it comes to the general agent of the company.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 131.

Signature and verification, see post § 233.
Effect of false statements or false swearing, see post § 234.
Demand for further proof, see post § 235.
Adjuster's certificate, see post § 236.
Necessity and sufficiency of inventory, see post § 237.
Waiver of defects, see post § 238.
Estoppel arising from proof of loss, see post § 239.

Effect of failure to furnish proofs, see post § 240.
Sufficiency of proofs of loss as question of law and fact, see post § 341.
Instructions as to proofs of loss, see post § 348.
Estoppel arising from proof of loss, see post § 239.
Admissibility of evidence as to proof of loss or death, see post § 314.
Sufficiency of evidence of loss, see post § 325.

¶ 945. An objection that a proof of loss does not show the exact place where a fire occurred cannot be sustained where the agents of the insurer knew the location.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

¶ 946. Objections by an insurance company that proofs of loss sent to a defendant and received by it did not have a formal address or state correctly the addresses of other companies are frivolous.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

¶ 947. An objection that proofs of loss fail to show that the plaintiffs were the sole owners of the stock at the time of the fire, because the language was in the present tense, the proofs being dated after the fire occurred, cannot be considered, as the fair inference is that both parties understood the reference.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

¶ 948. A person insured by two companies in a policy issued by "The Cincinnati Underwriters" and which required proofs of loss to be given to the companies sufficiently complies with the requirement if proofs are sent to the secretary of the underwriters, who also is secretary of both companies, and are by him turned over to one who is president of both companies and who also has charge of their loss department.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 949. The failure of an assured to state in his proof of loss the names of all persons with whom he had contracted to sell insured lumber is not sufficient to avoid a policy of insurance, where the proofs were prepared by an adjuster of the defendant in the presence of its local agent, who, at the time the policy was issued, had full knowledge of all such facts.—Fuhrman v. Sun Ins. Office of London, 180 Mich. 439.

Necessity for including names of all persons interested in insured property, see ante ¶ 949.

¶ 950. Proofs of loss are not bad for the omission of the signature and oath of one member of the assured firm if all possible means were taken to obtain such name and oath.—Marthinson v. North British & M. Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 372.

¶ 951. On a policy issued to a foreign corporation proofs of loss made out by its attorney and verified by him are not open to the objection that by terms of the policy they should be sworn to by the insured; the situation presents an exception to the general rule.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 142 Mich. 29.

¶ 952. Where a loss occurs while insured is so ill that he is wholly unable to attend to any business, the proof of loss may be made by his agent, though the policy requires proof of loss to be made and sworn to by the insured.—Burns v. Michigan Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 130 Mich. 561.

¶ 953. Where a fire insurance policy requires proofs of loss to be made out and sworn to by the assured before he can realize upon the policy, such proofs are a condition precedent; and it seems that the assured must make them out himself or show good reason for not doing so and for leaving them to be made out by an agent.—McGraw v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145.

§ 234. ——Effect of false statements or false swearing.

Fraud or false swearing in application or in securing policy, see ante § 144.

¶ 954. False swearing by an insured person on proving loss will not necessarily defeat his right to recover upon his policy if it was not done with fraudulent intent to obtain more pay than he was entitled to.—Tiefenthal v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 306.

¶ 955. The by-laws of a mutual insurance company provided that all claims should be forfeited if there was any fraud in making proofs of loss. Held, that if the person assured, in good faith and with the knowledge of the company's responsible officer, included as her own articles belonging to other members of the family, there was no fraud.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289.

¶ 956. The statement in an affidavit, made by plaintiff after the loss, that he was the sole and unconditional owner, whereas he held only a contract for purchase, will not prevent a recovery, as defendant could not have been prejudiced by it.—Knop v. National Fire Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 359.

¶ 957. Where one with full knowledge has made claim against an insurance company for a loss which has not taken place, as by including in the proofs of loss property which he had shipped away before the fire, and has sworn to and presented the claim for payment, his testimony, if he means to show that this was done without fraudulent intent, must tend to show good faith. If done in bad faith, the advice or connivance of the agent of the company would constitute no excuse whatever.—Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Mannasson, 29 Mich. 316.

¶ 959. An insured is not guilty of false swearing in his proofs of loss in swearing that the cause of the fire which destroyed the insured building was unknown where it appeared that the atmosphere in the room in which the fire started was charged with gasoline fumes, and that an explosion followed the lighting of a match near a gas generator, and that no one in the room claimed to know the origin of the fire.—Marx v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co., 192 Mich. 497.

¶ 960. The avoidance clause based on "fraud or false swearing" contemplates actual fraud and intentional false swearing or intentional swearing to that as true without knowledge that it is true; hence does not apply to the honest error of an attorney for insured in making out proofs of loss and including therein a piece of furniture which was removed from the premises before the fire, or his statement that the insured was the unconditional owner subject only to a conditional sale contract with which was a statement that the insured had taken back a chattel mortgage on the goods.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 142 Mich. 29.

¶ 961. Testimony by insured that the lost property was of a certain value, whereas he knew it was more, cannot be regarded as "false swearing"; since it could have had no tendency to defraud.—Walker v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 142 Mich. 162.

¶ 962. Contradictory or even untrue statements by insured as to the property insured and its value do not sustain a motion to direct a verdict on the ground that false swearing is shown, if it does not appear that they were made in bad faith or with intent to defraud.—Walker Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 142 Mich. 162.

¶ 963. An accident insurance company cannot insist that a claimant shall furnish further proofs of loss without pointing out wherein the proofs already submitted are defective, or what further information is desired.—Gnau v. Masons' Frat. Accident Ass'n, 109 Mich. 527.

¶ 964. Where proof of loss under an insurance policy was made by an agent and the company informed that the serious illness of insured made it impossible for him to make out such proofs, if the company was not satisfied therewith, it ought to so suggest promptly and require additional proof.—Burns v. Michigan Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 130 Mich. 561.

¶ 965. Under the Michigan standard insurance policy, an insurance company has no right to require an adjuster's certificate in case of loss.—Burns v. Michigan Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 130 Mich. 561.

§ 237. ——Necessity and sufficiency of inventory.

Appraisal of loss, see post § 252.

¶ 966. An insurance policy provided that in case of fire the insured should forthwith separate the damaged and undamaged personal property, put it in the best possible order, make a complete inventory of the same, stating the quantity and cost of each article and the amount claimed thereon, and render a sworn statement to the company, containing, among other things, the cash value of each item of property, and the amount of loss thereon. Held, that no inventory was required in case of a total destruction of the property.—Johnston v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 96.

§ 238. ——Waiver of defects.

Waiver of notice or proof of loss, see post §§ 241-244.

¶ 967. A defense of defects in proofs of loss is waived when negotiations for a settlement are renewed, causing the insured to expend time and money to effect the settlement.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

¶ 968. Proof of loss as required by an insurance policy is waived where the local agent introduces to insured as the state agent one who has in his possession the policy which he apparently has received from the company, and who informs insured that the policy has been canceled, and repudiates all liability on the part of the company.—Morgan v. Illinois Ins. Co., 130 Mich. 427.

¶ 969. Where objection is made to the proofs of loss by fire and the insured furnishes further proofs which are not objected to, the company is estopped from claiming upon the trial that the proofs are defective.—Foiles v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 175 Mich. 716.

¶ 970. A letter from an insurer to a claimant, asking that the matter be allowed to rest until the adjuster of the company can see the claimant or his attorney, constitutes a waiver of a provision in the policy limiting the time for furnishing proofs of loss and beginning an action on the policy.—Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co., 112 Mich. 425.

¶ 971. An insurer should manifest, within a reasonable time after proofs of loss have been made, its disagreement with the amount claimed by such proofs to avoid a waiver of its right to object to the proof of loss.—Brock v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 583.

§ 239. Estoppel arising from proof of loss.

¶ 972. An insured person is not estopped by the proofs of loss from recovering a larger amount, if the insurer refused to act upon the proofs and repudiated liability.—Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14.

¶ 973. An insured person is not estopped by his proofs of loss from showing losses not mentioned therein unless the insurer, by relying on the proofs, has been placed in such a position that the admission of the further showing would be equitable.—Schmidt v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co., 55 Mich. 432.

¶ 974. One who furnishes proofs of death is not estopped by a statement therein, made in good faith upon information received from the attending physician of the disease which caused death.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Dick, 117 Mich. 518.

¶ 975. An assured is not bound by a schedule attached to proofs of loss, not signed by him, and of which he denied all knowledge.—Fuhrman v. Sun Ins. Office of London, 180 Mich. 439.

§ 240. Effect of failure to furnish proofs.

¶ 976. Where a policy provides that failure to comply with its conditions shall work forfeiture, a failure to furnish proofs of loss within the time required by the policy bars an action thereon, in the absence of waiver.—Gould v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 302.

¶ 977. Failure to make proofs of loss within thirty days, as provided for in an insurance policy, will only operate to postpone the right of action of the assured until the proofs are supplied, where there is no limitation in the policy as to the time within which suit must be brought, and no provision for forfeiture in case proofs are not made within the thirty days.—Tubbs v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 646.

¶ 978. A fire policy that expressly requires proofs of loss to be made within thirty days, that puts off the claim's becoming due until sixty days after the completion of all its express requirements, and whereby action thereon must be brought within six months after the loss, is to be so construed that failure to make proof of loss within thirty days merely postpones the right of action, and does not forfeit the policy.—Hall v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 403.

¶ 979. If an insurance policy expressly requires the insured to give immediate notice to the company of any loss by fire, and, within sixty days after the fire, unless the company extend in writing that period, to make proof of the loss; and further provides that no suit or action on the policy shall be maintainable "until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements, nor unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire," and contains no provision making failure to furnish such proofs within sixty days a ground of forfeiture, such notice and proof of loss may be given at any time before beginning an action, and action cannot be brought until such notice and proof have been given, nor after twelve months.—Steele v. German Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 81; Rynalski v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co., 96 Mich. 395.

§ 241. Waiver of notice or proof of loss.

Authority of agent to make waiver, see post § 242.
Denial of liability on other grounds as waiver, see post § 243.
Effect of waiver, see post § 244.
Waiver of defects in proof of loss, see ante § 238.
Waiver of right to avoid or cancel for breach of warranty or condition, see ante XII, C.

¶ 980. Furnishing proofs of loss is waived—though the policy forbade any representative of the insurer from waiving any of its conditions—where the insurer's adjuster sent to investigate the loss stated, when an unsworn statement of items of loss were offered to him, that he did not care for them and that they were not necessary.—Young v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 68.

¶ 981. An insurer's neglect to object within a reasonable time to proofs of loss, where the defects in them could be remedied if intelligibly pointed out, amounts to a waiver; the question whether he has acted in good faith and seasonably is for the jury.—Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Holthaus, 43 Mich. 423.

¶ 982. It is proper to instruct the jury that if an insurance adjuster's co-operation with an agent of the assured—as in making a list of the property destroyed, in employing a builder to estimate the value of buildings, and in referring the value of a building to arbitration—would and did induce an honest belief on the assured's part that the necessary proofs were making, then a finding that formal proofs were waived would be warranted.—Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 161; adhered to on rehearing 87 Mich. 428.

¶ 983. The formal proofs of loss required by an insurance policy may be waived when the insured acts according to the instructions of an agent who has assumed to make investigations; he cannot be required to do more.—Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467.

¶ 984. Where before the acts claimed as a waiver of proofs of loss under an accident policy within seven months the policy had become forfeited because of delay in giving notice of the injury, and an agent of the insurer, in his conferences with plaintiff's attorney, stated that the defense was that the notice of injury was given too late and that the trouble from which plaintiff suffered did not proceed from the injury, and that the company reserved what rights it had, and, in later sending a blank for furnishing proofs of loss to plaintiff, stated that there had been considerable delay in reporting the accident but he was furnishing the blank without prejudice to the rights of the company, and the policy stated that no agent had power to waive any condition of the policy, there was no waiver of the time limit for filing the proofs of loss.—Sweeney v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 199 Mich. 584.

¶ 985. A mutual fire insurance company waives any fraud by the insured in overestimating the value and quantity of the property destroyed in the first list prepared by him and sent to the insurer where the latter at a meeting of the board of directors permits, as shown by its records, the insured to furnish a new list and the minutes of such record at a subsequent meeting are read by the secretary and approved by the directors.—Veenstra v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Ottawa and Allegan Counties, 195 Mich. 55.

¶ 986. A condition of an accident insurance policy, that notice of injury shall be given the insurer as soon as possible after its occurrence, may be waived by its conduct.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 987. Where it appears from all the testimony that the failure of an assured to give an earlier notice of injury has not prejudiced an insurer, the court may instruct in an action on a policy of accident insurance, that the waiver by the latter of earlier notice is established.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 988. Failure of the insured to give notice of an injury within the time required by an accident policy is waived by the insurance company's asking for further information after receiving notice, without suggesting that the notice came too late.—Hohn v. Inter-State Casualty Co., 115 Mich. 79.

¶ 989. Shortly after a loss under a fire insurance policy, an adjuster of the company told the insured that everything was satisfactory as to the household furniture covered thereby, a list of which he had made at her dictation, but that he wanted her to obtain the bills of her store goods, after which, upon notification, he would meet her and make a settlement. The policy provided that the company should not be held to have waived any provision thereof by any requirement or proceeding on its part relating to any examination therein provided for. Held, that there was no waiver of the formal proofs of loss required by the terms of the policy; that, at most, any waiver was conditioned upon the procuring of the bills, which the insured failed to do; and that, it further appearing that the insured was advised, several months before the expiration of the time within which proofs of loss might be furnished, that the company was insisting upon the stipulated proofs, and that no prejudice had resulted to her in the meantime, an estoppel could not be predicated upon the conduct of the adjuster, even though the insured could be said to have been misled thereby.—Allen v. Milwaukee Mech. Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 204.

§ 242. ——Authority of agent to make waiver.

See also ante ¶ 831.

Effect in general of provision in policy prohibiting waiver by agent, see ante § 197.

Authority of agents in general, see ante III.

¶ 990. Where a policy provides that no agent shall have power to waive any of its conditions except by writing, indorsed upon or attached to it, an oral waiver by an agent of proofs of loss is not binding on the company.—Gould v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 302.

§ 243. ——Denial of liability on other grounds as waiver.

Denial of liability on specific grounds as waiver of other grounds, see ante § 185.

¶ 991. The denial by an insurance adjuster of liability on part of the company constitutes a waiver of the filing of proofs of loss.—Fisk v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 270.

¶ 992. An insurer who has absolutely denied liability for a loss is estopped from objecting to the want or sufficiency of the preliminary proof thereof; and a court will not presume reasons to support his refusal to receive such proof if seasonably offered.—O'Brien v. Ohio Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 131.

¶ 993. An insurance company can waive strict compliance with the terms of its policies as to furnishing proofs of loss; and where it does waive such proofs, either expressly or by a course of conduct calculated to throw the insured off his guard, as by a distinct refusal to pay the loss, based upon some other defense, so that proofs are not furnished within the time fixed in the policy, it cannot afterwards take advantage of the delay and set it up as a defense to an action upon the policy.—Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 289.

¶ 994. An insured person who is notified by an agent of the insurance company that the company absolutely refuses to pay a loss is excused from furnishing proof of the loss or demanding payment before bringing suit on the policy; especially if an agent of the company has made investigation.—O'Brien v. Ohio Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 131.

¶ 995. Where the proofs of loss did not comply with the requirements of the policy, the insurer, by denying all liability, and by claiming that the policy had been canceled and that no valid insurance existed upon the property, was estopped from objecting to the sufficiency of such proofs.—Lum v. United States Fire Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 397.

¶ 996. An insurer's refusal, within the time limited for furnishing proofs of loss, to pay the loss, relieves the assured from the necessity of furnishing such proofs.—Young v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 68.

¶ 997. An insured person is excused from making proofs of loss by notice from the insurer that it does not propose to pay or adjust his loss because it believes he set fire to the insured premises.—Coryeon v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 187.

¶ 998. No proof of loss was necessary to be made, where after being notified of a loss, the fire insurance company immediately answered that it had canceled the policy on the ground of the violation of a condition contained therein.—Improved Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. F. Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 256.

¶ 999. The rejection of a claim by a sick benefit association on the ground that the member has a disease not covered by the policy and that he is not entirely confined to the house waives the right to have a final proof of the disability filed within the time prescribed by the contract.—Hoffman v. Michigan Home & Hospital Ass'n, 128 Mich. 323.

¶ 1000. Where an insurance company is notified of a loss under a fire policy issued by it and it sends an adjusting agent to inquire into the loss, and such agent, while engaged in, or at the conclusion of, such business, refuses payment, and denies all liability of the company under the policy, such action by the adjuster constitutes a waiver of proof of loss by the company.—Popa v. Northern Ins. Co. of New York, 192 Mich. 237.

§ 244. ——Effect of waiver.

¶ 1001. Where defects in the proofs of loss of insured property are found to have been waived, any objection to the certificate attached to the proofs is disposed of by the verdict, and presents no legal question.—Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Holthaus, 43 Mich. 423.

XVI. ADJUSTMENT OF LOSS OR BENEFITS PAYABLE.

Offer of compromise, settlement or arbitration as ground for estoppel against forfeiture or avoidance, see ante § 183.

What consequential losses are covered in property insurance, see ante § 97.

Reasonableness and validity of provision for arbitration, see post ¶ 1062.

General law of arbitration, see Arbitration.

¶ 1002. A number of fire insurance companies may join in an arbitration to determine the value of a loss without mixing separate controversies, where the policies are all alike, except in the names of the companies and are those prescribed by the laws of the state.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

§ 246. ——Notice, time, demand, or request for arbitration.

¶ 1103. A demand for an arbitration by a fire insurance company, after knowledge of the amount claimed by plaintiff, together with the fact that both parties entered into the arbitration, was proof of the existence of such a disagreement as justified the arbitration, under a provision of the policy providing for an arbitration in case of disagreement as to the amount of the loss.—Kersey v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 135 Mich. 10.

¶ 1004. Where the assignees of fire insurance policies, acting under the erroneous impression that an action could be brought in the state of Michigan, without requiring an appraisal such as was required as a condition precedent to the bringing of an action in the foreign state, and, on examining the plea filed, find that an appraisal is a condition precedent to the bringing of a suit in the foreign state and therefore controlling in an action in the courts of Michigan, demand an appraisal, which is refused, such demand is not too late.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 195 Mich. 18.

¶ 1005. An insurance policy provided that, in case of disagreement as to the amount of a loss thereunder, it should be ascertained by the appraisers, and that the amount of the loss should be payable sixty days after due notice, ascertainment, estimate and satisfactory proof of the loss were received by the company. Fifty-seven days after proofs of loss were received, to which no objection had been made, and when it was too late to select arbitrators and secure an appraisal until after the period fixed for the payment of the loss, dating from the furnishing of proofs of loss, had expired, the company served on the insured a demand for an appraisal, but naming no appraiser. Held too late to suspend the right of action of the insured on the policy.—Zimeriski v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 600.

§ 247. ——Waiver or loss of right to arbitrate.

¶ 1006. An arbitration clause in an insurance contract is waived where auditors authorized to fix the amount of the loss reject the claim entirely and the insured is so notified.—Denton v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 690.

¶ 1007. A mutual fire insurance company may not set up as a defense to an action on a policy a by-law providing that in case of disagreement with the owner of property insured as to the loss incurred or damages payable, such difference shall be determined by arbitration; that in case of such disagreement the secretary shall notify the insured and give him opportunity to appear before the arbitration committee and present his claim and that the decision of such committee shall be final, and that no suit in law or in equity shall be commenced by the insured to determine such matter, where, after a fire, the officers of the company are notified and make an investigation and notify the insured that they deny all liability and refuse to pay the loss and give no notice of arbitration proceedings.—Blake v. Farmers' Mut. Lightning Protected Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, 194 Mich. 589.

§ 248. ——Matters which may be submitted.

¶ 1008. An agreement to submit to arbitration all matters in controversy between the parties is void.—Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116.

¶ 1009. Where a submission to an award provides that a fire insurance company and the insured have agreed to submit to a final settlement all things arising out of the policy of the insurance and the subsequent destruction by fire of part of the property insured, and the policy provides for settlement of all disputes by award and the charter provides that in case of loss, arbitration shall determine the amount of the loss and the liability of the company, and a by-law provides that all questions or disputes be settled in accordance with the charter and the state statutes, the question of the validity of the policy or its revocation for fraud is not properly before the arbitrators where not raised previous to submission.—Kearney v. Washtenaw Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 246.

¶ 1010. A provision in a fire insurance policy giving the company's arbitration committee jurisdiction in case of "disagreement as to the amount of valuation, in whole or in part" was not applicable to a controversy in which the disagreement related to the validity of the claim.—Hogadone v. Grange Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 133 Mich. 339.

¶ 1011. A submission of "matters and things arising from and growing out of and based upon" the policy, is construed as referring to the policy and limited to matters and things in dispute and the policy cannot be declared void for fraud.—Kearney v. Washtenaw Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 246.

¶ 1012. Under a charter of a mutual fire insurance company providing that in case of loss auditors living in the county should meet and investigate the cause of the loss and, if found not due to carelessness or to violation of the rules of the company, ascertain the amount of loss, their determination to be final unless arbitration was asked for, the auditors have no authority to pass upon a claim that the insured intentionally set fire to his building, the power conferred being limited to fixing the amount of the loss.—Denton v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 690.

§ 249. Arbitrators or appraisers.

Appraisal of loss, see post § 252.
Selection of arbitrators, see also post ¶ 1016.
Adjusting board or tribunal set up by mutual associations, see post § 251.

¶ 1013. A policy provided that the insurer and insured should each select an appraiser to fix the loss, and the two appraisers should choose an umpire. An umpire was agreed upon by the appraisers, but he remained undecided for a time about serving. The insured's appraiser then chose an umpire, appraised the loss, and plaintiff started suit. Held, plaintiff could not recover, as it was his duty to continue the effort to secure an umpire as provided by the policy.—Baumgarth v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mich. 479.

§ 250. Defects, fraud or misconduct in arbitration.

¶ 1014. The insurance company selected as its appraiser an insurance adjuster who resided in a city 135 miles distant from the city where the fire occurred, and where the appraiser selected by the insured resided. The two appraisers disagreed as to the selection of the third appraiser. The company's appraiser suggested the names of three persons, residing at a distance from the place where the fire occurred, and the appraiser for the insured offered the names of twelve residents of the locality from which the jury, in case of a suit, would be drawn. The appraiser for the company assigned no valid reason for a refusal to accept one of the twelve, the only reason given being that he did not care to take the chances of getting an appraiser that would be partial. Held, that as the conduct of the company's appraiser in refusing to agree on a third was inexcusable, and virtually amounted to a refusal to proceed with the appraisement, the fact that the appraisement was not concluded before suit did not bar an action on the policy.—Brock v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 583.

¶ 1015. The conduct of a fire insurance company's arbitrator in failing to agree to the selection of a third arbitrator was not under the circumstances, such conduct as warranted an inference of bad faith and the abandonment of the arbitration by the insured, in the absence of evidence that the men proposed by the company's arbitrator were not fair and competent, and that there was not a valid objection to those proposed by the insured's arbitrator.—Kersey v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 135 Mich. 10.

¶ 1016. The selection by a fire insurance company of one as an arbitrator, who had sustained a loss by the fire in question, was not such evidence of bad faith as to defeat the real object of the arbitration, and absolve plaintiff from compliance with a provision in the policy requiring that in the event of disagreement as to the amount of the loss, such amount should be submitted to arbitration before the commencement of suit.—Kersey v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 135 Mich. 10.

§ 251. Adjusting board of tribunal set up by mutual association.

¶ 1017. Members of a voluntary society may set up a tribunal to adjust the differences that arise between the association and its members, and make its decision final in the absence of bad faith or a refusal to act or to pay after an adjudication has taken place.—Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, Ltd. v. Attorney General, 166 Mich. 438.

§ 252. Appraisal of loss.

Necessity and sufficiency of inventory in proof of loss, see ante § 237.

Appointment and selection of appraisers, see ante § 249.

Appraisal of loss as condition precedent to action on policy, see post ¶¶ 1058, 1060, 1064.

¶ 1018. A policyholder made his proofs of loss, and, without waiting for any action by the company, asked for the appointment of appraisers, and they were appointed. Held, that the insurer cannot be heard to say that, inasmuch as no effort had been made by the parties looking to an adjustment, the appointment of appraisers was premature, and that an appraisal must be regarded as having been required within the language of the policy.—Brock v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 583.

§ 253. Validity and conclusiveness of settlement or adjustment.

Return of payment made by way of adjustment of claim as condition precedent to bringing suit on policy, see post ¶ 1054.

¶ 1019. Under an agreement of submission between the insurer and insured by which the appraisers are to estimate the actual cash cost of replacing the property and in case of depression from use, age, etc., a proper deduction to be made, the fact that the appraisers allowed nothing for foundry patterns out of date or "dead" and a small amount for those which might possibly be used, will not render the award void.—Michels v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

¶ 1020. An agreement between the adjuster and the insured as to the quantity and value of the property destroyed by a fire, evidenced by a schedule of loss signed by the adjuster, is conclusive on both the insurer and the insured, where it was adopted by the insured in presenting his proof of loss.—Wilms v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 194 Mich. 656.

¶ 1021. An appraisal of loss as a result of arbitration under an insurance policy is only prima facie correct and a party attacking it assumes the onus probandi.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

¶ 1022. Where the holder of an insurance policy, after revoking an agreement for arbitration, submits proofs of loss, in which he adopts, item by item, the appraisal made by the arbitrators before such revocation, and which contains every article of goods, and the amount of the damage thereto, such appraisal is binding upon him in a suit upon the policy.—Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

¶ 1023. Where a policy insuring lumber contained an agreement for arbitration as to the amount of loss, which the policy limited to the actual cost of producing the lumber destroyed, and on receiving proofs of loss the insurer wrote that it disputed the amount of loss claimed, and insisted that it be estimated under the contract, such a letter was not a waiver of arbitration.—Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116.

¶ 1024. By-laws of a mutual benefit association providing that "In case any question shall arise as to the validity of any claim * * * the same shall be arbitrated by a board of three registered physicians in good standing" that "all awards * * * must be signed by all the arbitrators, and if not so signed there is no legal award," and that "no suit in law or equity shall be commenced or maintained," are reasonable and valid, and an action cannot be maintained upon an award signed by two only of three arbitrators.—Russell v. North American Ben. Ass'n, 116 Mich. 699.

§ 254. Effect of arbitration on other rights.

¶ 1025. A submission to arbitration does not constitute a waiver of other provisions in a fire insurance policy, such as a provision for proof of loss, where the policy expressly stipulates to the contrary.—Wicking v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 118 Mich. 640.

§ 255. Examination of insured under oath.

Examination of insured under oath as condition precedent to bringing action on policy, see post § 269.

¶ 1026. Where a fire insurance policy provides that the insured, as often as required, shall submit to examinations under oath by any person named by the company, the insured is entitled to the presence of her attorney.—Gordon v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 197 Mich. 226.

¶ 1027. An insured does not refuse to submit to an examination under a fire insurance policy after the loss where she simply declines to submit to an examination in the absence of her attorney, and the attorney, upon his return, and after commencement of an action, expresses a willingness to arrange for an examination.—Gordon v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 197 Mich. 226.

¶ 1028. A stipulation in a fire insurance policy that the assured, in case of loss, shall, if required, submit to a private examination, is, if valid at all, so clearly opposed to the general policy of the law that no intendments will be made in pursuance of it; and where the assured person or his agent was notified that the company desired such an examination, the letter containing such notification was properly excluded from evidence, as it was not in strict accordance with the stipulation.—McGraw v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145.

§ 256. Action to set aside settlement of loss.

Actions on policy or under it in general, see post XX.

¶ 1029. In a suit to set aside an award of fire insurance all insurance companies who participated in the award are necessary parties.—Michels v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

¶ 1030. Delay of nearly three years in instituting a suit to set aside a compromise of a marine insurance loss on the ground of fraud in concealing salvage claims and to reinstate the written abandonment of the steamer to the underwriters as a constructive total loss held to constitute laches.—Loud v. Federal Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 60.

¶ 1031. By falsely representing to a son that insurance obtained upon his mother's life, payable to the son if he survived her and if not, to her estate, and for which he had paid the premiums in her behalf, was void as a wager contract, the insurance company's officers obtained a surrender of the policy on return of the premiums. Held, that a bill would lie in the son's behalf to revive the policy.—Heinlein v. Imperial Life Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 250.

¶ 1032. In a suit to set aside an award between an insurer and insured on the ground that the appraisers refused to give the parties a proper hearing, testimony that the appraisers promised to come to the factory on a certain day to allow the complainant to convince them that certain patterns were partially destroyed will not prevail in the absence of any evidence to show that the insurer interfered in any way with the taking of testimony and evidence and upon a showing that the appraisers had examined the property several times and no demand was made for an open hearing or sworn testimony.—Michels v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

¶ 1033. On suit to set aside an award between insurer and insured on the ground of gross inadequacy, testimony of a much higher value being set on the goods destroyed by the insured and his witnesses will not justify setting aside the award where the property consists largely of foundry patterns of varied age and usefulness and machinery, as these are of a nature to admit of a wide difference of opinion as to the actual value.—Michels v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

XVII. PAYMENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF MONEY AMONG CLAIMANTS.

Payment to mortgagees, pledgees, reversioners or persons in secondary interest, see post § 258.

Settlement with only one of parties interested, see post § 259.

Suits and proceedings to determine rights in insurance money, see post § 260.

Return of payment made by way of settlement or adjustment as condition precedent to suit on policy, see post ¶ 1054.

Satisfaction of insurance obligation and discharge by restoration or otherwise than in money, see post XVIII.

Mode, medium and sufficiency of payment in general, see Payment, I.

Exemption of insurance benefit, see Exemptions § 25.

Rescission of compromise settlement made through fraud and collusion between insurer and guardian of beneficiary, see Rescission.

Nature of fund resulting to county from insurance on county buildings, how applied, see Counties § 37.

Rights under will in avails of policy payable to persons appointable by insured, see Wills, VI.
Insurance on decedent's life as asset of his estate, see Estates of Decedents § 74.
Exemption of insurance from bankruptcy by agreement with trustee, see Bankruptcy § 4, ¶ 15.
Loss payable as fund or debt subject to garnishment, see Garnishment § 35.
Provision as to time within which loss payable in standard form of fire insurance policy, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 1034. The accidental destruction by fire of goods in a trespasser's hands does not entitle him to an assignment of the owner's policies of insurance, and he cannot claim the benefit, by way of reducing damages, of the insurance money paid such owner.—Perrott v. Shearer, 17 Mich. 48.

¶ 1035. In a case of accident insurance where there is nothing in the certificate to show to whom specifically payment is to be made, it is proper to treat the contract as one shown to have been made between the insurer and decedent, and as providing that in case of death the loss should be payable to the wife of the assured.—Enright v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 238.

¶ 1036. Where a married woman, the owner of an equitable interest in a house and lot, obtained a policy of insurance thereon in favor of the owner of the legal title, the loss must be paid upon destruction of said premises, to such legal owner, and the fact that there is a dispute as to whether the policy was intended to be made in the name of the woman or her husband, is not a good defense to a suit on the policy, by the woman.—Quackenbush v. Citizens' Ins. Co. of Missouri, 150 Mich. 555.

§ 258. Payment to mortgagees, pledgees, reversioners, or persons in secondary interest.

¶ 1037. Where one mortgages a house and makes the insurance policy thereon payable to another, to secure the latter for acting as his surety on a note, the mortgagor has no equitable right, in afterward selling the house, to surrender the policy; and if the purchaser knows the facts and takes out a new policy, the mortgagee still has an equitable interest in it to the amount of the obligation of suretyship, and can enforce his demand in a suit in equity against the purchaser and the insurance company. The mortgagor would not be a necessary party; the purchaser would have no relief against him. But a decree compelling the application of the insurance money to the payment of the mortgage should be conditional on the surrender or satisfaction of the note as well as the release of the mortgage.—Miller v. Aldrich, 31 Mich. 408.

¶ 1038. If a mortgagee obtains insurance on his own account, and the premium is not paid by or charged to the mortgagor, the latter cannot claim the benefit of a payment of the insurance.—Pendleton v. Elliott, 67 Mich. 496.

¶ 1039. If a policy insuring mortgaged property contains no stipulation for subrogation in case of payment to the mortgagee, and there is any arrangement between the mortgagor and mortgagee by which the mortgagor becomes liable to pay for the insurance, the latter is entitled to the benefit thereof and to have it applied pro tanto in reduction of the mortgage debt.—Pendleton v. Elliott, 67 Mich. 496.

¶ 1040. Where in pursuance of an agreement with the reversioners, a life tenant insures a house for the full value, the insurance fund must be used in rebuilding or invested so that the income and the principal shall go to the respective parties and a decree, that the insurance company pay the money into court to be retained until further order, and income to be paid to the life tenant, will be sustained.—Convis v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Calhoun County, 127 Mich. 616.

¶ 1041. An insurance policy was payable to the wife of insured and in case of her death to her children. She died and upon the death of insured, the company in good faith paid the whole amount to a son of the wife who had the policy in his possession and who stated that he was her only child and heir, and who was adjudged by the orphan's court to be entitled to the fund. Action was brought by the children of a stepson of the wife under the claim that insured intended that the stepson should share in the proceeds. Held that verdict should have been directed in favor of defendant.—Voss v. Connecticut Mut. Life-Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 597.

§ 260. Suits and proceedings to determine rights in insurance money.

Action on policy in general, see post XX.

¶ 1042. Equity has jurisdiction of a suit by reversioners against a fire insurance company and the life tenant to determine the rights to the insurance fund on a house insured by the life tenant by agreement with the reversioners.—Convis v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Calhoun County, 127 Mich. 616.

XVIII. DISCHARGE BY RESTORATION OR OTHERWISE THAN IN MONEY.

§ 261. In general.

Discharge in money and payment and distribution thereof among claimants, see ante XVII.

Opportunity to elect to restore or pay loss as condition precedent to bringing action on policy, see post § 270.
Prohibition of municipal regulation against repair of building partially destroyed by fire as a "taking," see Eminent Domain ¶ 82.

¶ 1043. A wooden building situated within the fire limits of Detroit was injured by fire, and, by the ordinances of that city, could not be repaired without the consent of the common council. This consent was refused. The building was insured for $2,000, and the policy contained a clause that, in case of loss or damage to the property, it should be optional with the company to rebuild or repair the building within a reasonable time. The cost of repairing the building would be much less than the amount of the insurance, but without leave to repair, the building, which before the fire was worth $4,000, would now be worth less than $100. It was held that the insured was entitled to recover the whole insurance, and the insurers could not discharge their obligation by tendering the cost of repair.—Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 425.

XIX. SUBROGATION AND OTHER RIGHTS OF INSURER.

Subrogation rights in general, see Subrogation.
Provision for subrogation in standard form of fire insurance policy, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part IV, chap. II, § 6.

¶ 1044. An insurance company subrogated on settling a loss to a part of the claim of the insured against one whose negligence caused the loss cannot sue to recover such part only of the claim.—Continental Ins. Co. v. H. M. Loud & Sons Lumber Co., 93 Mich. 139.

§ 263. Actions to enforce right.

Enforcement or protection of right of subrogation in general, see Subrogation, II.

¶ 1045. In an action by an insurance company to recover against an automatic sprinkler company for damages to an insured stock of goods on account of the negligent installation of a sprinkler system, under its right of subrogation and an assignment from the owner of the goods, the question of negligence of the insurance company in its inspection of the sprinkler system is not in issue as the insurer owed no such duty to the automatic sprinkler company.—United States Casualty Co. v. Bagley, 129 Mich. 70.

¶ 1046. Where insurance companies are subrogated to the rights of the owner of an ice house destroyed by fire set by defendant's locomotive, such subrogation agreements and a contract under which the owner of the building was to bring suit in behalf of himself and of the insurance companies were properly excluded.—Union Ice Co. v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 178 Mich. 346.

XX. ACTIONS ON POLICY OR UNDER IT.

A. RIGHT OR CAUSE OF ACTION, AND TIME TO SUE.

§ 264. In general.

Parties and interpleader, see post XX, B.
Pleading and evidence, see post XX, C.
Trial practice, instructions and judgment, see post XX, D.
Actions by and against agents, see ante §§ 33, 34.
Actions for reinstatement, see ante § 210.
Action to set aside settlement of loss by arbitration, see ante § 256.
Suits and proceedings to determine rights in insurance money, see ante § 260.
Actions to enforce insurer's right of subrogation, see ante § 263.
Splitting cause of action by permitting one set of beneficiaries to sue alone on policy, see also post ¶ 1104.
General law of actions, see Actions.
Actions on certificate or contract of benefit insurance, see Fraternal Associations § 69.
Actions and proceedings for benefits in fraternal association, see Fraternal Associations, VIII.
Recovery of balance after attempted but abortive compromise for less sum, see also Accord and Satisfaction, § 8.
Jurisdiction of state courts in general average cases and marine insurance, see Courts § 96.
Rescission and cancellation suits, see Rescission.
Enjoining action on insurance policy obtained by fraud, see Injunctions § 34.
Invalidity of any article, by-law, resolution or policy provision of life or casualty insurance company prohibiting member or beneficiary from bringing suit, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. I, § 8.

¶ 1047. An action on a life insurance policy is a single cause of action and cannot be split by permitting one set of beneficiaries to sue alone on the policy.—Voss v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 161.

¶ 1048. There can be no splitting of causes of action on a single insurance policy.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

¶ 1049. An insurance policy effected in another state on property in Michigan may be sued upon here; the right of action is transitory.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 1050. In an action on a fire insurance policy by a mortgagee, where after being notified of the loss, the company sent an adjuster will full authority to adjust losses and make settlements, and the adjuster fixed plaintiff's proportion of the loss and promised that payment would be made to him within 60 days, and where defendant claimed that there could be no splitting up of causes of action, plaintiff was entitled to recover under the common counts even though he could not recover upon the policy itself.—Granger v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 177.

§ 265. Accrual or maturity of right.

Bar of action by default or delinquency, see post § 266.

Right to equitable relief where written contract does not accord with oral understanding of parties, see also ante ¶ 206.

¶ 1051. Where a mutual benefit association disclaims all liability upon a membership contract which provides for the payment of the proceeds of a single assessment upon its members, suit is properly instituted to determine whether a fireman retired because of injury in course of duty before twenty-five years' service is entitled to benefit of membership.—Neville v. Detroit Firemen's Fund Ass'n, 104 Mich. 149.

§ 266. Bar of action by default or delinquency.

Loss of right by delay or laches, see post § 271.

¶ 1052. The fact that an insurance company has expressly reserved the right to sue for past due assessments will not enable the insured to recover for losses sustained while in default where the by-laws provide that the insured shall have no claim for losses while in default.—Hill v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Manistee, Benzie & Mason Counties, 129 Mich. 141.

§ 267. Conditions precedent to action.

Submission to arbitration or award or appraisal by arbitrators, see post § 268.

Examination of insured under oath, see post § 269.

Opportunity to elect to restore or pay loss, see post § 270.

Necessity for pleading compliance with conditions precedent in declaration on policy, see post ¶ 1127.

¶ 1053. A life insurance policy was made payable to the insured at the expiration of twenty years from its date, in case he should then be living. If he should die in the meantime, it was payable to his mother, if living, otherwise to his brothers and sisters. It was further provided that upon the surrender of the policy, duly receipted by the insured and the beneficiaries, within three months after the expiration of the third or any subsequent year for which premium had been paid, the company would pay a specified cash value. Held, that the insured could not maintain an action to recover such cash value without first obtaining receipts from all of the beneficiaries.—Lockwood v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 334.

¶ 1054. The return or tender of the amount paid to an insured in adjustment of his claim for sick benefit, prior to beginning suit on the policy, in which he claimed that the adjustment was the result of misrepresentation, was not waived by the statement in a letter to the insured's attorney stating that its adjuster was in error in telling the insured that his policy could be canceled, but that the company had paid enough anyway, and by the subsequent reinstatement of the insured.—Slater v. United States Health & Acc. Ins. Co., 133 Mich. 347.

§ 268. ——Submission to arbitration or award or appraisal by arbitrators.

Waiver of submission, see ante ¶ 781.

Arbitration and adjustment of insurance in general, see ante XVI.

¶ 1055. Where a policy of insurance in a benefit order makes the by-laws a part of the insurance contract, and such by-laws provide that the plaintiff before suing on the policy must submit his claim to the board of arbitration, such submission is a condition precedent to his right to recover.—Allen v. Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, Ltd., 165 Mich. 18.

¶ 1056. The fact that an insurance policy contains a provision that any claim thereunder shall be submitted to arbitration does not prevent a suit for recovery thereon, where it is also provided in the policy that no suit shall be brought thereon within 90 days and no recovery shall be had unless the suit was commenced within six months after assured's death.—Chadwick v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Benefit Ass'n.—143 Mich. 481.

¶ 1057. Notwithstanding a provision in a fire insurance policy requiring the submission to arbitration in case of disagreement, before commencement of suit, that the award shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of the loss, the submission to arbitration was a condition precedent to the commencement of suit.—Kersey v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 135 Mich. 10.

¶ 1058. Where the insurance policy calls for an appraisal, the insured has no right of action until such appraisal is made.—Baumgarth v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mich. 479.

¶ 1059. An agreement in a policy of insurance to submit all questions of loss to arbitration, on the written request of either party, will not bar an action on the policy, the agreement being a revocable one, and there being no provision for forfeiture in the event of noncompliance with it; especially where no such request for arbitration has been made. Nurney v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 63 Mich. 633.

¶ 1060. A condition in a fire insurance policy that a loss thereunder shall not become payable until sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss required in the policy have been received by the company, including an award by appraisers when appraisal has been required, makes such an appraisal when required, a condition precedent to the right to sue; and the company has a reasonable time within the sixty days after proofs of loss have been furnished in which to move with respect to the ascertainment or estimate of the loss.—Brock v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 583.

¶ 1061. The articles of a fire insurance company provided that no suit at law or in equity should be commenced or maintained by any loser to determine the justice of his claim, the validity of the policy, and the liability of the company, but that the board of arbitration of said company should have exclusive jurisdiction to determine all controversy between the loser and the company, and such determination should be binding and conclusive upon any such loser and the company. Section 10 of Act No. 262 of the Laws of 1895, provides that suit at law may be prosecuted by any member for claims which may have accrued if payments are withheld more than sixty days after such claims shall become due. Held, the articles were not in violation of such statute, since the statute gives the right of suit only for accrued claims, and the articles provide that no claim shall accrue until admitted by the board of arbitration.—Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, Ltd. v. Attorney General, 166 Mich. 438.

¶ 1063. An insurance policy provided for arbitration as to the amount of loss, giving the insurer the right to take the property at the value fixed by the arbitrators, and prohibiting action on the policy until award made. After fire and partial destruction, an arbitration agreement was made which confined the appraisers to the question of damage to the goods not wholly destroyed, but this was subsequently revoked by the assured, who then had the goods appraised and sold. Held, that by the agreement to arbitrate only the damage to goods injured, any other arbitration provided for by the policy was waived; that by the revocation the assured lost his right to sue on the policy, which right could only be regained by a reasonable offer to submit the amount of damages to arbitration; and that after the goods had been disposed of, an offer to submit to such arbitration came too late.—Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

¶ 1064. Under a Michigan standard fire insurance policy providing that, in case of "disagreement as to the amount of loss, the same shall be ascertained by" appraisers, whose award "shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of such loss"; that the loss shall not become payable until sixty days after notice and proofs of loss have been received, "including an award by appraisers when appraisal has been required"; and that no suit on the policy shall be sustainable until after full compliance by the insured with all the requirements of the policy—an appraisal is a condition precedent to suit only when one "has been required" by a demand; and where proofs of loss have been seasonably furnished, and no appraisal has been demanded for eight months after the fire, suit is properly brought.—National Home Building & Loan Ass'n v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 236.

§ 269. ——Examination of insured under oath.

Examination of insured under oath in general, see ante § 255.

¶ 1065. The provision of a fire insurance policy relating to the examination of the insured under oath by the company and stating that no action on the policy may be maintained until such requirement has been complied with, is a reasonable and valid one, and one who without cause refuses to submit to an examination is precluded from recovering on the policy.—Gordon v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 197 Mich. 226.

§ 270. ——Opportunity to elect to restore or pay loss.

Discharge by restoration in general, see ante XVIII.

¶ 1066. A claim under a fire insurance policy does not mature until the company has decided whether it will exercise the right to rebuild, if such a right is reserved.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 Mich. 420.

§ 271. Time to sue and loss of right by delay.

Provisions in policy requiring action within specified time, see post § 272.

Provisions forbidding action until certain time, see post § 273.

Provisions in conflict with statutes, see post § 274.

Pendency of other actions or proceedings, see post § 275.

Waiver of time limitation or estoppel to assert, see post § 276.

Extension of time, see post § 277.
Loss of right to sue to set aside arbitration by laches, see ante ¶ 1030.

¶ 1067. Under Act 277, P. A. 1905, How. 2nd Ed. § 8328, an action on Michigan standard fire insurance policy must be commenced within twelve months from the date of the fire.—Dahrooge v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 177 Mich. 442.

¶ 1068. Under a provision in an insurance policy that the amount thereof should not be "payable" until the expiration of 60 days after notice, and a statute which provides that action shall not be brought until 60 days after the claim shall have become due, the suit may be brought 60 days after notice since the word "due" in the statute does not mean the same as "payable," and the time does not run from the time that the amount is "payable" under the policy.—Putze v. Saginaw Valley Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 670.

¶ 1069. Comp. Laws 1897, § 9758, How. 2nd Ed., § 13571, providing that in cases where action has been commenced within the time limited, and has failed for specified reasons, the time for commencing action is extended, has no application to an action on a Michigan standard fire insurance policy. Dahrooge v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 177 Mich. 442.

¶ 1070. In determining whether an action on an insurance policy was brought within the time permitted, the summons must be sued out and delivered or transmitted to an officer of the proper county, with the bona fide intention of having it served.—Peck v. German F. Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 52.

§ 272. ——Provisions in policy requiring action within specified time.

Validity of condition requiring action within specified time, see ante ¶ 445.
Invalidity of provision in life insurance policy limiting time within which to bring suit thereon, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part III, chap. II, § 4.

¶ 1071. Recovery under a Michigan standard form insurance policy was barred by the insured's failure to begin his action within 12 months of the happening of the loss.—Barry & Finan Lumber Co. v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 42.

¶ 1072. Where a fire insurance policy provides that no suit or action thereon for the recovery of any claim shall be sustainable unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire, a suit cannot be maintained unless it is in fact commenced within the year specified in the policy.—Peck v. German Fire Ins. Co., 102 Mich. 52.

¶ 1073. A provision in a benefit certificate, requiring suit to be brought within nine months after the death of the member, is operative, where all negotiations relating to a settlement were terminated by a denial of liability on the part of the company within forty-five days after the death of the insured. —Shackett v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc., 107 Mich. 65.

¶ 1074. Where an accident policy provides that suit thereon must be brought within one year from the time of the accident, there can be no recovery in an action brought after the expiration of the year by a holder who was notified seven months after the accident that the insurer declined to pay his claim and that "it would be better to let the courts decide this matter."—Law v. New England Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 94 Mich. 266.

¶ 1075. Where a policy provides that the insurer shall have sixty days to make payment, and that no action shall be maintained thereon unless commenced within six months after the loss, an action is barred after six months beyond time of fire where the insurer, on the sixtieth day after the loss, repudiated liability, thus excusing proofs of loss, though there had been negotiations before that.—Lentz v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co., 96 Mich. 445.

¶ 1076. By one of the conditions attached to a fire policy it was provided that no suit should be brought upon it unless within twelve months next after the loss; and in case any suit should be commenced after the expiration of twelve months, the lapse of time should be deemed and taken as conclusive evidence against the validity of the claim. It was held that if such a condition was valid at all it was valid as a contract only; and that the limitation fixed by it must, upon the principle governing contracts, be more flexible in its nature than one fixed by statute, and liable to be defeated or extended by any act of the insurer which prevents actin being brought within the prescribed period.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 1077. Under a marine insurance policy requiring prosecution of a claim within one year of date of loss, where summons was issued within a year from the time the vessel was stranded but not served until a few days thereafter, suit was commenced within the time limited, since the language must be construed most strictly against the insurer and the "date of loss" is ambiguous in that it is uncertain whether it refers to the time a vessel was stranded or while it was being floated, towed and repaired.—Harvey v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 601.

¶ 1078. What is the "date of loss" under a marine insurance policy requiring commencement of suit on claims within one year of the date of loss, where a vessel was stranded and subsequently floated and repaired, quære.—Harvey v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 601.

§ 273. ——Provisions forbidding action until certain time.

¶ 1079. Where a fire insurance company has sixty days within which to pay a fire loss, and within such period an authorized adjuster declared that the insurance company will not pay such loss, suit may be commenced at once.—Popa v. Northern Ins. Co. of New York, 192 Mich. 237.

¶ 1080. Under a standard fire insurance policy issued by a mutual company, providing that all agreements affecting the policy should be written or printed upon the policy itself and that suit might be brought any time after 60 days after proof of loss, a suit brought more than 60 days after the adjustment of the loss and the refusal to pay on the ground of forfeiture of the policy, and after a statement of the secretary in answer to inquiry whether to commence suit or wait for the executive committee, that he did not think that the committee would do anything was not prematurely brought; although the company claimed that under the terms of the charter and How. St. § 4258 governing mutual companies, suit could not be brought until 60 days after the loss became due.—First Baptist Church v. Citizens Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 203.

§ 274. ——Provisions in conflict with statutes.

Invalidity of any article, by-law, resolution or policy provision of life or casualty insurance company prohibiting member or beneficiary from bringing suit, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. I, § 8.

¶ 1081. A policy of accident insurance paying a death benefit, which provides that a condition requiring action to be brought within six months from time fixed for furnishing proof of death, shall yield to any statute prohibiting such limitation, is within a statute of a foreign state in which the policy was issued and delivered, declaring that irrespective of any limitation in a policy of life insurance, action may be brought within three years after the cause of action accrues.—Johnson v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 184 Mich. 406.

¶ 1082. Whether the right of action on an insurance policy can be limited to a shorter period than is prescribed by the statute of limitations, quære.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 Mich. 420.

§ 275. ——Pendency of other actions or proceedings.

¶ 1083. A provision in the policy of a domestic insurance company that omission to sue for twelve months after a loss should be conclusive against the validity of the claim is not suspended for the period occupied in attempting to sue in foreign jurisdictions.—McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 188.

§ 276. ——Waiver of time limitation or estoppel to assert.

¶ 1084. The Michigan standard fire insurance policy provision requiring commencement of suit within one year of the sustaining of loss was not waived by statements made by mere local agents for taking policies, to the effect that payment would be made and that the insured had more than one year's time for commencing suit.—Barry & Finan Lumber Co. v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 42.

¶ 1085. Where an insurance company, by its acts and promises of settlement, induces the insured to wait until after the period limited for recovery, the court sitting without a jury, is entitled, on such evidence, to find that the company has waived the limitation clause.—Mastenbrook v. United States Acc. Ass'n, 154 Mich. 16.

¶ 1086. In an action on an insurance policy a letter from defendant company's general counsel, explaining delays, and asking time for further investigation, waives the contract limitation in the policy as to the time of bringing suit.—Dolsen v. Phoenix Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 151 Mich. 228.

¶ 1087. Claimant in case of waiver by request to wait does not lose his right of action by delaying suit for nineteen months after the receipt of the request, although the time limited in the policy itself was seven months to prove loss and one year to sue.—Turner v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 112 Mich. 425.

¶ 1088. Where proofs of loss under an insurance policy are received within a reasonable time before the expiration of the period fixed by the policy for bringing suit against it, the company cannot cut off the right to sue by withholding its decision upon the proofs until that period has expired, even though the time allowed for examining the proofs would have consumed it.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 Mich. 420.

¶ 1089. The time limited on a policy of insurance for bringing suit for a loss thereunder held extended where the action did not accrue until after the furnishing of proofs of loss, by reason of continued negotiations for a settlement.—Voorheis v. People's Mutual Benefit Soc., 91 Mich. 469.

¶ 1090. In an action on a standard fire insurance policy commenced after the expiration of the period of limitations in Act 277, Pub. Acts 1905, How. 2nd Ed. § 8328, held, that negotiations between the parties and assurances by the defendant that the claim would be paid did not constitute an estoppel to set up the limitation, where such negotiations were terminated before the expiration of such period.—Dahrooge v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 177 Mich. 442.

¶ 1091. The action of an accident and sick benefit insurance company in writing to the insured in relation to a proposed compromise of his claim that it will hold the matter in abeyance for a few days awaiting a further communication from him, that the proposition made is purely one of compromise, and that the company will in no way waive the conditions of the contract, does not waive a provision of the policy that no action shall be begun thereon after six months from the date on which proofs of loss are required to be filed.—Harris v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Benefit Ass'n, 149 Mich. 285.

¶ 1092. Where the plaintiff became a member of a mutual fire insurance company and received a policy of insurance upon his having executed a note wherein it was provided that in case the note was not paid within a named time the policy should become void and remain so until the note had been paid, such plaintiff is estopped from setting up that defendant did not have the right to accept premium notes as advance payments for assessments and that the taking of the note was an act ultra vires, and that he was therefor not in default for nonpayment.—Hale v. Michigan Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 148 Mich. 453.

¶ 1093. Notice to the insured that the insurer will not pay him because it believes he burned the premises rebuts any idea of waiver of the time of limitation as to bringing suit.—Coryeon v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 187.

§ 277. ——Extension of time.

¶ 1094. Where condition of a fire insurance policy provided that suit must be brought upon it within twelve months after the loss, the insured had the whole of the twelve months within which to commence suit, and that the limitation must rest upon the tacit condition, without which it could not be valid, that the insurer should be accessible to the service of process by which suit may be commenced against him, if not for the whole period at least for a sufficient time immediately preceding its close to enable the insured to commence his suit in the ordinary legal mode.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

¶ 1095. Where fire insurance policy contained a condition requiring that suit upon it be commenced within twelve months after loss, and process having been issued before the expiration of the twelve months, returnable two days after their expiration, and no agent of the insurer—a foreign corporation—being found in the county upon whom to make service, and new process being issued on the return of the first, it was held that the failure to commence suit within the twelve months was sufficiently excused; and the second suit, under the circumstances, was brought in season.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

§ 278. Defenses open to insurer.

Waiver of defense by failure to plead, see post § 292.

Burden of proof to establish defense that insured burned insured property, see post ¶ 1173.

Estoppel of foreign insurer to defend against its contract on ground that it had no authority to do business, see ante ¶ 51.

Giving receipt in full on payment of disputed claim on policy as bar to action for further amount, see Release.

¶ 1096. An insurance company, when sued upon a policy, cannot, after the beginning of suit, make any objections to paying the losses that are different from or additional to those which it stated before suit.—Castner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 273; Richards v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 420.

¶ 1097. The fact that soon after a fire the assured was notified that the insurer would not pay him, because it was believed he set fire to the premises, enables the company to use such defense under a proper plea and notice even though it was not one of the reasons assigned by the insurer's manager for rejecting proofs of loss.—Coryeon v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 187.

¶ 1098. A provision in a fire insurance policy giving the company's arbitration committee exclusive jurisdiction to determine a controversy as to loss, affords a complete defense to an action on the policy based on such a controversy.—Hogadone v. Grange Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 133 Mich. 339.

¶ 1099. The question of contributory negligence cannot be raised as a defense in an action on an accident insurance policy.—Hunt v. United States Acc. Ass'n, 146 Mich. 521.

¶ 1100. If the right of action upon a policy taken out in the names of several persons having interests is barred as to any it is as to all, and what would be a defense against one would be as much so against his assignee.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 1101. Where it does not appear that an insurer at the time of filing a plea to an action on a policy of fire insurance was aware of a material misrepresentation by the insured in his application for the policy, on such action being dismissed and another begun, the insurer is not estopped from setting up such defense in the latter action.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co., 183 Mich. 512.

B. PARTIES AND INTERPLEADER.

§ 279. Necessary and proper parties.

Mortgagee or lienor of property insured, see post § 280.

Assignee of policy, see post § 281.

Administrator or executor of insured, see post § 282.
Stranger to the policy, see post § 283.
Necessary and proper parties in action to set aside arbitration, see ante ¶ 1029.
Necessary defendant in action on oral insurance contract made by agent without designating company, see also Contracts ¶ 1145.
Sufficiency of parties where parent and minor children as beneficiaries under insurance policy sue as coparties without parent being designated as next friend, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 6.
Bill by fraternal benefit society to interplead claimants of proceeds of certificate, see Fraternal Associations ¶ 95.

¶ 1102. The person to whom and for whose benefit an insurance policy is issued, and in whose name it stands, is its legal owner, and is the proper person to sue thereon.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

¶ 1103. Whoever sues on an insurance policy must be able to enforce the whole of it as a single cause of action.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

¶ 1104. The single cause of action on a fire insurance policy cannot be split by permitting one set of beneficiaries to sue alone on it.—Voss v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 161.

¶ 1105. A policy of insurance taken out by a widow upon her property and that of her minor children is a joint policy even though the interests be several, and suit thereon must be brought by all the insured except where any of them have assigned to others.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 1106. Where each of several persons assured by the same policy has distinct insurable interests they can enforce their rights under the policy in equity if they cannot at law.—Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Holthaus, 43 Mich. 423.

¶ 1107. Where charterers of a vessel have insured it under an agreement with the owners that in case of its total loss the insurance money shall be paid over to them, and have had themselves named in the policy as the parties on account of whom insurance was taken, though the loss was made payable to the owners, the latter have such an interest in the policy as will entitle them to sue upon it in their own name.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co., 58 Mich. 132.

¶ 1108. If two policies of insurance upon personalty have been issued, one to the plaintiff alone, the other to the plaintiff and another, each owning in severalty his respective share, and a fire has occurred destroying the plaintiff's property only, the plaintiff's action upon both policies in his sole name is properly brought.—Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 514.

§ 280. ——Mortgagee or lienor of property insured.

¶ 1109. The right of action upon an insurance policy payable to mortgagee therein named as his mortgage interest might appear, is in the mortgagor.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 1110. Persons named in an insurance policy as payees to the extent of a partial interest only, such as mortgagees of part of the property insured, are not thereby entitled to sue on the policy, though the insurer might be protected in paying to them as equitable appointees.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 609.

¶ 1111. When a mortgagor binds himself to insure the property but does not do so, and the mortgagee, for his own protection, takes out a policy upon it in the mortgagor's name, but payable to himself, he can sue on it in his own name if he paid the consideration and if it was delivered directly to himself, and covered nothing but the mortgaged property and did not exceed the amount of the mortgagee's interest.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 48 Mich. 148.

¶ 1112. The vendor under a contract for the sale of land may, under a loss payable clause in a policy of fire insurance on the property issued in the name of the vendee, maintain an action thereon in his own name when the amount of his claim exceeds the amount of the loss. (Affirmed by equally divided court.)—Gourlay v. Insurance Co. of North America, 181 Mich. 286.

§ 281. ——Assignee of policy.

Substitution of assignee of policy as party plaintiff by amendment of declaration, see Pleading, VI.

¶ 1113. Separate interests held by several persons under the same policy of insurance may be united by the assignment of the policy to one who may bring suit upon it.—Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Holthaus, 43 Mich. 423.

¶ 1114. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 5775, How. St. § 7344, permitting the assignee of a chose in action to sue on it in his own name, held, that a corporation to which all individual interests under an insurance policy had been assigned could sue on it in its corporate name.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 131.

§ 282. ——Administrator or executor of insured.

Substitution of heir of beneficiary in place of his administrator, see Parties.

¶ 1115. An administrator can sue on an insurance policy for the use and benefit of a mortgagee, to whom the loss is made payable.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 Mich. 420.

¶ 1116. Where the person designated by a member of a benefit association, pursuant to its by-laws, to receive the death benefit, for the use of the wife and children of the member, declines to act, suit to recover the death benefit is properly brought by the administrator of the estate of the deceased member.—Neville v. Detroit Firemen's Fund Ass'n, 104 Mich. 149.

¶ 1117. A wife, designated as payee in an insurance certificate issued to her husband, having brought suit as administratrix of his estate; may, the events not being affected, waive her rights in favor of the estate, and an appropriate amendment will be regarded by the court as made.—Enright v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 238.

§ 283. ——Stranger to the policy.

¶ 1118. A patient cannot recover in tort for malpractice against an insurer furnishing an indemnity insurance contract to his physician by which the insurer agrees to indemnify the physician against loss from liability imposed upon him by law for damages on account of bodily injuries in consequence of malpractice, since there is no privity of contract between the insurer and the patient.—Bowers v. Gates, 201 Mich. 146.

¶ 1119. A trespasser in whose possession were goods destroyed by accidental fire has no rights against insurer on policy running to the owner and no right to benefits of payment made owner.—Perrott v. Shearer, 17 Mich. 48.

§ 284. Intervention and interpleader.

General law of interpleader, see Interpleader.
Pleading in interpleader suits, see also Interpleader § 9.
Determination of trust in proceeds as incident of interpleader, see also Interpleader ¶ 39.
Interpleader by assignee against conflicting creditors of insured as claimants of amount payable, see Interpleader ¶ 13.
Assumption of burden of defense by indemnity insurance company in suit against insured as intervention, see Parties.
Costs to interpleading complaints and between defendants interpleaded, see Costs § 35.

¶ 1120. An insurer which insured a man for $3,500 and took a mortgage from him for the same amount, and whose policy expressly entitled it to withhold from the insured or his assignees the amount of any indebtedness to the company, on being sued by an assignee of the policy upon its maturity with a prayer that the loss payable be decreed a primary fund for payment of the mortgage, to which the assignee had also succeeded by purchase of the land, cannot interplead another assignee also claiming the loss, where the first-named assignee (complainant) had kept up the policy on an understanding that when mature it would pay the mortgage; since the insurer giving such assurance cannot claim that without its fault it has been placed in a situation where it cannot safely decide between the two claimants.—Vogle v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 147 Mich. 333.

C. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 285. Pleadings in general.

Declaration for fraud in obtaining money by adjustment and payment to codefendants, see Fraud ¶ 716.
Matters to be specifically set forth in declaration upon policy of insurance, see 1916 C. C. Rule 22, § 5.
Requisites of declaration on insurance policy, see 1916 C. C. Rule 22, § 5.

¶ 1121. A declaration in an action against an insurance company makes out no cause of action where it counts on a certificate that does not give the terms of the insurance, but refers to a policy which it was beyond the authority of the insurance agent to issue.—Barry v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 424.

¶ 1122. In a suit upon an insurance policy, the declaration set forth the date of the issuance and delivery of the policy, the amount and term of the insurance, the premium paid, the property insured, describing it the same as in the policy, the entire destruction of the property on a given date by fire, the consequent loss to plaintiff, and the refusal of the defendant to pay said loss, and claimed damages in a certain sum. The declaration was not demurred to. Held, that it contained sufficient averments to warrant a recovery under First C. C. Law Rule No. 104, which was adopted for the purpose of avoiding needless prolixity.—Lum v. United States Fire Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 397.

¶ 1123. A declaration in a suit to recover the cash surrender value of a life insurance policy, under a provision guaranteeing the payment of such value upon the surrender of the policy within a specified time, is not fatally defective on error in failing to allege the surrender of the policy; the omission may be presumed to have been supplied by amendment.—Lockwood v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 334.

¶ 1124. A declaration to recover moneys claimed from a benefit society by a member was held bad for attempting to unite in one count a claim founded on one set of regulations of the society with one founded on another and distinct set, and for alleging the mere legal conclusion that the society was indebted to the member, without averring the regulations, the member's performance of conditions, the demand, etc., by which it became liable.—Portage Lake Miners' & Mechanics' Benev. Society v. Phillips, 36 Mich. 22.

¶ 1125. A declaration in a suit against a mutual fire insurance company set forth that plaintiff, being a member of the company, and having bought insured property from another member, applied to the secretary for insurance on it in his own name, tendering the proper amount; that the secretary had authority and actually contracted, but informed him that the property would be regarded as insured, and asked him to keep the money until a formal policy could be prepared; and that before he could get him to make out the policy the property was burned. The declaration gave the charter and by-laws of the company in full, and set out an absolute contract in positive terms. Held, that under Circuit Court Rule 104, which dispenses with prolix declarations on policies of insurance, the declaration made out a good cause of action, and that unless the charter and by-laws made such contracts as it alleged illegal, plaintiff should have been allowed to show that they had been recognized by the company as within the secretary's power.—Gay v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 51 Mich. 245.

¶ 1126. Where, under the terms of a mutual benefit certificate, plaintiffs are entitled to the sum of $3,000 if an assessment will produce that amount, a declaration alleging that money not exceeding $3,000 is due plaintiffs; that if one assessment should produce less than $3,000 such amount would be received in full of all demands; that the member fully performed on his part, and that defendant became liable and promised to pay said sum but failed to levy an assessment therefor, was sufficient against a denial of any liability, there being testimony that an assessment would produce more than $3,000, and it being defendant's duty to make one.—Silvers v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 94 Mich. 39.

¶ 1127. A declaration in an action upon an insurance policy is good if it alleges performance of conditions precedent, and need not aver compliance with conditions subsequent, but may meet them on the trial as they arise.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 179 Mich. 443.

§ 287. ——Allegation as to plaintiff's interest.

¶ 1128. The use just after the plaintiff's name of the phrase "for the use and benefit of" some person named other than the plaintiff, in the beginning of a declaration on an insurance policy, no assignment being set forth, and no allusion made in the body of the declaration to any other interest or title than such as the plaintiff held, has no force to make the issue different from what it would have been if the phrase had been left out.—Clay Fire and Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 1129. A declaration on an insurance policy averred in one count that plaintiffs were the absolute owners of the premises insured, and in another that they held them under a will. Held, that proofs showing that they held under a deed instead were admissible under the former count; and indeed, as the fact of ownership was the material question, the admission of the proof would not have been error in any case, and such an averment of the source of title would be surplusage, and would be amendable even after verdict.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

§ 288. Bill of particulars.

Bill of particulars in general, see Pleading, V.

¶ 1130. A bill of particulars in an action on insurance of household goods which merely specifies "contents of house" is too general and evasive to admit of proof of the contents.—Knop v. National Fire Ins. Co., 101 Mich. 359.

§ 289. Pleas and notices of defense.

Necessity of special plea or notice, see post § 290.

Form and sufficiency of notice of defense, see post § 291.

Waiver of defense by failure to plead, see post § 292.

Pleas and notices of defense in general, see Pleading, III.

Right to amend plea, see Pleading, VI.

¶ 1131. Where a declaration upon an insurance policy which plaintiff alleges has been renewed does not purport to set up a written renewal, the plea of the general issue is sufficient.—Montross v. Roger Williams Ins. Co., 49 Mich. 477.

¶ 1132. In an action on a life insurance policy a defense that the insured had changed his occupation to one which was classified by the defendant as more hazardous may be made under a plea of the general issue.—Hare v. Workingmen's Mut. Protective Ass'n, 151 Mich. 225.

¶ 1133. In an action on an insurance policy, a failure to submit to arbitration as required by the policy may be shown as a defense under the general issue without notice, although the provision requiring arbitration was not declared on either in hæc verba or in legal effect.—Morley v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

§ 290. ——Necessity of special plea or notice.

Form and sufficiency of notice of defense, see post § 291.

Sufficiency of general issue as plea, see ante ¶¶ 1131-1133.

Right to amend notice of defense to include newly discovered defense, see Pleading, VI.

¶ 1134. In an action on a fire insurance policy the fraud of the plaintiff cannot be considered as an issue where it is not set forth in the notice attached to the plea as required by 1897 C. C. Rule No. 7, sub. b.—Baumler v. Farmers' Northern Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 148 Mich. 430.

¶ 1135. In an action upon a fire insurance policy, defendant company must give notice in the pleadings of its intention to rely on the defense that it received no notice of the fire, and that no proof of loss was furnished as required by the terms of the policy.—O'Neill v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, England, 155 Mich. 564.

¶ 1136. In an action on a fire insurance policy the defendant cannot rely upon a breach of a representation contained in the application where notice of intention to do so was not set forth in the notice attached to the plea as required by 1897 C. C. Rule No. 7, sub. b.—Maas v. Anchor Fire-Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, 148 Mich. 432.

¶ 1137. In an action on an insurance policy such a defense as that plaintiff (the assured) burned his own property must be specially averred.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 87 Mich. 103.

¶ 1138. In an action on an insurance policy the defense that plaintiff burned the property must be specially pleaded, even though the declaration avers destruction by fire without any fraud, etc.—Morley v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 590.

¶ 1139. In an action on a life insurance policy, Circuit Court Rule No. 7 requires special notice before the defenses that the suit was not commenced within six months from the date when the policy required proofs of loss to be filed, or that plaintiff failed to furnish proofs of loss within thirty days after death of the insured.—Hare v. Workingmen's Mut. Protective Ass'n, 151 Mich. 225.

¶ 1140. In an action upon an insurance policy defendant's omission to set up, in the notice of special defense, a misrepresentation in the application for insurance, as to the amount of incumbrances upon the insured property, excludes evidence of such misrepresentation.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 236.

¶ 1141. Where a false statement by an insured person as to the quantity of land owned by him is not relied on in the notice of defense required by Circuit Court Rule 104, it cannot be made a ground of defense to an action on the policy, and evidence as to other land owned by the plaintiff becomes immaterial.—Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 638.

¶ 1142. In an action on a fire insurance policy the defense that the assured destroyed the property cannot be proved unless notice of it has been given under the general issue, even though the declaration avers that the property was destroyed by fire without any fraud, negligence, procurement, or privity of the assured.—Morley v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 590.

¶ 1143. An insurance company cannot avail itself, in an action upon a policy, of a stipulation therein which was intended to avoid its promise by way of defeasance or excuse, unless it has given notice of such defense under its plea of the general issue. So held where the insurer sought to defend upon the ground that the plaintiff had violated the conditions of the policy in that he had failed to give notice of foreclosure proceedings, had allowed the building insured to remain unoccupied, and had ceased to use the premises for more than ten days before the fire.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 112 Mich. 106.

§ 291. ——Form and sufficiency of notice of defense.

Amendment of notice of defense, see Pleading, VI.

¶ 1144. In assumpsit on an insurance policy a notice attached to the plea of the general issue that defendant would show that plaintiff was guilty of fraud in procuring the insurance is sufficient if it fairly apprises the plaintiff of the defense to be set up.—

Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Crampton, 48 Mich. 421.

¶ 1145. A defense that an action on an insurance policy was prematurely brought is sufficiently pleaded where the notice stated that the suit was prematurely brought; that plaintiff had not complied with all the conditions of the policy, and had not waited as long as the law required after the claim became due before commencing the action.—Putze v. Saginaw Valley Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 670.

¶ 1146. Where a notice of special defense to life policy on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentations does not expressly assert that such representations were contained in the application, yet if it refers to the application so that plaintiff cannot be misled, the application can be put in evidence as containing the fraudulent representations specified in the notice.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Ethier, 34 Mich. 277.

¶ 1147. If the notice of special defense in an action upon an insurance policy does not set up a misrepresentation as to incumbrances, evidence of such misrepresentation is inadmissible.—Minnock v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 90 Mich 236.

¶ 1148. In an action on a fire insurance policy the notice attached to the plea of the general issue referred to the plaintiff's written application for insurance as a part of the contract of insurance, and alleged that he warranted his anwers to the inquiries of the company to be true, and that the company had issued the policy in reliance on his representations. Held, that evidence of his oral statements as to the value of the property, made at the time of the application, were properly excluded on the ground that the notice referred to the written application and answers.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103.

§ 292. ——Waiver of defense by failure to plead.

Defenses in actions on policy in general, see ante § 278.

¶ 1149. Where, in a suit on an insurance policy, the company, while pleading the general issue, relies on a failure to make good a representation, etc., not contained in the policy, but set forth in some other instrument in the insurer's hands, the notice attached to the plea must declare the instrument and indicate the breach. The defense is one that can be waived, and omission to give the notice implies a waiver of it. And this must be done whether evidence showing such breach is incidentally given by the opposite side or not (Circuit Court Rule 104).—Home Ins. Co. of Columbus, Ohio v. Curtis, 32 Mich. 402.

¶ 1150. In a suit upon an insurance policy made payable to the mortgagee of the premises, it seems that it cannot be shown that the owner had violated a condition of forfeiture upon which they had been deeded to him, especially if no such defense had been pleaded.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 48 Mich. 148.

§ 293. Necessity and sufficiency of affidavit of nonexecution.

Issues where no affidavit of nonexecution is filed, see post ¶ 1154.

¶ 1151. The averment in a declaration on an insurance policy that it was made and issued to plaintiff as described is admitted if not denied by affidavit filed with the plea (Circuit Court Rule 79).—Simon v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 58 Mich 278; Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 1152. Action on policy of insurance which had been renewed. No affidavit of nonexecution was made. On the trial defendant offered to show that plaintiff, who was defendant's agent, had fraudulently renewed the policy after a loss had occurred. Held incompetent, as the policy and renewal constituted the contract on which the action was brought, and their due execution as alleged could not be questioned without the affidavit prescribed by Circuit Court Rule 79.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 380.

¶ 1153. Where a declaration in a suit to recover insurance alleges that the policy contained a clause permitting concurrent insurance, and defendant company does not deny under oath the execution of the policy sued on, the defendant cannot introduce testimony to show that the policy contained a clause prohibiting concurrent insurance.—Miller v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 158 Mich. 402.

§ 294. Issues, proofs and variance.

Under general issue, see post § 295.
Necessity of special plea or notice, see ante § 290.
Burden of proof, see post §§ 296-304.
Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence, see post §§ 305-327.
Proof of execution of policy as issue where copy attached to declaration, general issue pleaded and no affidavit of nonexecution filed, see Pleading, IX.
Order of proofs, see Trial, V, B.
Offers of proofs in general, see Trial, V.

¶ 1154. Where no affidavit of nonexecution is filed, issues based on the misnomer of insured, or on the ownership of the policy, or the mode of its procurement, are not open.—Simon v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 58 Mich. 278; Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 1155. Under a declaration counting on a policy, and stating, under a videlicet, that it was made in Michigan, but without the usual statement preceding it, of the actual place of its execution, the proof of a policy made in Illinois is not a fatal variance in a case where it is certain the defendant was not misled or surprised; the rule as to declaring on policies was meant to get rid of such requirements in this class of cases.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 1156. Where an owner contracted to sell land, and assigned a policy of insurance held by him upon the buildings to the vendee with the consent of the company, the loss, if any, being payable to the vendor as his interest might appear, a retransfer of the land and policy to the vendor after such loss will not enable the vendor to recover therefor under a declaration not counting upon such reassignment, but upon the sole ownership of the property of the plaintiff, and insurance made to and held by him as such owner.—Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 653.

¶ 1158. Under a declaration on an insurance policy alleging that proofs of loss were sent to a specified office of defendant, evidence that such proofs were also sent to another office is inadmissible.—Coryeon v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 187.

¶ 1159. The declaration in an action to enforce an insurance policy having alleged that proofs of loss were sent to the defendant's Chicago office, unless the declaration be amended, evidence that proofs were also forwarded to the defendant's Providence office was inadmissible, though notice had been served upon defendant to produce such proofs, which it failed to do, claiming that it had never received them.—Coryeon v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 187.

¶ 1160. The declaration by C. to the use of R. alleged that defendant insured plaintiff and R., mortgagee, "as the interest of the latter should appear," and that the insured building was burned, whereby plaintiff, and R., as such mortgagee, had sustained damage to the amount of the policy; concluding with an averment of damages to plaintiff. The policy was for $1,500, of which $500 was on the building and subject to the mortgage clause. Held, that, in the absence of a demurrer, the declaration was not open to the objection that it averred that plaintiff and R. were jointly entitled to recover the entire amount of the loss; and that there was, therefore, no variance between the contract declared upon and the policy offered in evidence.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 112 Mich. 106.

¶ 1161. A declaration upon a fire insurance policy, alleging that it was issued to plaintiff and his copartner, that the firm assigned it to plaintiff, and that at the time of the execution of the policy, and from the time of said assignment until the loss, plaintiff had an interest in the property insured, "being the sole owner thereof," when construed as a whole, shows the ownership by plaintiff of an undivided interest before and of a sole interest after the assignment, and, therefore, proof of an assignment to plaintiff of his copartner's interest in the property does not constitute a variance.—Rediker v. Queen Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 224.

¶ 1162. A policy of insurance varying only from the one described in the declaration, which covers several items, in that but $100 is written upon a barn, while the policy counted upon calls for $400 insurance on said building, cannot be received in evidence under the pleadings without amendment.—Dove v. Royal Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 122.

¶ 1163. Under a declaration on a fire insurance policy issued to plaintiff and another and assigned to plaintiff, alleging that at the time of the loss plaintiff was the sole owner of the property insured, evidence of an assignment to plaintiff of the interest of the coinsured in the property is admissible, although not covered by express averment.—Rediker v. Queen Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 224.

¶ 1164. In an action on an insurance policy plaintiff under pleadings in conformity with Circuit Court Rule 3 (c) and 7 (d) may introduce evidence which tends to show the invalidity of the application.—Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 179 Mich. 443.

¶ 1165. In an action on a policy of insurance, the declaration, purporting to set forth a contract of insurance according to its legal effect, averred that "it was further provided that if said policy was issued upon or referred to an application, etc., such application, etc., should be considered a part of said contract and a warranty of the insured." An application was not otherwise referred to in the declaration. It appeared from the cross-examination of a witness that an application was signed by the insured at the time the policy was issued, but the application was not produced nor its contents shown. Held, that it did not necessarily follow that the contract as contained in the policy was varied by the application, and so no variance appeared.—Throop v. North American Fire Ins. Co., 19 Mich. 423.

§ 295. ——Under general issue.

Necessity of special plea or notice, see ante § 290.

¶ 1166. In an action on an insurance policy, a defense that under the policy the amount was not due until 60 days after proof of loss and that under statute action could not be brought until after 60 days more and hence the action was prematurely brought, is not admissible under a plea of the general issue.—Putze v. Saginaw Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 670.

¶ 1167. In an action on an insurance policy testimony of misrepresentations and warranties by the insured when the policy was issued was properly excluded, it appearing that the plea of the defendant was simply the general issue, (1897 Circuit Court Rule No. 7, paragraph d.)—Baker v. Michigan Mut. Protective Ass'n, 118 Mich. 431.

¶ 1168. Evidence that an applicant for life insurance failed to state his true place of residence in his application is inadmissible without notice of such defense under First Circuit Court Rule No. 104, which provides that in case the company relies upon the failure of the assured to perform or make good any promise, representation, or warranty not contained in the policy, but set forth in any other paper or instrument in the hands of the company, the notice under the general issue shall declare the same, and indicate the breach relied on.—Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513.

¶ 1169. In an action upon an insurance policy where the declaration is in the usual form, and the plea the general issue, plaintiff cannot show a different contract of insurance from that set up in the policy, e. g., he cannot show that by the fraud or mistake of defendant's agent a clause was inserted making the contract a different policy from the one agreed upon.—O'Donnell v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 73 Mich. 1.

§ 296. Burden of proof and presumptions.

Agents and their authority, see post § 297.

Delivery of policy and payment of premiums, see post § 298.

Property or interest covered or risk insured against, see post § 299.

Warranties and breach of warranties, see post § 300.

Breach of condition in policy, see post § 301.

Suicide, see post § 302.

Waiver of forfeiture, see post § 303.

Amount of loss or benefit payable, see post § 304.

Presumptions in actions for premium or assessment, see ante § 93.

Instructions as to burden of proof, see post § 345.

Presumptions as to assignment of policy, see ante § 127.

Presumptions as to assignment of policy, see ante § 127.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Presumption that mutual members know law of the corporation, see Evidence § 48.

Presumptions and proof of customs, see Customs § 7.

Judicial notice of customs of insurance business, see Evidence § 12.

Judicial notice of seasonal increase of marine risks, see Evidence ¶ 108.

¶ 1170. A person insured in a farmers' mutual fire insurance company is presumed, as contract holder, to have knowledge of the terms of his contract, and, as member of the company, to have knowledge of its powers.—Geraghty v. Washtenaw Mut. Fire-Ins. Co., 145 Mich. 635.

¶ 1171. In a suit upon a policy the plaintiff has the burden of proof that the case is within the exceptions to the rule which requires the proofs to be made out by the person assured.—McGraw v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145.

¶ 1172. Where an insurance policy requires that, in making proof of loss, the written portion of any policy for additional insurance shall be set forth, the court cannot presume that the statement actually made does not substantially comply with the requirement, if the later policy is not in proof.—Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Kittle, 39 Mich. 51.

¶ 1173. Burden of proof is on the defendant to establish such a defense as that the insured burned the property insured.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103.

¶ 1174. The burden of establishing insanity is upon the party who asserts it.—Blackstone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592.

§ 297. ——Agents and their authority.

Authority of agent in general, see ante §§ 23-27.

¶ 1176. An insurance agent cannot be presumed authorized to insure a vessel in tow upon an insurance blank that was meant to cover cargoes only.—Barry v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 424.

¶ 1177. Where it was claimed that an agent of the secretary of an insurance company had made out a policy upon property more heavily incumbered than the rules of the company would allow, notwithstanding the fact that he had notice of the incumbrances, it was held that it rested with the party claiming the insurance to prove that the said agent had such notice, so far as it was material.—Van Buren v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 396.

¶ 1178. An insurance company will be presumed to have the knowledge of its agent as to the existence of other insurance, where the evidence shows an application for insurance made to the agent by a person who states that he had other insurance on the property, but that such insurance is of no value because the property is to be vacant, and where the agent is given the policy of the other company, although the evidence does not show whether he opened and read it.—Power v. Monitor Ins. Co., 121 Mich. 364.

§ 298. ——Delivery of policy and payment of premiums.

Necessity and sufficiency of delivery of policy, see ante §§ 49-50.

Payment of premiums in general, see ante §§ 84-87.

¶ 1179. In an action on an insurance policy found among the papers of the assured, where the issue was as to delivery of the policy, and plaintiff's claim was based upon the production only of the policy and no proof was made of payment of premium or delivery, the burden of proof of delivery and payment of premiums devolves upon the plaintiff where, enclosed with and pinned to the policies, in envelopes, were internal revenue stamps ready to be attached, but not attached and uncanceled, and on the outside of the envelopes in large print were instructions to attach the stamps when the policy should be put in force (the internal revenue law requiring the affixing of the stamps to the policy).—Amos-Richia v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 684.

¶ 1180. In an action by mortgagees to recover under the "loss payable" clause of a fire insurance policy, the burden is on defendant to prove a want of consideration where that defense is relied on.—Gourlay v. Ins. Co. of North America, 189 Mich. 384.

§ 299. ——Property or interest covered or risk insured against.

Property or interest covered or risk insured against, see ante VII.

¶ 1181. Plaintiff in an action on a fire insurance policy has the burden of showing that the loss was occasioned by the peril insured against.—John Davis & Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A., 115 Mich. 382.

¶ 1182. In an action on a fire insurance policy providing for the termination of the policy in the event of the building falling through a cause other than fire, where it was conceded that the stock in question was destroyed by fire; the burden was upon the defendant to prove that the building fell from some other cause than fire.—N. & M. Friedman Co. v. Atlas Assur. Co., 183 Mich. 212.

¶ 1183. The burden of proving accidental death in a suit upon an accident insurance policy is upon plaintiff, and until some proof is offered tending to establish one of several equally reasonable theories, some consistent with the theory of accidental death, and some inconsistent with it, a case is not made out.—Merrett v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 98 Mich. 338.

¶ 1184. When sued upon a policy an accident insurance company has the burden of proving that an injury to plaintiff, shown to be the result of an accident, was within some exception named in the policy.—Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Accident Ass'n, 112 Mich. 196.

¶ 1185. In an action on a life insurance policy providing that death caused or superinduced by the use of intoxicants within a stated period from the date of the policy was a risk not covered by the policy, the burden was upon the company to show that the insured died from delirium tremens.—Malicki v. Guaranty Fund Life Soc., 119 Mich. 151.

¶ 1186. The burden is on the plaintiff to show an accidental death within the terms of a policy of accident insurance, in order to recover thereon.—Rathman v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 186 Mich. 115.

¶ 1187. In an action by a beneficiary on an accident insurance policy providing that the insurance shall not extend to accidental injuries or death resulting from, or caused directly or indirectly, wholly or in part, to hernia or disease in any form, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff not only to establish that the injury was accidental but also that such accidental injury was the sole cause of death.—Skinner v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 190 Mich. 353.

¶ 1188. Where a fire insurance policy confines the company's liability to the actual cash value of the property at the time of the fire, and the company accepts an aggregate instead of requiring a detailed valuation, it is presumed to regard itself as sufficiently protected.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103.

§ 300. ——Warranties and breach of warranties.

Warranties in general, see ante VIII.

Avoidance or forfeiture for breach of warranty, see ante XII, B.

¶ 1189. Where in a suit on a life insurance policy, defendant shows that the insured in response to questions in the application failed to state that he had been treated by a physician within two years, and shows by undisputed evidence of a physician that the insured received such treatments, a prima facie case of a substantial breach of the contract is established by defendant.—Bullock v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 166 Mich. 240.

¶ 1190. In a suit on a life insurance policy, where the defendant shows by the testimony of the physician that the insured was repeatedly treated by him during a certain period of time, and the insured in his application in response to questions by the defendant's examining physician, failed to mention said treatments, the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the treatments alluded to were for some ailment which did not tend to weaken or seriously undermine the applicant's health.—Bullock v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 166 Mich. 240.

¶ 1191. It cannot be said as matter of law that a brick oven is so unusual that a failure to mention its existence in a house or other building is presumptively fraudulent.—Richards v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 420.

§ 301. ——Breach of condition in policy.

Breach of conditions in general, see ante §§ 147-171.

¶ 1192. Under a fire insurance policy containing a rider permitting the mill in question to remain idle during the winter season, the burden rested upon the company to prove that the mill was idle later than the winter season when it burned in order to establish forfeiture for breach of condition.—Barker v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 626.

¶ 1193. Under a fire insurance policy containing a rider permitting the insured mill to remain idle during the winter season, the giving of an instruction that the burden was on the defendant to prove that the mill was idle beyond the winter season, could not be made the basis of an assignment of error that thereby the court improperly imposed upon defendant the burden of proving that the day of the fire (June 12th) was not within such season.—Barker v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 626.

¶ 1194. After the plaintiff, in an action upon a fire insurance policy makes out a prima facie case by introducing the policy in evidence and showing the loss, the burden is then on the defendant to show that the policy has been avoided by a breach of its conditions, and by showing some connection between the loss and the breach of the condition.—Lagden v. Concordia Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 188 Mich. 689.

Breach of condition against suicide, see ante § 158.

¶ 1195. The burden of proof of establishing that an insured committed suicide devolves upon the defendant.—Bromberg v. North American Life Ins. Co., 192 Mich. 143.

¶ 1196. The suicide clause in an insurance policy is a condition subsequent, and the company has the burden of proving that the death of the insured was by suicide.—Ferris v. Court of Honor, 152 Mich. 322.

¶ 1197. In an action upon a life policy, a condition in the policy making it void in case the person whose life is insured die by his own hand is to be construed in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture, and the burden is on the insurers to show it, and not on the insured to negative it.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41.

¶ 1198. Where death may be attributed to suicide or accident, the presumption of law is against suicide.—Burnham v. Interstate Casualty Co., 117 Mich. 142.

¶ 1199. It will not be presumed that an insured person committed suicide because of the mere fact that he is found dead in his room with a gunshot wound in his head.—Bromberg v. North American Life Ins. Co., 192 Mich. 143.

§ 303. ——Waiver of forfeiture.

Waiver of forfeiture in general, see ante XII, C.

¶ 1200. The plaintiff in a suit upon an insurance policy has the burden of showing knowledge on the part of the company, at the time of the issue of the policy, of the existence of a mortgage upon the insured property, the policy providing that it shall be void if the property be so incumbered.—Wierengo v. American Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 621.

¶ 1201. In an action on a Michigan standard policy of insurance against fire where at the time the policy is issued the insured is not the owner of the land in fee simple, the burden of proof to show knowledge of this fact is on the insured.—Wyandotte Brewing Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 144 Mich. 440.

¶ 1202. The rule that in an action based upon a life insurance policy, the burden is upon the defendant to prove its affirmative defense and in turn the burden shifts to plaintiff to prove a waiver or estoppel; was not affected by the fact that the court gave to the defendant the opening and rebutting in the introduction of evidence.—Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 133 Mich. 526.

§ 304. ——Amount of loss or benefit payable.

Amount of loss or benefit payable, see ante XIV.

¶ 1203. Where the by-laws of a mutual benefit society provide that it shall in no case be liable to a beneficiary in a sum greater than that realized from one assessment upon its members, the burden of showing the membership of the society in a suit for benefits, in order to establish that the amount so realized would be less than the amount claimed, is upon the society, it being a matter peculiarly within its knowledge. —Gnau v. Masons' Frat. Acc. Ass'n, 109 Mich. 527.

Admissibility of policy and proofs of loss in action on award, see also Arbitration ¶ 83.
Admissibility of official birth and death certificates, see Evidence § 536.

¶ 1204. Where a man 26 years old had disappeared and gone away, being absent for more than seven years, with no intelligence as to his whereabouts, although there was evidence from which the jury might find an intention not to return, in an action on his insurance policy, it was not error to exclude mortality tables in evidence, because his expectancy of life was immaterial.—Heagany v. National Union, 143 Mich. 186.

¶ 1205. As tending to show that the insured had been treated by a physician for a certain disease, defendant offered in evidence a prescription claimed to have been prepared for her by such physician; but the druggist who filled the prescription was unable to testify that it was brought to him by the insured. Held, that it was properly rejected.—Plumb v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 94.

¶ 1206. Evidence to show the appearance of a sidewalk under like circumstances and surroundings on the night succeeding an accident is not incompetent as relating to facts observed subsequent to the time of the accident.—Stone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 81.

¶ 1207. In an action on a fire insurance policy when the theory of the defense is that the plaintiff himself fired the property, statements made by plaintiff before the fire to third persons, to the effect that he was going away, are inadmissible; so also is plaintiff's evidence as to why he went and where he was on the night of the fire.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Crampton, 43 Mich. 421.

¶ 1208. Where the defense in an action upon an insurance policy is that plaintiff wilfully burned the property, defendant may show, as bearing upon a motive for the burning, that there had been trouble in plaintiff's family.—Barnett v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 247.

§ 306. ——As to agents and their authority.

Agents and their authority, see ante §§ 23-27.
Sufficiency of evidence as to agents and their authority, see post § 319.
Evidence as to agency of adjuster or confidential relation to insured bearing on claim of fraud, see also Fraud ¶ 408.

¶ 1209. It seems that where the question is whether policies were issued by an insurance agent before or after the loss, it is error to exclude evidence that the agent's instructions were to telegraph his company of any loss that might occur.—Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 482.

¶ 1210. An insurance agent having agreed with A. to look after his risks in the company which he represented and in various others reported lists to him showing the amount of his insurance therein, and gave him a receipt for money advanced to pay premiums. Held, in an action by A. against the company represented by the agent, that as these papers were merely drawn up for A.'s information, by a person acting therein as his agent, and not in the course of any agency for the company, they were inadmissible to show any recognition by the company of the policy on which suit was brought. —Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502.

¶ 1211. Where it clearly appears that a policy of insurance was not delivered before the applicant's death, it is not error to exclude evidence that the policy had been charged by the company to the agent; that the agent had given bond to the company; and that the policy being delivered after the applicant's death had been gotten back by the agent by means of threats.—Dennis v. Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 594.

¶ 1212. Where proofs of loss were made by an agent of the assured, the latter, in a suit upon the policy, in which proofs were introduced without objection was properly allowed to testify that he had given the agent authority to act in all respects as he himself would, with reference to the proofs. —McGraw v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145.

§ 307. ——As to interest of insured.

Insurable interests in general, see ante IV.

Sufficiency of evidence as to title and interest of insured, see post § 320.

¶ 1213. Where a defense is made to an action on a fire insurance policy that plaintiff was not the absolute owner of the goods insured, evidence is admissible as to what defendant's agent was told in regard to the plaintiff's ownership of the property, both as being part of the res gestæ and as showing that defendant's agent had knowledge of plaintiff's title, although another was in possession of the goods.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 150 Mich. 311.

¶ 1214. In an action on a fire insurance policy testimony that plaintiff owned the property insured is incompetent as stating a conclusion of the witness.—Kennedy v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co., 157 Mich. 411.

¶ 1215. Where the purchase of new machinery was the occasion of obtaining additional insurance, evidence of the purchase was admissible in an action on the policy as res gestæ.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143.

¶ 1216. Plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy gave evidence that the property involved had been deeded to him. The defense was that he had falsely claimed ownership. But it was also shown that when the adjuster had asked to see the deed he had answered that it was in his brother's keeping, and had produced a receipt for it from his brother. The defense attempted to show that the delivery was in escrow, conditioned upon his properly supporting his parents. Held proper to cross-examine him as to why the deed was in his brother's hands; and whether he had not shown the adjuster a paper setting forth the escrow and the reasons therefor.—Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 638.

¶ 1217. Evidence that the money paid for three horses was applied by the seller in removing a lien from one of them, is admissible in an action on a policy of insurance on such horse, where such testimony tends to substantiate statements made by the purchaser in an application for insurance as to the amount paid for the insured animal.—Simmons v. National Live Stock Ins. Co., 187 Mich. 551.

§ 308. ——As to other insurance.

Breach of condition against other insurance, see ante § 163.

¶ 1218. In a suit on an insurance policy it is not error to admit evidence of the basis on which another company, from which additional insurance had been obtained, had settled for the loss; such evidence does not prove the extent of the loss as against the defendant company, but shows what has been paid in reduction of its risk.—Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Kittle, 39 Mich. 51.

§ 309. ——As to property or interest covered or risk insured against.

Property or interest covered or risk insured against, see ante VII.

Sufficiency of evidence as to property or interest covered or risk insured against, see post § 322.

¶ 1219. In a fire insurance policy the covering words, "on lumber in mill building, on cars under mill sheds, and in sheds adjoining to said mill," are words of ordinary meaning, but extraneous evidence is properly admitted to establish the character and situation of particular sheds claimed to be covered by such insurance.—Wolverine Lumber Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 145 Mich. 558.

§ 310. ——As to representations and warranties in application.

Representations in application as warranties, see ante §§ 105-107.

¶ 1220. In an action on a fire insurance policy it is proper to cross-examine the plaintiff as to whether a fraudulent overvaluation of the property was not given at the time he applied for the policy.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Crampton, 43 Mich. 421.

¶ 1221. When an application for insurance is reduced to writing by the insurer upon the oral statements of the applicant, and is made the basis of the contract for insurance, the insurer is under a strong moral obligation to draft the paper so that it shall assure to the applicant the protection for which he prays; and when a controversy arises upon the truthfulness of the application as a representation or a warranty, and statements alleged by the insurer to be essential to a true representation are omitted, and the insurer seeks to avoid the contract on that ground, parol evidence is admissible to show that the facts were truly stated, and that the insurer's conduct led the applicant to believe that such as were omitted in the application were immaterial; the same rule will bind the insurer when the papers are drawn and the insurance effected by an agent.—North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146.

¶ 1222. In an action upon an insurance policy where the defense is a false statement in the application that the assured was in good health at the time it was made, a photograph of the assured offered to show her healthy appearance is incompetent.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 1223. Where it is claimed that a policy of fire insurance on partnership property was avoided by a misrepresentation of the membership of the insured firm, evidence of similar misstatements to third persons at about the time of the issuance of the policy, is admissible as bearing on the intent of the insured to deceive the insurer.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co., 183 Mich. 512.

§ 311. ——As to forfeiture for breach of condition or warranty.

Forfeiture for breach of condition or warranty, see ante XII, B.

Sufficiency of evidence of forfeiture, see post § 323.

¶ 1224. Testimony as to what was done with reference to cancelling a fire insurance policy was properly excluded in an action on the policy where the premium was not returned until the loss actually occurred.—McGraw v. Germania Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 145.

¶ 1225. As it is a complete bar to recovery upon a policy issued to several persons if any one of the insured has attempted to defraud the company by noncompliance with conditions or by false proofs of loss, in an action on the policy it is admissible to inquire whether the widow had not made such attempt.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 1226. Where defendant in an action on a fire insurance policy claimed that plaintiff himself set fire to the property, it was held proper to show that money belonging to the plaintiff, and personal property belonging to near relations of his, were destroyed; also, that the value of the property destroyed far exceeded the insurance.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Crampton, 43 Mich. 421.

¶ 1227. In a suit on a fire insurance policy the defendant set up as a defense that the plaintiff fraudulently caused the property to be fired. Before being accused of such act the plaintiff had called up the sheriff's office and asked for an investigation, stating that the circumstances were suspicious. Held, that the testimony of witnesses as to what plaintiff said in this conversation was admissible to rebut the charge of fraud.—O'Toole v. Ohio German Fire Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 187.

¶ 1228. In an action to enforce a fire insurance policy, defended on the theory that the plaintiff purposely started the fire, testimony tending to show that plaintiff had loose notions respecting the destruction of insured property is material, though the weight of such testimony might depend on whether he had expressed such views lately or long before.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Crampton, 43 Mich. 421.

¶ 1229. One who agrees in his application for membership in a mutual indemnity association insuring against loss of employment that the cause assigned by his employer for his discharge shall be the sole basis for determining the liability of the association in the event of discharge may not show, in an action upon the policy, that the cause assigned by the employer did not exist.—Palmer v. Locomotive Engineers' and Conductors' Mut. Protective Ass'n, 189 Mich. 35.

§ 312. ——As to false swearing and fraud.

False swearing and fraud as ground for cancellation or forfeiture, see ante § 144.

¶ 1231. In an action to recover on a fire insurance policy on personal property in which the defense was that the policy was void because of false swearing in the proofs of loss, held that evidence as to what prompted the particular witness to inquire into the plaintiff's history was admissible.—Barrett v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 209.

¶ 1232. Where fraud is charged to plaintiff in an action on fire insurance policies, a great latitude in cross-examining plaintiff and his wife, as to his conduct, should be allowed.—Silverstone v. London Assur. Corporation, 176 Mich. 525.

¶ 1233. In an action upon a fire insurance policy, evidence that the assured was doing a losing business and could not pay his just bills is too remote to be admissible for the purpose of establishing fraud on his part in making false statements as to the amount of goods on hand at the time of the fire.—Morley v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 590.

§ 313. ——As to waiver of conditions.

See also ante ¶ 845.

Sufficiency of evidence of waiver of forfeiture, see post § 324.

Waiver of conditions or breach of conditions in general, see ante XII, C.

Admissibility of parol evidence of waiver of conditions, see Evidence ¶ 562.

¶ 1234. In a suit for insurance it was held no error to admit evidence that neither the agent nor the company objected at the time to the preliminary proofs of loss, which were presented a few days too late. The agent having gone on to repair the loss to another building insured by the same policy, and damaged by the same fire, and the company having allowed his expenditures, the company could take no advantage of a failure to make the preliminary proofs within the exact time specified in the conditions annexed to the policy; and if strict formal proofs were waived, the giving to the company of immediate notice of the fire, which was a precedent requirement, must be regarded as waived also.—Hibernia Ins. Co. v. O'Connor, 29 Mich. 241.

¶ 1235. In a suit on a life insurance policy, where the defense is made that the insured and the beneficiary falsely represented in the application for insurance that the insured was sound in health, when as a matter of fact she had a disease of the heart from which she died soon after, and plaintiff, the beneficiary, offers to prove that he informed the soliciting agent of the company that the insured had such heart disease, such evidence is not admissible if it appears that it was not the duty of such agent to discover the facts, and that his authority did not extend to receiving the application or any communications upon the subject.—Haapa v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 150 Mich. 467.

¶ 1236. Evidence of a conversation between the insured, her husband and the agent of a fire insurance company at the time of solicitation of the insurance, relative to the premises being vacant, is admissible to show that the agent had knowledge that the premises were vacant at the time the policy was negotiated.—Gordon v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 197 Mich. 226.

¶ 1237. In an action on a standard fire insurance policy, containing a clause that the policy shall be void if any of the property is incumbered by a chattel mortgage, evidence that the defendant's agent agreed with plaintiff that the provision should be waived, is admissible.—Dahrooge v. Sovereign Fire Ins. Co., 175 Mich. 248.

§ 314. ——As to proof of loss or death.

Proof of loss in general, see ante XV.

Sufficiency of evidence as to proof of loss, see post § 325.

¶ 1238. Final proofs of loss rendered to an insurer are not proper evidence of the fact of loss in an action on the policy.—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

¶ 1239. In an action on a fire insurance policy, proofs of loss are incompetent to prove the ownership of the property or the fact or amount of the loss.—Kennedy v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co., 157 Mich. 411.

¶ 1240. An admission by a life insurance company that proofs of death had been furnished to it will not preclude the introduction of the documentary evidence of such proofs of death in an action on the policy.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41.

¶ 1241. In an action on an insurance policy, where the defense was that the answers made by the insured to certain questions in the application for insurance were not true, proofs of death are admissible in evidence as an admission against the company, but not conclusive, although the policy may state that such proofs shall be evidence of the facts stated therein in behalf of but not against the company.—Krapp v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 369.

¶ 1242. Where upon request for further proofs of death, an affidavit of the attending physician of insured was furnished, such affidavit is admissible in evidence where defendant offered the proofs of loss, except such affidavit, on its own part.—Thompson v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 167 Mich. 31.

¶ 1243. In a suit on a fire insurance policy, plaintiff was allowed to hold in his hand the proofs of loss which he had helped to make, and to refresh his memory in testifying to the items of loss as they appeared therein. Defendant at the time objected that the proofs should be let in only for the purpose of showing a compliance with the stipulations of the policy. After said testimony of plaintiff was completed, the proofs were admitted in evidence without objection. Held, no error was committed. —Goodwin v. Union Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 163 Mich. 41.

¶ 1244. After proofs of death had been furnished by plaintiff, defendant, without plaintiff's authority or knowledge, procured certain affidavits concerning matters that occurred before the death of the insured, and produced them upon the trial, with the request that they be introduced in connection with the proofs of death. Held, that the court did not err in refusing to compel plaintiff to introduce such affidavits in evidence they being in no way ascribable to plaintiff or related to death of insured.—Plumb v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 94.

¶ 1245. In an action to recover on a policy of fire insurance on personal property, in which the defense was fraud and false swearing in the proofs of loss, held that it was not error to permit plaintiff to testify as to what she was informed by the seller of a particular article of its actual worth when she bought it at a special sale, she having scheduled it in the proof at such claimed actual value.—Barrett v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 209.

¶ 1246. Where, in an action on a life insurance policy, defendant refuses to admit that the proofs of death submitted by plaintiff were in full compliance with the requirements of the policy, it is not error to permit such proofs to be introduced and read in evidence.—Maier v. Massachusetts Ben. Ass'n, 107 Mich. 687.

¶ 1247. A certified copy of a coroner's certificate of death of an insured person which is obtained by a son of the beneficiary without the knowledge of the beneficiary and attached to the proofs of death sent to the insurer is admissible as in the nature of an admission in an action by the beneficiary on the life insurance policy.—Bromberg v. North American Life Ins. Co., 192 Mich. 143.

§ 315. ——As to cause of death of insured.

Sufficiency of evidence as to cause of death, see post § 326.

Inquest of death and verdict as documentary evidence, see Evidence § 537.

¶ 1248. In an action on an insurance policy the question being whether insured had committed suicide or had been murdered, evidence that deceased had for some months been intemperate in his habits and that he was in straitened circumstances pecuniarily and was worried about his affairs, is admissible.—Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co., 131 Mich. 234.

¶ 1249. Where an action on a life insurance policy is defended on the ground that the insured had heart disease at the time of the application for insurance, the proofs of death which show that the insured died of heart disease are admissible in evidence, as they are in the nature of an admission.—Haapa v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 150 Mich. 467.

¶ 1250. A proper death certificate is admissible in evidence in an action on a life insurance policy when issued and made under Comp. L. 1897, § 4616, How. St. 2nd Ed., § 1579.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

¶ 1251. The attending physician's death certificate, stating the cause of death and the contributory cause (abortion) is admissible as a document to that extent, but inadmissible in so far as it improperly states what deceased said as to who performed the abortion.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

¶ 1252. In an action on an insurance policy, a coroner's verdict of suicide is not admissible in evidence.—Wasey v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 119.

¶ 1253. A provision in an accident insurance policy that the policy shall not extend to any case of death, etc., unless the claimant establish by direct and positive proof that the death was caused by external violence and accidental means, and was not the result of design, cannot exclude circumstantial evidence of the fact.—Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545.

¶ 1254. Where a physician who examined an insured person previous to his death, testified that it was caused by tuberculosis, the beneficiary in a policy of accident insurance who was present at such examination may in rebuttal testify as to statements then made by the insured that he was suffering from ptomaine poisoning.—Johnson v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 184 Mich. 406.

¶ 1255. Where there is no dispute but that the preliminary proofs of death were properly furnished, it is error to permit plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy to read such proofs in full to the jury, as the ex parte statements therein are not evidence.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12.

§ 316. ——As to amount of insurance, extent of loss or abandonment.

Amount of insurance, extent of loss and abandonment to insurer, see ante XIV.

Sufficiency of evidence as to amount or extent of loss, see post § 327.

Judgment and sale of vessel as evidence of abandonment, see also Former Adjudication ¶ 17.

Evidence to prove values, see Values.

¶ 1256. In an action on a fire insurance policy for $1,600 upon a stock of goods, all record evidence of the value of which had been destroyed, it was held proper for the defense, who claimed that the stock was small and greatly over-insured, and that it was burned for the insurance money, to introduce testimony comparing it with other stock worth $500, and prove that one of the plaintiffs said at about the time of the fire that he had but $500 insurance, and to produce the testimony of a drayman who was familiar with the stock.—Livings v. Home Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 207.

¶ 1257. Where there is no market value for hotel property in the place where it was situated, at the time of its destruction by fire, its real or ordinary cash value at the time of fire should be ascertained, if it can be, from all the testimony as to the cost, uses it has been put to, its age, condition and location.—Fite v. North River Ins. Co., 199 Mich. 467.

¶ 1258. In an action on a fire insurance policy evidence as to what the plaintiff paid for the goods one year prior to the fire, and their condition at the time of the fire, and the wear they received, is admissible as tending to show their cash value at the time of the fire.—Popa v. Northern Ins. Co. of New York, 192 Mich. 237.

Sufficiency of evidence in suit to enforce assignment of policy, see ante § 127.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Proof of corporate existence of insurance company, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, part II, chap. 1, § 9.

¶ 1259. In an action on a fire insurance policy, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the fire insurance adjuster denied the company's liability and refused the payment of the loss.—Fisk v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 192 Mich. 243.

¶ 1260. Where an indemnity insurance contract makes it obligatory upon the insured to establish certain things to show himself entitled to indemnity, failure to do so precludes recovery.—Stitt v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Protective Ass'n, 177 Mich. 207.

§ 318. ——Application and existence and terms of contract or policy.

Application and policy in general, see ante V.
Evidence to rebut presumption that signer of application read it, see Fraud ¶ 409.

¶ 1261. While, under Circuit Court Rule 104 (first rules), the declaration need not set forth the insurance policy declared upon in hæc verba, or according to its legal effect, the rule of evidence is unchanged, and proofs must be made in the same way as if the policy had been fully set forth.—Morley v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

¶ 1262. In an action upon a policy of insurance set forth in the declaration according to his view of its legal effect, plaintiff need not introduce in evidence the application, which is hypothetically referred to in the policy, and so averred in the declaration, in order to enable the court to determine whether the terms of the application invest the contract with a different legal sense than that ascribed to it in the declaration.—Throop v. North American Fire Ins. Co., 19 Mich. 423.

¶ 1263. A prima facie case in an action upon a fire insurance policy is made out by introducing the policy in evidence, and showing the loss.—Lagden v. Concordia Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 188 Mich. 689. (Ostrander, Stone and Steere, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1264. The failure of a life insurance company to offer the by-laws in evidence in an action on the policy, will not require a reversal of a judgment in its favor, where the policy makes such by-laws a part of the contract, and where the policy and the physician's examination were sufficient to show a breach of the contract of warranty on the part of the applicant.—Mudge v. Supreme Court I. O. F., 149 Mich. 467.

¶ 1265. An insurance contract cannot be held conditional where it appears that a policy was issued, when the insured made application, stating that the premium was paid, although the evidence showed that the insured made application at the instance of an agent, giving a note for the premium, and stipulating that such note was to be returned unless the agent succeeded in obtaining the return of notes given for another policy then in suit, and where the insured returned the policy on the agent's failure to obtain the other notes but was persuaded to let the matter rest, being taken seriously ill shortly afterwards so that the agent paid the note on maturity. The evidence did not show the company's knowledge of the arrangement between its agent and the insured, that the policy was not to be in effect while the agent was trying to obtain a return of the other notes, or until the new note was to be paid, and it was clear that the insured had never requested cancellation of the policy.—Shields v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 121 Mich. 690.

¶ 1266. Contention that there was no evidence to support a contract of insurance to begin at a future date, and that rate of premium and term of policy were not fixed, held not tenable.—Michigan Pipe Co. v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 97 Mich. 493.

§ 319. ——Agents and their authority.

Agents and their authority in general, see ante III.

¶ 1267. In an action on policy evidence held insufficient to show that a certain person representing himself as an adjuster of defendant insurance company was in fact an adjuster of such company.—Fisk v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 198 Mich. 270.

¶ 1268. On a bill to set aside a compromise of marine insurance loss on the alleged ground of false representations and fraudulent concealment and to reinstate a written abandonment of the steamer to the underwriters as a constructive total loss, evidence held insufficient to show that an agent of the underwriters had any authority to make an election binding on the underwriters to pay to a wrecking company for salvage charges a specified sum or a certain percentage of the salved value.—Loud v. Federal Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 60.

§ 320. ——Interest or title of insured.

¶ 1269. The occurrence in an insurance policy of a direction to pay the loss, if any, to some one other than the insured named in it, as his interest may appear, does not in an action by the insured upon the policy necessitate the proof of any interest owned or held by such person in the insured property.—Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 1270. Testimony by insured that he made a deed to his wife and that he caused it to be recorded and then understood that he had transferred it to her, followed by his testimony on cross-examination that he did it intending to place the record title in her to ward off an unjust claim, will permit but will not require a finding that the actual title or ownership passes as distinguished from the bare record title, it being evident that insured did not apprehend the difference.—Hogadone v. Grange Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 133 Mich. 339.

¶ 1271. In an action by the personal representative of a deceased person against a creditor of decedent to recover balance of proceeds out of life insurance policies after satisfying alleged debt to which policies were alleged to have been collateral security, evidence held sufficient to establish that the policies were assigned as collateral security.—Atkin v. Van Sickle, 187 Mich. 635.

§ 321. ——Payment of premiums or assessments.

Payment of premium or assessment in general, see ante §§ 84-87.

§ 322. ——Property or interest covered or risk insured against.

Property or interest covered or risk insured against, see ante VII.

¶ 1273. In an action on an insurance policy covering a stock of merchandise and providing for the termination of the policy in the event of the building in which the stock was contained falling through a cause other than fire, where it was established that immediately after the building fell and for more than an hour thereafter there was no appearance of fire in or about the ruins, and where plaintiff claimed that a flame of fire was seen to shoot from the top of the building and that the contents of the building were covered after it fell, by mortar and brick, and that thereby the fire was retarded and concealed, the finding for the plaintiff was not disturbed.—N. & M. Friedman Co. v. Atlas Assur. Co., 133 Mich. 212.

¶ 1274. A Canadian steamer while navigating Canadian waters with a defective compass and without a lookout, and while violating a Canadian statute requiring vessels to go at moderate speed in a fog, was stranded in a fog on an island far out of her course, and was abandoned. Held, that on a policy insuring her against perils of the sea, except those occasioned by want of ordinary care and skill, or of unseaworthiness, her owner could not recover for her loss without showing that the disaster was not caused or contributed to either by such breach of the statute or by the defect of the compass, and that it was caused by perils insured against.—Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

¶ 1275. In an action on a policy for loss from fire following an explosion of gasoline an objection that the loss from the explosion not covered by the policy is not separated from the loss due to the fire is not meritorious, where there is evidence that the fire destroyed all of the insured property and no evidence that any destruction was caused by the explosion.—Walker v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 142 Mich. 162.

§ 323. ——Forfeiture or avoidance for breach of warranty or condition.

Forfeiture or avoidance for breach of warranty or condition, see ante XII, B.

¶ 1276. A statement in the application that the applicant is in sound health is not shown to be untrue unless it appears that he had some disease of a serious nature, not a temporary ailment.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306.

¶ 1278. In an action on a life insurance policy, the evidence showed that the insured told the examining physician that she was in sound health and had never been seriously ill, when as a matter of fact she was at that time suffering from a disease of the heart. It was also proved that the application and the policy contained the provision that no liability should be incurred by the company unless the policy should be delivered while the insured was in good health. Held, that these facts are sufficient to justify a verdict directed in defendant's favor, even though a question of fact was raised as to whether the insured told the examining physician that she had not been attended by a physician within two years, and that she did not have heart disease.—Haapa v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 150 Mich. 467.

¶ 1279. In an application for insurance it was stated that the building was to be used for stores, and that there were to be two tenants only. The proof showed that the building was used for stores, and the second story and garret for sleeping rooms and for no other purpose. Held not to be inferred from these proofs that other persons besides the tenants occupied the upper rooms.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 380.

¶ 1280. In an action on an insurance policy where the truth of a statement by applicant that she had not consulted a physician within seven years before the application, and that she had never had heart disease, is in issue, verdict for defendant should not be directed because a physician testified that she had consulted him and he had diagnosed her ailment as valvular heart disease, where, though it was undisputed that she had consulted him, he was uncertain as to the date and relied upon memory wholly in testifying that it was within seven years, and there was other testimony tending to create a doubt so that it could not be said as a matter of law that his testimony was undisputed.—Wilson v. Royal Neighbors of America, 139 Mich. 423.

¶ 1281. In an action on a policy excepting risks incurred through voluntary exposure to obvious injury or danger, evidence that insured was killed by being thrown from a running mare does not authorize a directed verdict for the defendant, where there was further testimony that the mare was kind and even-tempered, had been ridden with safety, and that insured had seen her run in races.—Putnam v. Phoenix Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 155 Mich. 134.

¶ 1282. In an action upon an insurance certificate in which the defense was fraud in making a false statement as to not being pregnant in the medical examiner's blank, evidence held sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff.—Clark v. North American Union, 139 Mich. 589.

¶ 1283. Where, in proving his loss under a policy of insurance, one discloses the existence of another policy obtained in violation of the conditions of the former, such statement is an admission that dispenses with any other proof against him of such further insurance.—New York Central Ins. Co. v. Watson, 23 Mich. 486.

¶ 1284. Evidence held insufficient to establish that the statement in an application for employers' liability insurance that no other company had canceled a policy or refused to issue one within a specified time, was false and fraudulent.—American Fidelity Co. v. R. L. Ginsberg Sons' Co., 187 Mich. 264.

¶ 1285. In an action on a fire insurance policy, testimony that the insured creamery had not been operated for periods of more than ten days is not contradicted, so as to raise a question for the jury, by testimony of the plaintiff that he visited the creamery once a week for thirteen weeks and on "most occasions" it was in operation especially where on a previous trial he had testified that he visited the creamery three times during that period.—Cronin v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 127 Mich. 612.

¶ 1286. In an action on an insurance policy, defended on the ground of ill health and misrepresentations of the insured at the time of making the contract, the statements of the insurance company's examining physician made at the time of insuring, declaring the insured to be in good health are sufficient to go to the jury.—Rhode v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 129 Mich. 112.

¶ 1287. It is not contributory negligence to pass from a passenger car to the dining car of a vestibuled train, in the absence of a showing that the person so doing knew or ought to have known that the vestibule doors were open.—Robinson v. United States Benevolent Soc., 132 Mich. 695.

¶ 1288. In an action on an accident insurance policy, on the death of a mason due to his stepping on a part of a scaffold from which the support had been removed, testimony of the employer that he had warned the insured to "look out for those loose ends" is not sufficient to reverse a judgment on verdict directed for the plaintiff when it is doubtful if he heard or understood the warning.—Irwin v. Phoenix Accident & Sick Ben. Ass'n, 127 Mich. 630.

¶ 1289. Under a fire insurance policy providing that the policy should be void if an insured manufacturing establishment ceased to be operated for more than ten consecutive days, but containing a rider permitting the insured mill in question to remain idle during the winter season, proof of a usage that the winter season in the locality in question meant the interval from the time the mill closed in the fall until the logs came to the mill in the next season, which at this mill was late in June or early in July, was sufficient proof of the duration of the "winter season."—Barker v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 626.

¶ 1290. In an action upon a fire insurance policy, it appeared that the property insured was destroyed by forest fires; that the tenant who was occupying the place, upon discovering the approach of the fire, plowed several furrows around the buildings; that he then loaded his household effects upon a wagon, and drove them to a place of safety, leaving his wife in charge of them; that, while he was engaged in fighting the fire, he was informed that his wife was ill, and he thereupon took her to a village a few miles distant; that, when he left, there were eight or ten people defending the property; that he brought two men from the village, and started back to the farm house, but could not get there readily, because of the flames. Held, that the evidence did not conclusively show lack of diligence in protecting the property, sufficient to avoid the policy under a provision requiring the insured to show, as a condition to a recovery thereon, that "due diligence was used to save the property exposed."—Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 114 Mich. 386.

§ 324. ——Waiver of forfeiture.

Waiver of forfeiture in general, see ante XII, C.

¶ 1291. Waiver of a forfeiture will be assumed on slight evidence if equity requires. —Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., 55 Mich. 141.

¶ 1292. Forfeiture is not favored either in law or equity, and a provision for it in a contract of insurance will be strictly construed; and courts will find a waiver of it upon slight evidence when the equity of the claim is, under the contract, in favor of the assured.—Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co., 112 Mich. 425.

¶ 1293. Forfeitures are not favored either at law or in equity, and provisions therefor in a policy of insurance will be strictly construed, and courts will find a waiver upon slight evidence, when the equity of the claim is, under the contract, in favor of the assured.—Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 653.

¶ 1294. The fact that a soliciting agent who took an application for insurance and forwarded it to the company, three or four years later assisted insured in obtaining additional insurance on the property, does not constitute a waiver of a condition in the policy that it shall be void if additional insurance is procured.—A. M. Todd Co. v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Allegan & Ottawa Co., 137 Mich. 188.

¶ 1295. The application for a policy of insurance stated that the policy should not be in force until delivered, and the first premium paid. The applicant called at the office of the agent for the policy when he was out. Later the agent asked the applicant several times to settle for the policy. The applicant died before delivery. Held, there was no evidence of a waiver of payment and an agreement to give time on the premium.—Dennis v. Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co., 159 Mich. 594.

§ 325. ——Proof of loss.

Proof of loss in general, see ante XV.

¶ 1296. Evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the loss of an eye was the result of an accident; and that sufficient proof was given to, and that preliminary notice of the injury was waived by, an accident insurance company.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 1297. Where the policy contemplates a pro rata distribution of the funds received in a particular department only in case the sum realized is insufficient to pay the accrued policy contract, thus providing against such a contingency, if it should ever happen, a claimant is not required, in a suit upon the policy, to prove that the contingency has not happened.—Warner v. National Life Ass'n, 100 Mich. 157.

§ 326. ——Cause of death of insured.

Sufficiency of evidence of death to go to jury, see also Death § 5.

¶ 1299. A certified copy of a coroner's certificate of death of an insured person reciting that the insured came to his death from a gunshot wound in his head self-inflicted is admissible as prima facie evidence of the cause of death of the insured under Comp. L. 1897, § 4617, How. 2nd Ed., § 1580.—Bromberg v. North American Life Ins. Co., 192 Mich. 143.

§ 327. ——Amount and extent of loss suffered.

Amount and extent of loss suffered in general, see ante XIV.

¶ 1300. In an action by a mutual fire insurance corporation against a former member to recover a pro rata portion of losses and expenses of plaintiff from the date of the last assessment to the date of cancellation of the policy, evidence held sufficient to make out a prima facie case for plaintiff.—Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Butler, 193 Mich. 648.

¶ 1301. Failure on the part of the plaintiff in an action on a policy providing for specific and concurrent insurance in varying amounts, to show the amount of loss upon each class of the property insured, will not reverse, where the insurance was small and the loss total, and where the attorneys for the company failed to cross-examine as to the value of the various articles destroyed and the loss thereon, and only raised the question by request to charge.—Improved Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. F. Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 256.

¶ 1302. A verdict for the insurer cannot be directed on the theory that there was no competent proof of what the actual cash value of the lost property was, where it was shown what property was lost by a list submitted in course of attempted settlement and by a more complete list embraced in the submitted proofs of loss, and where the evidence of value was vague and not satisfactory, partly because dependent on testimony of the insured who was a Russian and imperfectly understood the questions put and imperfectly answered them through an interpreter, but there was some positive evidence of the value of some of the articles.—Walker v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 142 Mich. 162.

¶ 1303. On a bill to enforce certain policies of fire insurance where it appeared that all such policies were issued by an agent of the insurers, that previous to the complete destruction of the building a small fire loss had been adjusted by the insurers' agent, that the agent had some knowledge of the value of the property, and there was no evidence of fraud and deceit practiced by plaintiff, evidence held sufficient to show that the property was of the value claimed by plaintiff.—Fite v. North River Ins. Co., 199 Mich. 467.

¶ 1304. Under a provision in a fire policy upon a vessel that the loss or damage for which the insurer shall be liable shall in no event exceed what it would cost the insured to repair or replace the same with material of like kind and quality, the insured cannot, in a suit on the policy, be required to prove the exact extent of the damage as an element of proof of cost, where the boat sank before being entirely consumed.—Jackson v. British-America Assur. Co., 106 Mich. 47.

D. TRIAL PRACTICE, INSTRUCTIONS AND JUDGMENT.

Trial practice in general, see Trial.
Place and county for suit against insurer, see Venue, I.
Improper argument on trial, see Argument of Counsel.
Reference in argument to defendant's being insured as error, see Argument of Counsel § 25.

¶ 1305. Where the plea in an action on an insurance policy charged plaintiff with burning the property, the remark by the trial judge that the course of testimony was the same as if plaintiff were on trial for arson was not open to exception if it did not lead the jury to infer that defendant's proofs must preclude any reasonable doubt.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 1306. The question of whether an agent appointed by the purchaser of land, with the knowledge of his vendors, to look after the insurance upon such property, had authority to receive notice of and agree to the cancellation and surrender of a policy of insurance upon the building on such land, is a question for the jury; where it appears that such purchaser, under his contract of purchase, was obligated to keep the property insured and to pay the premiums therefor, for the benefit of his vendors; and where it appears that such agent procured such policy of insurance; and where there is evidence that such agent subsequently agreed to the cancellation and surrender of such policy.—O'Neill v. Northern Assur. Co., 145 Mich. 516.

¶ 1307. Where in an action on a life insurance policy there is evidence that the insured was the keeper of a house of ill fame and not a house wife as represented, and there was no attempt to dispute defendant's claim on this point, it was error for the court to submit this question as an open one to the jury.—Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 290.

¶ 1308. A policy conditioned that the insured should be in good health at the time of the delivery of the policy was applied for on December 16th and was delivered to the insured on Tuesday, January 30th, following. She had done a hard day's work on the Saturday preceding and took some medicine that night, and on Sunday was not feeling well; on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday she had some disturbance of the bowels, but was about the house, doing her work, and resting occasionally. Inflammation of the bowels set in on Thursday; on Saturday she became seriously ill, and died the following Tuesday. Held, that the question whether the insured was in good health at the time of the delivery of the policy was properly left to the jury.—Plumb v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 94.

¶ 1309. In a suit by an administrator upon a policy of insurance payable to the decedent, his executors, administrators, or assigns, defendant sought to defeat a recovery by proof of the surrender of the policy, and the issue of a policy payable to certain beneficiaries therein named. Held, that plaintiff can recover only upon proof of the existence of the first policy, and the question of such alleged surrender was properly left to the jury.—Krause v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 105 Mich. 329.

¶ 1310. The question whether or not the insured in a life insurance policy drank not only beer, but also spirituous liquors at the time of making application, is one for the jury, where testimony is mostly negative as to drinking spirituous liquors.—Malicki v. Guaranty Fund Life Soc., 123 Mich. 148.

§ 330. ——Construction of policy or contract.

Construction of policy or contract, see ante §§ 65-70.

Contract or policy in general, see ante V.

¶ 1311. Where a policy of insurance, introduced in evidence, contained in the statement of a number of rods distance, a word which might be "six" or "oix," and there were no circumstances raising any doubt as to what it was really meant for, the question was one of law for the court as a matter of construction, and it ought not to have been left to the jury to determine which way it was written.—Lapeer County Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Doyle, 80 Mich. 159.

¶ 1312. The provision in a life insurance policy that if statements of the insured were untrue in any particular which would have led to the insured's rejection had they been stated in accordance with the facts, whether intentionally or otherwise, the contract should be void, was for construction by the court; and it was error to admit testimony on behalf of defendant that if such facts had been truthfully stated, the contract would not have been made.—New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish, 133 Mich. 68.

§ 331. ——Agents and their authority.

¶ 1313. Whether a policy remained in force was a jury question on evidence that it was a renewal and that a credit of a small loss not regularly proved ($5.20) was asked by insured against the premium, which the agent refused to grant, referring the matter to another but agreeing to hold the policy for a few days until a conference could be had, and where insured testified that a month later such person assured him that it was still in force, but the agent meanwhile reported the policy to the insurer and himself paid the premium and the policy was stamped on the back "Cancelled." The question was one of mixed law and fact, the fact being what effect the transaction with the agent had.—Dove v. Royal Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 122.

¶ 1314. The question whose was the agency of an intermediary is for the jury, where there was some evidence either way.—Preston National Bank v. Michigan Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 511.

§ 332. ——Interest of insured.

Interest or title of beneficiary or insured, see ante IX.

¶ 1315. In an action to recover on a policy of insurance, where the policy provided that the interest of the assured at the time of the loss must be that of owner or mortgagee, where the husband had procured the insurance upon the buildings and later conveyed to his wife the land on which they stood, and after the fire had assigned the policy to the wife, who afterwards reassigned it to the husband, where the whole question turned on whether or not the deed of conveyance to the wife had been delivered to her before the fire, the question of delivery is one for the jury, and it was not error to tell the jury that it was not necessary that the deed should have been actually placed in the wife's hands, a manual delivery not being always necessary.—Glaze v. Three Rivers Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 349.

¶ 1316. Where the circumstances in the light of which such a policy is to be construed do not justify the court in saying, as matter of law, that defendant, a vendor out of possession, the purchaser being in possession, intended to insure his interest, and the testimony tends to show that the applicant informed the agent who wrote the policy that he "had a land contract out," the question should be submitted to the jury.—Hamilton v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 98 Mich. 535.

¶ 1317. It is a question for the jury in action on an insurance policy on a stock of goods as to whether insured had a claimed reserve stock, where he did not include such reserved stock in his numerous financial statements to banks and commercial agencies.—Silverstone v. London Assurance Corporation, 187 Mich. 333.

§ 333. ——Property or liability covered and risk insured against.

Property or liability covered or risk insured against, see ante VII.

¶ 1318. Where an insurance was effected on "groceries," and there was evidence that the insurer was informed that alcohol and spirituous liquors constituted a part of the stock, it was held that whether they were included in the term "groceries" in the policy was a question of fact for the jury.—Niagara Fire Insurance Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124.

¶ 1319. In an action on a sick benefit policy the question of whether the insured is suffering from a disease covered by the policy or from consumption is for the jury on conflicting evidence.—Hoffman v. Michigan Home & Hospital Ass'n, 128 Mich. 323.

¶ 1320. It was a question for the jury whether a fire policy "on lumber in mill building, on cars under mill sheds, and in sheds adjoining to said mill building," covered lumber in sheds at some distance from the mill, or merely the lumber under the projecting roofs or awning of the mill built for the protection of lumber and men when loading or unloading cars in stormy weather. —Wolverine Lumber Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 145 Mich. 558.

§ 334. ——Forfeiture or avoidance for breach of condition or warranty.

Forfeiture or avoidance for breach of condition or warranty, see ante XII, B.

¶ 1321. The question of forfeiture in the case of a fire insurance policy is a mixed one of law and fact.—Zeitler v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 169 Mich. 555.

¶ 1322. Whether there has been such a change of title to insured property as to avoid a policy of fire insurance is a question for the jury when resting on conflicting testimony.—Houran v. Aetna Ins. Co., 183 Mich. 418. (Ostrander, Stone, Bird and Steere, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1323. Where it is expressly provided in an insurance policy that overvaluation of his property by the assured shall make his policy void, it is error for the court to submit the question of overvaluation to the jury as one of fraud or good faith, because the question for the jury is simply whether or not the property has really been overestimated, whatever the intent may have been. If the estimate of value has been made by some one else, even if it be by the insurance agent himself, and has been adopted by the insured under the honest belief that it is correct, the assured is still responsible for it under the notice contained in the policy.—American Ins. Co. v. Gilbert, 27 Mich. 429.

¶ 1324. In a suit on a fire insurance policy the defendant raised the objection that plaintiff had conveyed the goods insured to his wife and thereby invalidated the policy. Plaintiff testified that he made out a bill of sale to his wife to escape his creditors, and recorded it, but that his wife did not know of it and that the bill was never delivered to her. Held, the question of delivery was for the jury, and its finding for plaintiff could not be disturbed on this ground.—Goodwin v. Union Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 163 Mich. 41.

¶ 1325. In an action on a fire insurance policy, on personal property where the defense was that the policy was void because of fraud or false swearing in the proofs of loss, and where it appeared that plaintiff included in one schedule, relating to property to which he had title, property sold under a conditional sale contract and unpaid for, and overvalued property in another schedule, relating to property in which he had only an equitable interest, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff had committed fraud or sworn falsely.—Barrett v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 209.

§ 335. ——Truth of statements in application.

Representations in application as warranties, see ante VIII.

Application in general, see ante V.

¶ 1327. Whether the names of the individual members of an insured partnership were misrepresented in an application for a policy of fire insurance, which would be vitiated by any concealment or misrepresentation of material facts, under the evidence should have been submitted to the jury.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co., 183 Mich. 512.

¶ 1328. Whether or not a woman keeping a house of prostitution was a housewife as stated in her application for insurance is a question for the jury.—Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 290.

¶ 1329. Where a plaintiff in a suit to recover insurance testifies that he informed the agent taking his oral application that his title to the property was conditioned, and the agent testifies to the contrary, the question is for the jury, and the court should not direct a verdict for the defendant.—Miller v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 158 Mich. 402.

¶ 1330. In an action on a life insurance policy where the defense set up was that the insured was not in good health at the time the policy was issued and the answers in the application as to the health of insured were untrue and breaches of warranty the court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict and properly submitted the question of the insured's health to the jury, where there was also evidence that the insured was in good health.—Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 290.

¶ 1331. Whether a statement by an applicant for life insurance, that he had not been attended by any physician, was materially false, it being shown that he had been treated by a physician, is properly submitted to the jury to determine whether the ailment for which he had been treated was a serious one or a mere temporary difficulty.—Rhode v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 503.

¶ 1332. In an action on an insurance policy where defendant disputed recovery on the ground of a false answer to a question in the application, where the physician who filled in the application testified on cross-examination that he had no recollection as to whether the insured had answered the particular question, it was held error to refuse to submit the issue as to whether the question had actually been answered to the jury.—Clark v. North American Union, 179 Mich. 131.

¶ 1333. Whether a policy of insurance was issued on the written application of the insured, so as to make the representations therein contained binding upon him, or was in fact issued upon the mere oral application of a mortgagee protected by the policy to the extent of his interest, was a question for the jury, where the insured, although testifying that the written application was made by him to an agent other than the one who signed the policy, admitted that the signature to the application forwarded by the latter was his, and such application had the stamp of defendant's manager thereon, bearing date as of the day preceding that on which the policy was issued, and where the mortgagee testified that he made an oral application to the agent signing the policy, and a few days later received the same and paid the premium.—Cronin v. Fire Assoc., 112 Mich. 106.

§ 336. ——Forfeiture for nonpayment of premium or assessment.

Forfeiture for nonpayment of premium, see ante §§ 150-155.

¶ 1334. Plaintiff sued on a policy of fire insurance in defendant benefit order. The agent who took plaintiff's application, one day asked the secretary of the local grange whether plaintiff's dues were paid, and expressed his regret upon learning he was behind. The secretary's husband then said he would become responsible for them. At that time the secretary had the grange funds, money of her husband, and her personal money all together in her desk. Both the secretary and her husband testified that they intended this agreement to operate as a payment by the husband. Held, the court properly left to the jury the question whether the dues were by this arrangement intended to be presently paid.—Keating v. Patrons' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Michigan, 160 Mich. 648.

¶ 1335. In an action on an insurance policy on which plaintiff had failed to pay an assessment, testimony tending to show that he had not received the notice of assessment required by defendant's charter, was some evidence that it was not mailed, and raised an issue of fact which should have been submitted to the jury.—Miner v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Manistee, Benzie & Mason Counties, 153 Mich. 594.

§ 337. ——Increase of risk or voluntary exposure to danger.

¶ 1336. Where the plaintiff, a saloonkeeper, in a suit to recover insurance, had failed to pay the annual and special taxes on his business and to take out a license, it is a question for the jury whether the hazard has been increased by plaintiff so as to invalidate the policy, and the court should not direct a verdict.—Miller v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 158 Mich. 402.

¶ 1337. A condition in a fire insurance policy avoiding it in case the hazard is increased without the consent of the insurer should not be construed to forbid the making of ordinary repairs in a reasonably safe way, although involving a temporary increase of risk. Hence, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the use of gasoline torches in burning old paint from the metal-covered cornice of a brick building, in order to repaint it, increases the hazard, within the meaning of such a provision, where there is evidence that it is customary to remove paint in this manner, but the question is a proper one for the jury.—Smith v. German Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270.

¶ 1338. In an action on an accident policy, where the insured while walking on the tracks was killed by a train, the question whether insured exposed himself to such unnecessary risk of injury or danger as would bar recovery of the full amount of the policy is for the jury to determine from the evidence.—Walter v. People's Health & Accident Ins. Co., 173 Mich. 581.

§ 338. ——Vacancy of premises.

Breach of condition against vacancy of fire risk, see ante § 165.

¶ 1339. There having been evidence that insured had two houses and occupied the insured one "a few days in every week," though not in it at the time of the fire, the question as to whether the house was occupied or vacant is one which must be submitted to the jury.—Maas v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, 148 Mich. 432.

¶ 1340. In an action on a fire insurance policy, held that evidence as to the construction placed upon the word "vacant" in a vacancy clause in the policy by defendant's agent at the time of soliciting the insurance was inadmissible, as the question whether a house was vacant within the meaning of the policy was a question of law for the court.—Gordon v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 197 Mich. 228.

¶ 1341. In an action on an insurance policy, where the facts are undisputed, the question whether the building was "vacant and unoccupied" so as to avoid the policy is one of law for the court.—Richards v. Continental Ins. Co., 83 Mich. 508.

§ 339. ——Waiver of warranties or forfeitures.

Waiver of warranties and forfeitures, see ante XII, C.

¶ 1342. Waiver is a question for the jury on the evidence.—Cobbs v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 68 Mich. 463, adhered to on rehearing 68 Mich. 465.

¶ 1343. Waiver is a law question if the facts are admitted or the testimony undisputed.—Marthinson v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 372; Cobbs v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 68 Mich. 465; Towle v. Ionia, Eaton & Barry Farmers' Fire Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 219.

¶ 1344. Where there is no dispute as to the acts of an insurance company concerning an alleged waiver of proof of loss by it, or as to the facts concerning what would be a reasonable time in delaying to require further proofs of loss the question of what constitutes a waiver is one of law.—Foiles v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 175 Mich. 716.

¶ 1345. Waiver of a condition against additional insurance unless indorsed on the policy, is a question for the jury where there is evidence that the secretary of the company was informed of the additional insurance and made no objection, and after the fire requested proof of loss.—Walter v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co., 120 Mich. 35.

¶ 1346. Where there is evidence that the insurance company through its agent may have known of additional insurance without a consent indorsed on the policy and may have supposed that its right to object was waived, though the agent had lacked authority to waive it, the question of the waiver by an insurer of the forfeiture incurred should have been submitted to the jury.—Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 414.

¶ 1348. Whether a provision in an accident insurance policy requiring all disagreements to be settled by arbitration is waived, where the company, in its correspondence with the claimant, calls for further proofs of loss without indicating any defect in the first, exhibits no desire to have the claim arbitrated, and states that if suit is brought it will place the matter in the hands of its attorneys, is a question for the jury.—Gnau v. Masons' Frat. Accident Ass'n, 109 Mich. 527.

¶ 1349. In an action on an insurance policy where the defense relied on was that the insured in her application had stated that she was a housewife and that as a matter of fact she was the keeper of a house of ill fame, and the evidence showed that defendant had solicited her application for insurance, and she had signed the application in the house of ill fame, and the premiums on the policy were collected there, the house being conspicuously one of ill fame, it is a question for the jury whether the defendant's agents were not aware of the character of the house and the nature of the business there, when they accepted the application and the premiums, and if the jury so found the company could not rely upon a breach of warranty in this respect.—Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 290.

¶ 1350. In an action on a mutual fire insurance policy the question whether defendant had waived forfeiture by plaintiff of his insurance by reason of his nonpayment of an assessment is properly submitted to the jury, in an instruction that if they find that defendant continued to treat plaintiff's policy as in force subsequently to serving notice of the assessment, and up to the time of the fire, a period of about nine months, without objection or protest or notice of any claim of forfeiture, and by its conduct led the plaintiff to believe that it considered the policy as in force, such conduct would be a waiver of any forfeiture or suspension of the policy, and the defendant would be liable for the loss.—Elmondorph v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 36.

§ 340. ——Reinstatement of insured.

Reinstatement in general, see ante XII, D.

¶ 1351. The construction of correspondence relating to the mistaken cancellation of a benefit policy and the reinstating of the insured was for the court.—Slater v. United States Health & Acc. Ins. Co., 133 Mich. 347.

§ 341. ——Sufficiency of notice and proofs of loss.

Notice and proofs of loss, see ante XV.

¶ 1352. Whether proofs of death comply with the requirements of an insurance policy is a question for the court and does not concern the jury.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12.

¶ 1353. An insurance company sued to recover back certain moneys paid on a loss, on the ground of a misdescription of the risk and deceptive proofs of loss. The premises had been held adversely to the insured, who, however, had recovered against the holder on a first trial in ejectment, but had not taken out a writ of possession. The application for insurance was oral and was made by the applicant's attorney, who told the insurance agent of the ejectment suit and its result, and that the defendant had a right to a new trial. The agent filled out the policy, describing the premises as occupied by a tenant. Held, that the case should have gone to the jury.—Hurd v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 443.

¶ 1354. What is a reasonable time for giving notice to a liability insurance company of injuries to third persons covered by an indemnity policy is a question of law where the facts are undisputed.—Oakland Motor Car Co. v. American Fidelity Co., 190 Mich. 74.

¶ 1355. In a suit on an insurance policy, where the evidence is disputed as to whether the insured made false statements to defendant's representative and in his written proof of loss, the questions are for the jury.—Moloney v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 168 Mich. 269.

¶ 1356. In an action against a farmers' mutual fire insurance company to recover for the loss of a house and contents, farm buildings, machinery and stock, where it appeared that plaintiff made an incorrect list of the property claimed to have been lost and subsequently made out a new one, and the only explanation given by him as to the origin of the fire was that it must have originated from spontaneous combustion from a silo on the inside of the barn at one end of a haymow, which silo had been recently filled with green corn and clover, and claimed that he first saw the fire on the top of the mow in the barn, and defendant claimed that it must either have been of incendiary origin or due to negligence, held that the cause of the fire was a question for the jury.—Veenstra v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Ottawa and Allegan Counties, 195 Mich. 55.

¶ 1357. The question as to whether the failure to file proofs of death of a member of an accident association within the time fixed lay with the plaintiff or the association, was for the jury.—Shelden v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 122 Mich. 403.

¶ 1358. Whether notice of injury was given by an insured person as soon as possible and within a reasonable time, as required by the terms of an accident policy, is not a question for the jury, where the insured, without excuse, waited nearly five months before giving such notice.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 1359. What is a reasonable time wherein to notify insurer of proceedings against insured is for the jury.—Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 30 Mich. 41.

§ 342. ——Cause of death or injury of insured.

¶ 1360. Though an injury from a fall produces insanity by reason of which the person purposely takes his own life, it is too remote and conjectural to be submitted to a jury as a direct cause of self-destruction.—Streeter v. Western Union Mut. Life & Accident Soc., 65 Mich. 199.

¶ 1362. In an action upon an accident insurance policy where the issue was whether death was caused by suicide or homicide, the question was one for the jury, and its finding for plaintiff was not interfered with.—Furbush v. Maryland Casualty Co., 133 Mich. 479.

¶ 1363. Where in an action upon an insurance policy, the evidence upon the question whether the insured, who was drowned, came to his death through accident, or by apoplexy, sudden seizure, or suicide, is insufficient to overcome the presumption against suicide, the question is properly submitted to the jury.—Burnham v. Interstate Casualty Co., 117 Mich. 142.

¶ 1364. Plaintiff, beneficiary on an accident policy, offered the testimony of an eyewitness that he saw the insured struck in the face by a canthook. Other witnesses testified as to the presence of marks on his face. There was a conflict in testimony as to whether such a blow might cause death in ten days from an abscess on the brain. Held, the question whether the insured met his death by accident was for the jury.—Hurd v. Northern Acc. Co., 160 Mich. 535.

¶ 1365. It was for the jury to say whether the presumption against suicide had been overcome where it appeared that insured, on the afternoon of the day he made his will, being then in financial difficulties and heavily insured against death, went in a small boat and was thereafter seen to be rowing apparently endeavoring to get his hat, which was in the water near by, next to be himself in the water apparently swimming towards the boat, and where he was floating dead on the surface when persons reached him in an endeavor to relieve him; and the fact that the body floated, being explained by a possible reason in evidence, would not exclude an inference of drowning though bodies of persons drowned usually sink.—Burnham v. Interstate Casualty Co., 117 Mich. 142.

¶ 1366. Where the surroundings as to who was aggressor in the affray in which an insured was killed were such as to raise a question as to the credibility of the only witness, and where the latter made contradictory statements, the case was for the jury.—Payne v. Union Life Guards, 136 Mich. 416.

¶ 1367. In an action on a life insurance policy, where it appeared that the insured was found lying dead in his room with a gunshot wound in his head and a revolver in his hand; that he had complained of not feeling well; that there was no evidence of a struggle, and the coroner's report recited that deceased had committed suicide, held that it was a question for the jury whether deceased committed suicide.—Bromberg v. North American Life Ins. Co., 192 Mich. 143.

¶ 1368. Whether death resulted from natural or accidental causes is a question for the jury in an action on a policy of accident insurance, where the testimony is conflicting.—Johnson v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 184 Mich. 406.

¶ 1369. In an action on an accident and health insurance policy insuring against personal, bodily injuries effected, during the continuance of membership of the insurance through external violent and accidental means, and in which the testimony was conflicting, held that the question whether the primary cause of the death of insured was due to a blow received upon the abdomen by the falling of a telescope resulting in an ulcer and abscess or to disease was a question for the jury.—Skinner v. Commercial Travelers Mut. Accident Ass'n, 190 Mich. 358.

¶ 1370. The attending physician, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that the insured died of pneumonia, while two other physicians, who were sworn as experts on behalf of the defendant testified that, in their opinion, the symptoms detailed by the attending physician were attributable to the use of intoxicating liquors, an excepted risk. Conflicting testimony was also introduced regarding the extent to which the insured indulged in the use of intoxicants. Held, that the question as to the cause of death was properly submitted to the jury.—Maier v. Massachusetts Benefit Ass'n, 107 Mich. 687.

Verdict, findings and judgment, see post § 350.

¶ 1371. Where in a suit on a life insurance policy, the plaintiff fails to introduce any evidence rebutting the testimony of defendant's examining physician to the effect that the insured failed in response to questions in the application to mention certain treatments taken by him from a physician in a hospital, the trial court is bound to direct a verdict for the defendant.—Bullock v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 166 Mich. 240.

¶ 1372. In an action on a life insurance policy where there was evidence consisting of a letter sent with the policy advising insured that the premium was not paid, and the policy contained a recital that the premium had been paid, but the application provided that there should be no liability on the policy until it was delivered and the first premium paid, held that the court erroneously directed a verdict on the ground that there was a completed contract.—Christophersen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 199 Mich. 634. (Moore, J., dissenting.)

¶ 1373. Where plaintiff applied to an insurance agent for fire insurance upon her property, and was informed that his companies would not accept the risk, but that he would try elsewhere, and where after policies had been issued and canceled by various companies including defendant company, plaintiff sought to hold defendant liable on the ground that the agent had no authority to accept notice of cancellation and surrender of the policy, a verdict for defendant should have been directed on the ground that such agent was plaintiff's agent and that the law would not permit her to say that he was her agent to surrender one policy, but was not her agent to surrender another under precisely the same state of facts.—Kooistra v. Rockford Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 626.

¶ 1374. A verdict for an insurance company is properly directed in an action on a policy, where the application of the insured shows a denial of other applications for insurance as well as a denial of an unfavorable opinion by a physician with reference to life insurance, and evidence of the defendant shows application for insurance by a fraternal order and rejection by a medical examiner who advised him that he was not a proper subject for insurance. Insurance companies have the right to be truthfully informed whether an applicant for insurance has before then applied for insurance, and been rejected, and to know whether a medical examiner has declined to give a favorable opinion upon an application for insurance.—Ferris v. Home Life Assur. Co., 118 Mich. 485.

¶ 1375. In an action upon a life insurance policy where there was some testimony within the notice of the defenses relied upon tending to prove that the policy was avoided, a verdict was improperly directed for the plaintiff.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

¶ 1376. A fire insurance policy contained the provision that "all farm property usually kept in barn buildings, * * * shall be considered as contents thereof, when in the yards about said buildings." The plaintiff insured constructed a new shed nearby the buildings mentioned in his policy, and moved some of the machinery from said buildings into the shed. The officers of the defendant came to view the premises, and to consider with him whether he carried sufficient protection. The contents of the new shed were mentioned, and words and acts passed between the parties from which an inference might be drawn that the officers intimated that the contents of the shed were covered by the policy. The shed and its contents were destroyed by fire. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict for the defendant, and properly left it to the jury to say whether defendant was estopped to deny its liability.—Wilson v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 156 Mich. 545.

¶ 1377. In an action upon a policy issued before Pub. Acts 1897, Act No. 167, took effect, it was error to instruct that a representation in the application that the property in question was incumbered for a less amount than it was in fact incumbered for was immaterial, and a verdict for defendant should have been directed.—Niles v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 252.

Instructions as to requirements of proof of fraud and on probative tendency of evidence, see Fraud § 62.
Instructions in actions on fraternal benefit contract, see Fraternal Associations § 79.

¶ 1378. In an action on fire insurance policies, fraud being the defense, in charging the jury it is not the duty of the court to single out a particular transaction, or the testimony of a particular witness, but it is the better practice to challenge the attention of the jury carefully to the entire evidence upon the subject.—Silverstone v. London Assur. Corporation, 176 Mich. 525.

¶ 1379. In an action by the purchaser of property against a mutual fire insurance company to recover on an alleged oral contract of insurance an instruction which authorized a recovery either on the theory that there had been an assignment of an old policy by plaintiff's predecessor in title or that there had been an oral agreement for the issuance of a new one held prejudicially erroneous where plaintiff was only entitled to recover on the latter theory.—Leonard v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Monroe and Wayne Counties, 192 Mich. 230.

¶ 1380. In an action to enforce the claim of an assured under a fire policy, where the company's defense is that the plaintiff started the fire with intent to defraud, a charge leading the jury to infer that there must be the same conclusive evidence of guilt that would be essential if the insured were on trial for the crime is erroneous and misleading; though defendant cannot complain of it in case there is no evidence at all of guilt.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Gargett, 42 Mich. 289.

¶ 1381. Where there were circumstances tending to discredit the testimony of an insurance agent that policies were issued before the loss, it was error to instruct the jury that they were so issued.—Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 482.

¶ 1382. An instruction introducing the element of the excessive use of ale, wine, beer or intoxicating liquors by the insured, is erroneous in an action on a life insurance policy where there was a conflict of evidence on the question as to whether or not the insured drank only beer or habitually drank liquor at the time of making application.—Malicki v. Guaranty Fund Life Soc., 123 Mich. 148.

¶ 1383. Where a letter notifying a fire insurance company as to the taking out of other insurance was sent to the secretary who died before the trial of an action for loss under the policy, and where the letter was not within the knowledge or accessible to other officers of the company, it was error to charge that the letter was filed and the contents would survive the death of the secretary and would be equally within the knowledge of other officers if it ever got into the possession of the company.—Shelden v. Michigan Millers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 124 Mich. 303.

¶ 1384. An instruction that the stranding of an insured steamer in a dense fog was an accident that was prima facie covered by the policy, and for which the insurers were prima facie liable, and that the insurers would be liable if the fog proximately contributed to the stranding, was properly refused where the policy insured against perils of the sea, except those caused by want of ordinary care and skill or unseaworthiness. —Richelieu & Ohio Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934.

§ 345. ——On burden of proof and presumptions.

¶ 1385. Instructions as to the burden of proof upon an accident insurance policy approved.—Thompson v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 167 Mich. 31.

¶ 1386. In an action on a life insurance policy where the insured is shown to have been suffering from insanity and to have had a previous impulse to commit suicide, an instruction that the presumption is that the deceased did not commit suicide whether sane or insane is erroneous because the facts repel any presumption of law.—Wasey v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 119.

§ 346. ——On forfeiture or avoidance for breach of condition or warranty.

¶ 1387. It is misleading to charge that reliance on a specific ground of forfeiture waives all other grounds, where there is a reliance on several grounds and the charge is coupled with a reference to one ground, which was waived and does not refer to the others which were not.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 74.

¶ 1388. In an action upon a fire insurance policy, where there was evidence that defendant had among various grounds for denying liability, claimed violation of a condition against vacancy as a ground for voiding the policy, and where there was no evidence of waiver of the latter condition, it was misleading for the court in its charge to submit to the jury the question whether there had been a waiver of such condition against vacancy.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 74.

¶ 1389. In an action on a fire insurance policy providing that vacancy of the insured creamery for ten days should invalidate the policy, where there was dispute as to whether or not the creamery was in operation during such time, it was error for the court to refuse to charge that if the jury found that the creamery stopped running and ceased to produce the usual and ordinary product more than ten days prior to the fire, the policy was voided.—Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 74.

¶ 1390. An instruction that if, when applying for insurance, plaintiff fairly disclosed to defendant's agents the condition of his title, the contract of insurance was valid, but that if he informed them that he owned the property in fee, and had a clear title to the same, when in fact he had only an executory contract for its purchase, such misrepresentation would vitiate the policy, was held correct.—Wooliver v. Boylston Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 132.

¶ 1391. In an action upon a life insurance policy issued pursuant to a representation that the insured drank only two or three glasses of beer daily, and that he did not drink spirituous liquors, it was error to instruct the jury that if they found that the insured "was not an intemperate user of alcoholic liquors, it would not avoid the policy."—Malicki v. Guaranty Fund Life Soc., 119 Mich. 151.

¶ 1392. In an action upon a life insurance policy issued pursuant to a representation that the insured did not attend the bar which was operated in connection with his grocery, but that such bar was exclusively attended by his clerk, an instruction was erroneous under which the jury might have found that nothing short of a "habitual" tending of the bar and making that the "business" of the insured would avoid the policy, and that anything short of that would be an "occasional" act which would not avoid the policy.—Malicki v. Guaranty Fund Life Soc., 119 Mich. 151.

¶ 1393. The fact that the insured believed that the court would not enforce a forfeiture for failure to pay an assessment within the twenty days prescribed in the by-laws will not justify an instruction that the beneficiary cannot recover if the insured relied upon such belief where the evidence shows in his case a custom of the company of receiving payments after the twenty-day limit.—Wallace v. Fraternal Mystic Circle, 127 Mich. 387.

¶ 1394. Where, by an interrogatory addressed to an applicant for insurance, his attention was directed to incendiarism as a risk to which the property might be exposed, and where, as the evidence shows, an attempt had really been made to set fire to it, which the applicant does not state to the insurer, it is error to submit to the jury the question whether an attempt to fire the building was material to the risk. Where the truthfulness of the application is made the basis of the contract it would also be error to instruct the jury that if such information had been given to the insurer as would put him upon inquiry as to the attempt to burn the building that would justify the insured in his failure to communicate the facts within his knowledge.—North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146.

¶ 1395. In an action on assigned policies of fire insurance, in which it was claimed that the name of one of the firm of the assignors was fraudulently concealed from the insurers when the policies were applied for, held that an instruction that in order to defeat a recovery on the policies the defendant must, by a preponderance of the evidence, establish that the members of the firm of the assignors committed a gross, wilful and intentional fraud, and committed the crime of perjury with relation thereto, otherwise their verdict must be for the plaintiff was correct.—Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 195 Mich. 18.

¶ 1396. It is not error to refuse to instruct the jury that the failure of an applicant for life insurance to disclose the fact that he consulted a physician and received a prescription on the day he made his application voids the policy, where plaintiff claims, and introduces testimony tending to show, that the call was for a prescription to relieve him from a slight disorder of the stomach, which was quickly relieved, it being at least a question for the jury.—Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513.

§ 347. ——On increase of risk or hazard.

¶ 1398. Where machinery is insured by a policy expressly void in case of an increase in the hazard, or in case any product of petroleum of greater inflammability than kerosene be kept or used about the premises, if "reduced oil," shown to be less inflammable than kerosene, is subsequently substituted for coal as fuel, in an action on the policy an instruction is proper that it did not prohibit the use of such oil, and that the only question is whether the use and the manner of the use increased the hazard.—Grand Rapids Hydraulic Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 396.

¶ 1399. In a suit on an insurance policy, a charge denying the right of recovery if the risk was increased at any time was held properly refused as an abstraction not pointing out the matters of increase and not confining the request to the defenses pleaded.—Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103.

§ 348. ——On notice and proof of loss or claim.

Notice and proofs of loss, see ante XV.

¶ 1400. An instruction to the jury in an action on a policy of accident insurance that a provision for written notice as soon as possible after an injury to the insured was inserted to protect the insurer against fraud and misrepresentation, without saying more, is not sufficient.—Hummer v. Midland Casualty Co., 181 Mich. 386.

¶ 1401. In an action on an accident and health insurance policy providing that the policy did not cover accidental injuries or death resulting from or caused directly or indirectly, wholly, or in part, by hernia or disease in any form, the evidence being conflicting as to whether the primary cause of the death of insured was due to a blow received upon the abdomen by the falling of a telescope, resulting in an ulcer and abscess, or to disease, an instruction that plaintiff should recover if death was due solely to the blow received and not partly to disease as a contributing cause, held proper.—Skinner v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 190 Mich. 353.

¶ 1402. In an action to recover on a fire insurance policy on personal property, in which the defense was that the policy was void because of false swearing in the proofs of loss, held that an instruction that if the jury found that plaintiff had proven her case by that preponderance of the evidence which the court had defined they should render a verdict in her favor, not to exceed the amount claimed, but if the defendant had proven by "overwhelming" evidence, fraud or intention of fraud, then the verdict should be given for the defendant, was erroneous.—Barrett v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 209.

¶ 1403. Under a policy of accident insurance defining bodily injury as injury leaving on the body marks of contusion or wounds visible to the naked eye, it is proper to instruct the jury that the mark visible to the eye need not be a bruise, contusion, laceration or broken limb, but may be any visible indication of an internal injury which may appear within a reasonable time after the injury is received, such, for instance, as discoloration of the part of the body affected, and further that in legal medicine, the word "wounds" means injuries of every description that affect either the hard or soft parts of the body, and it comprehends bruises, contusions, fractures, luxations, etc. In law the word means any lesion of the body.—Thompson v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 167 Mich. 31.

¶ 1404. The refusal to give a charge for defendant to the effect that if the jury believed that insured included in proofs of loss articles not in his store at time of fire with fraudulent intent there could be no recovery on the policy is not error in an action by insured on a fire insurance policy on a stock of goods where the substance of such charge was fully covered in another charge given for defendant.—Silverstone v. London Assurance Corporation, 187 Mich. 333.

¶ 1405. The refusal to instruct, in an action upon a policy, that the proofs of loss could not be taken as evidence of the facts therein stated, is not ground for reversal, where there was uncontradicted evidence of the loss and testimony that the proof of loss correctly shows the "losses sustained."—Sloman v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 112 Mich. 258.

§ 349. ——As to amount or extent of loss.

Amount of loss, see ante XIV.

¶ 1406. It was error to charge that there was testimony that the value of the property on plaintiff's showing was $700, and that on the stand he claimed it worth that amount; where the proofs of loss were $422 or $472 and there was evidence from which the jury might fairly have concluded that the discrepancy was due to inclusion by the witness in the $700 of certain heirlooms besides the property valued at the lesser sum.—Walker v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 142 Mich. 162.

¶ 1407. Where an insurance policy provided that any award upon a submission thereunder should "not decide as to the validity of the contract or any other question except the amount of such loss or damage," plaintiff has the burden of proving his insurance and right to recover, and a finding in an action on the award must so describe the submission as to show its real nature; it is a mistrial if the finding treats the submission as covering all other questions concerning the right of recovery.—Haslinger v. Long Island Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 144.

Held, that it was due as soon as given, and by implication a security bearing interest from its date, or at least from the maturity of the notes; but as it was a distinct security in itself, interest on it could be implied only at the statutory rate of seven per cent.—Eaton v. of dealings may be such as wholly to debar the recovery of interest in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary.—New York Trust Co. v. Detroit, T. & I. R. Co., 251 Fed. 514.

People's Sav. Bank of Traverse City, 182 Mich. 417.

¶ 21. Under an arrangement whereby parties, who had contracted to saw certain logs, were to sell the lumber and receive the proceeds thereof, they having no right to use the proceeds beyond paying themselves their saw bill and any other legitimate charges growing out of the business, it was their duty to pay over to the owner the proceeds of any sale within a reasonable time after they received the same, and, failing in this, they were properly chargeable with interest upon any balance found unaccounted for.—Youmans v. Heartt, 34 Mich. 397.

¶ 22. Interest will not be allowed on pension money of inmates of the Michigan Soldiers' Home, unlawfully withheld by the Board of Managers, except from the time of death or discharge of the inmate from the home.—Mason v. Board of Managers of Michigan Soldiers' Home, 181 Mich. 347.

§ 7. Stock assessments.

Liability of bank stockholder for interest on bank debts for which he is liable, see Banking § 66.

Stock assessments in general, see Corporations, VII.

¶ 23. Interest may be recovered upon an assessment on stock of an insolvent bank where not paid when due.—May v. Ullrich, 182 Mich. 6.

§ 8. Unliquidated demands.

Interest as tort damages, see Damages § 47.
Right to interest for delay in payment of claim against estate, see Estates of Decedents § 158.
Right to interest on claim against estate for value of property converted although interest not specifically included, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 476.

¶ 24. Interest does not run on an unsettled or unliquidated account unless there is an express or clearly implied agreement that it shall do so.—Sweeney v. Neely, 53 Mich. 421.

¶ 25. Judgment cannot be rendered for interest unless there are data showing how much is due as principal.—Bell v. Ardis, 38 Mich. 609.

¶ 26. Interest upon money withheld is allowed either because there is an express or implied promise to pay it or as damages; but no promise can be implied until the principal falls due, and it is not allowable as damages if there has been no final understanding as to how much money is to be paid.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 Mich. 193.

¶ 27. Where in a bill for an accounting it appears that complainant had demanded an accounting, but that defendant had furnished no statement or bill for services until the hearing, defendant is not entitled to interest.—Myers v. Radford, 167 Mich. 135, aff'd in 231 U. S. 725, 58 L. ed. 454, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

§ 9. Claims for goods sold.

¶ 28. In assumpsit for goods sold and delivered where it may be assumed that the sale was for cash, if payment was not made interest should be allowed.—Knapp v. Hubbard, 176 Mich. 264.

¶ 29. Comp. L. 1897, § 4866, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2874, providing that in all actions founded on contracts express or implied, whenever, in the execution thereof, any amount in money shall be liquidated or ascertained in form of either party "by verdict, report of referees, award of arbitrators, or by any other mode of assessment according to law," interest may be received upon such "amount so ascertained or liquidated, until payment thereof, or until judgment shall be thereupon rendered; and in making up and recording such judgment, the interest on such amount may be added thereto and included in the judgment," was designed to meet instances where an interval may have occurred between liquidation by special means, and the making up of a judgment thereon, and does not apply so as to authorize interest on the amount found due for lumber sold from the date of shipment to the date of rendition of the verdict.—Herman H. Hettler Lumber Co. v. Olds, 242 Fed. 456.

§ 10. Demands against public.

Right of county or officer to interest on public deposits, see Counties § 40.

¶ 30. Interest upon school-district orders is denied on granting a mandamus to compel payment, there being no authority to impose it.—Turnbull v. Alpena Township Board of Education, 45 Mich. 496.

¶ 31. Interest from the time of demand may be allowed in granting mandamus for the payment of a school order, when it is such a settled demand as would sustain a recovery of interest at law.—Martin v. Tripp, 51 Mich. 184.

¶ 32. A township is not liable for interest on damages appraised for laying out a highway.—People ex rel. Anderson v. La Grange, 2 Mich. 187.

¶ 33. Where city orders for work done under paving contracts contain no promise to pay interest, and are payable out of a particular fund, interest cannot be allowed, especially where the amount of the orders has been paid and accepted.—Talbot v. Bay City Common Council, 71 Mich. 118.

§ 11. Judgments and decrees bearing interest.

Interest on costs, see post § 12.
General law of judgments, see Judgments.
Computation of interest from rendition of judgment, see post § 29.
Necessity for certainty in statement of amount of interest in verdict or judgment, see Judgments, II.
Amendment of verdict to include interest omitted by mistake of jury, see Verdict, V.
As element of recovery on appeal bond, see Appeal, XVI.
Allowance of interest as damages for dilatory appeal, see Costs § 127.
Proper interest allowable in action on foreign judgment, see Foreign Judgments § 16.
Statutory provisions for interest on judgments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5997 et seq.
Statutory provision for interest on decrees and judgments, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 20, Comp. L. 1915, § 12835.

¶ 34. Comp. L. 1871, § 6087, How. St. § 7672, permitting interest upon judgments, applies also to decrees.—Warner v. Juif, 38 Mich. 662.

¶ 35. Interest from date of forfeiture cannot be included in judgment upon forfeited recognizance.—People v. Hanaw, 106 Mich. 421.

¶ 36. Where a mortgage payable ten years after date was to bear interest at seven per cent for the first two years, and after that ten per cent, and where, before the first two years had expired the payee elected under the interest clause in the mortgage to treat the entire amount as due, a decree entered upon the day after the two years expired should bear interest at seven per cent.—Shelden v. Barlow, 108 Mich. 375.

¶ 37. The statute providing for interest on judgments and decrees for money at 7 per cent, which was enacted in 1838, and was carried forward, with amendments, in various compilations and appears as Comp. L. 1897, § 4865, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2873, was not repealed by a statute passed in 1891 to regulate the interest of money on account and interest on money judgments and fixing the "interest of money" at 6 per cent unless a higher rate not exceeding 8 per cent was stipulated for in writing.—Union Steamboat Co. v. Erie & Western Transportation Co., 189 U. S. 363, 47 L. ed. 854, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504; affirming 108 Fed. 102.

¶ 38. Rev. St. 1838, chap. 6, § 8, as amended in 1855, providing that interest on judgments at law for the recovery of any sums of money, and upon all decrees in chancery for the payment of any sums of money may be allowed and received, and such interest may be collected on execution at the rate of seven per cent per annum, provided that on a judgment rendered on a written instrument bearing a different rate, the interest shall be computed at the rate specified in such instrument, not exceeding ten per cent, was not repealed by Pub. Acts 1891, p. 197, entitled an act "to regulate the interest of money on account, interest on money judgments, verdicts, etc.," and providing that "the interest of money" shall be six per cent except that a greater rate not exceeding eight per cent may be stipulated for in writing, and repealing all acts inconsistent therewith.—The New York, 108 Fed. 102; affirmed in 189 U. S. 363, 47 L. ed. 854, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504.

§ 12. ——Interest on costs.

Law of costs in general, see Costs.

¶ 39. On affirmance of a justice's judgment on certiorari, costs in the suit before the justice are treated as part of the judgment, and interest is allowed thereon (Comp. L. 1871, § 1635, How St. § 1597).—Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25.

¶ 40. In suits between individuals the prevailing party is entitled to interest upon the costs awarded in his favor from the date of the judgment or decree.—Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Board of State Auditors, 102 Mich. 500.

¶ 41. Under the general provisions of the statute relating to interest the state is not liable for interest on demands; but under How. St. §§ 7756, 8984, which indicate an intention to subject the state to the same liability for costs and for the incidents of a judgment as an individual is subject to, with a single exception relating to the method of collection of the demand, the prevailing party in a suit brought by the state is entitled to interest upon the costs awarded in his favor from the date of the decree.—Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. State Auditors, 102 Mich. 500.

¶ 42. Under U. S. Rev. Stats., § 966, authorizing interest on judgments in civil cases recovered in the circuit or district court where the laws of the state in which the court is held permits of it, and Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4865, 10308, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 2873, 13011, which authorize interest on costs from the date of judgment until they are taxed, in an action by a city against a paving contractor and his surety on a bond indemnifying the city against loss on account of the claimed infringement of a paving patent to recover costs in the federal district court paid after a judgment in favor of the patentee in the court of appeals reversing the judgment of the district court, upon taxation thereof, held, that the city was entitled to interest on the costs from date of the judgment in the district court and not simply from the date of taxation thereof.—City of Owosso v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 192 Mich. 122.

§ 13. Waiver, loss or bar to right.

Waiver or loss of right to compound interest, see post § 36.

Loss of interest through charging of unlawful rate, see Usury.

¶ 43. On a bill in aid of execution against land which had been sold in contemplation of the issue of execution interest claimed to have been paid by an execution purchaser upon a mortgage from which he redeemed was not allowed, his use of the land being enough to counterbalance it.—Rhead v. Hounson, 46 Mich. 243.

¶ 44. Interest was not allowed a claimant against a fund where the fund really consisted of property of which the claimant was in possession and enjoyment, and where, as against other claimants, the allowance would be inequitable as lessening their chance of payment.—Cicotte v. Stebbins, 49 Mich. 631.

¶ 45. Interest is not stopped by a bill of interpleader improperly filed.—Michigan & Ohio Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

¶ 46. Where a complainant is decreed rent for premises not delivered to him according to agreement, he cannot be relieved from interest on unpaid purchase money.—Covell v. Cole, 16 Mich. 223.

§ 14. Payment or tender to stop interest.
Excuse for nonpayment of principal, see post § 15.
Sufficiency of payment or tender in general, see Payment, I.
Payment of interest due as nugatory consideration, see Contracts § 123.
Application of payments in excess of interest, see Payment, III.
Payment into court by garnishee to obtain release, see Garnishment § 117.

¶ 47. A sufficient tender stops interest.—Cowles v. Marble, 37 Mich. 158; Jones v. Shaw, 56 Mich. 332.

¶ 48. A sufficient deposit made with the register of deeds as a preliminary to filing a bill to redeem from an irregular foreclosure stopped interest when redemption was contested.—Sager v. Tupper, 35 Mich. 134.

¶ 49. A life insurance company is properly allowed to cut off interest upon the amount of an insurance policy by paying it into court to abide the result of a pending contest where it has no concern except to pay to the person entitled.—Lilley v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 153.

§ 15. ——Excuse for nonpayment of principal.

¶ 50. The nonresidence of a mortgagee is not alone sufficient to relieve the mortgagor from the payment of subsequently accrued interest where he had an opportunity to pay off the mortgage when due and for a time afterwards before mortgagee became a nonresident.—Adams v. Greig, 126 Mich. 582.

¶ 51. The mortgagor of a past due mortgage is not relieved from paying later accruing interest by the fact of having written after maturity for instructions where to pay it to which no reply was received, and the fact that mortgagee was out of the state.—Adams v. Greig, 126 Mich. 582.

¶ 51a. Complainant in a suit to redeem, being unable to find defendant, tendered to his son in the presence of his solicitor the amount due. The son was authorized to inform complainant that his father would not execute a deed until he had received a receipt in full of all demands, and such statement was made in the presence of defendant's solicitor. Held, that the tender was sufficient to excuse complainant from paying interest upon the amount after that date.—Crawford v. Osmun, 94 Mich. 533.

B. STIPULATIONS IN CONTRACT.

§ 16. In general.
Necessity for demand, see post § 17.
Construction of contract terms, see post § 18.
Forbearance as consideration for agreement to pay interest on interest, see Contracts § 113, ¶ 474.
Loan above charter rate as ultra vires contract, see Corporations ¶ 277.
On building association loans, see Building Associations § 11.
Interest as measure of damages on money contracts, see Damages § 52.

¶ 52. A provision in a promissory note drawing no interest if paid at maturity, for the payment of interest at ten per cent at its date if not so paid, is enforceable where the note was given for property sold at those terms.—Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 Mich. 305.

¶ 53. A note given for the balance due, with interest, on a land contract not drawing interest, on an understanding that the question of the liability to pay interest shall nevertheless remain open, is without consideration as to such interest.—Jennison v. Stone, 33 Mich. 99.

¶ 54. Where recovery is had upon a contract, interest may properly be allowed according to its terms, even though it does not appear that defendant had been notified of the performance of the contract.—Tower v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 34 Mich. 328.

¶ 55. Accumulated interest on a principal note was not recoverable, where it appeared that plaintiff had assigned to defendant a certain note and mortgage, and defendant had agreed to pay such interest out of the first moneys paid as interest on said note, but where no interest was ever paid, as the mortgage was foreclosed by the defendant and less was realized than the principal due.—Collins v. Gordon, 122 Mich. 665.

¶ 56. The allowance of interest on a claim for settlement does not imply a contract to allow it thereafter.—University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

§ 17. Necessity for demand.
Institution of suit as demand, see post ¶ 98.
Necessity of demand for reserved interest, see Contracts § 232, ¶ 959.

¶ 57. Where interest is due by contract at a fixed time, without any conditions, and is unpaid, no special demand is necessary.—Regents of University of Michigan v. Detroit Young Men's Soc., 12 Mich. 138.

§ 18. Construction of contract terms.
Construction of terms of contract as to rate of interest, see post ¶ 72.

¶ 58. An obligation reciting that there is a certain balance due, "and interest," bears interest.—Spring v. Perkins, 156 Mich. 327.

¶ 59. Where the complainant's intestate furnished funds for the purchase of land under a written agreement by which the defendant was entitled to a one-third interest therein on payment of that proportion of the costs, taxes and charges, together with annual interest on the investment, simple interest only is chargeable against him, notwithstanding that on many similar contracts he had paid compound interest without objection.—Boeing v. Fordney, 184 Mich. 153.

¶ 60. A note made payable several years after its date with annual interest calls for payment of interest every year during the time it has to run.—Cook v. Wiles, 42 Mich. 439.

¶ 61. Complainant agreed to buy defendant's farm and to pay $1,750 down; to pay "$1,550 on November 1, 1907, with interest on $1,300 thereof, payable at Mutual Home and Savings Association, at $6.70 per month, together with interest on the remainder of the whole sum that shall be from time to time unpaid, at the rate of six per cent per annum, to be computed from April 1, 1907, and to be paid November 1, 190'." An arrangement was made for complainant to exchange in this deal his city house and lot, covered by a mortgage upon which complainant made monthly payments of interest, to the said Mutual Home and Savings Association. The court having found complainant in default in his suit for specific performance, held, that $6.70 monthly interest was payable on the $1,300.—Welling v. Strickland, 161 Mich. 235.

¶ 62. An agreement to allow interest on payments on a note that was not all paid meant no more than that interest would cease from the date of payment.—Foley v. Comstock, 122 Mich. 349.

¶ 63. Where three electric roads were sold for $1,400,000 payable in bonds bearing interest at 5 per cent and the construction and equipment of some of the roads were incomplete but the vendor and guarantors agreed to "complete and finish" the same in accordance with certain specifications at an expense not to exceed a fixed amount, and deposited bonds with a trustee "as a guarantee of the fulfillment of the work" and in case of failure then the vendee might finish the work and charge same to the vendors and might take from the trustee sufficient funds "to fully cover the costs of such completion," and the purchaser later took upon itself the completion of the work at a cost agreed upon by the parties in interest, exclusive of interest upon moneys expended, the purchasers were entitled to interest upon the amounts advanced for the cost of completion, inasmuch as the contract words "to fully cover the cost of such completion" must be construed to mean interest as well as advancements, in spite of the fact that the account for these advancements were unliquidated in the sense that they were required to be proved or admitted.—Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 144 Mich. 106.

¶ 64. Where the trust company holding certain bonds as trustee for the performance of the completion of an electric road which had been sold, had been appointed receiver of a bank which held a claim to the vendor's interest in the bonds deposited, had written a letter to the vendee expressing an opinion that the bonds should be turned into money and in consideration of the vendee's assent thereto to allow interest "at the rate of 5 per cent upon any and all sums expended by you in the fulfillment of the work designated and described in the said contract and loan, and which may be determined to be proper charges against said bonds and the proceeds thereof," such letter indicates an understanding that the payment should be made in bonds, and that interest at the rate provided in the bonds would be equivalent to payment in bonds, and the fact that the next day the vendee replied that it saw no objection to the sale of the bonds and holding the proceeds in lieu of the bonds is not a waiver of its right to be paid interest or the equivalent thereof.—Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 144 Mich. 106.

¶ 65. Where the buyer and the seller of several pieces of machinery enter into an agreement, whereby the buyer is given seven months in which to test one machine and return, if unsatisfactory, and it is provided that all unpaid portions of the purchase price shall be paid with interest at 7 per cent from date, and an additional clause provides that the notes for the particular piece of machinery, subject to test are to remain unexecuted until the expiration of the seven months, the seller is entitled to recover 7 per cent interest upon all moneys due from the date of the original agreement.—James Leffel & Co. v. Platt, 126 Mich. 443.

II. RATE, COMPUTATION AND RECOVERY.

§ 19. Rate of interest.

Interest on chattel mortgages, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6031 et seq.
Rate of interest on notes or contracts payable out of state, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6002 et seq.

¶ 66. Under statute interest can be implied at seven per cent, but not at ten.—Eaton v. Truesdail, 40 Mich. 1.

¶ 67. Interest cannot be allowed at ten per cent on an accounting if there has been no written agreement for that rate.—Godfrey v. White, 43 Mich. 171; University of Michigan v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

¶ 68. Ten per cent interest must be stipulated for in writing.—Eaton v. Truesdail, 40 Mich. 1; Nelson v. Dutton, 51 Mich. 416; Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Ruggles, 51 Mich. 474.

¶ 69. Whether any liability arises from a parol ratification of an oral agreement that the interest clause in a note may be so changed as to lengthen the period for which ten per cent interest shall be paid, quære.—Nelson v. Dutton, 51 Mich. 416.

¶ 70. There is nothing to prevent parties to a note from allowing back interest upon the debt at the same rate that would be lawful for the future.—Graham v. Chubb, 39 Mich. 417.

§ 20. ——When legal rate applies.

Legal rate governing instruments made in one state and payable in another, see Conflict of Laws ¶¶ 51, 52.
Legal rate of interest, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5997.

¶ 71. Seven per cent is the highest per cent that can be awarded on an accounting unless there is an express contract for a higher rate, or some special reason in the case for exacting more.—Henderson v. Sherman, 47 Mich. 267.

¶ 72. If no rate of interest is fixed in a note payable "with interest," seven per cent is collectible (Act 138 of 1887 fixes the rate at six per cent unless another rate not higher than ten per cent is specified).—First Nat. Bank v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432.

§ 21. ——After maturity of debt.

¶ 73. Interest at the contract rate is allowed as well after as before the maturity of the debt.—Warner v. Juif, 38 Mich. 662.

¶ 74. A bank may take a seven per cent mortgage for a debt due, though its charter prohibits it from taking more than six per cent per annum in advance on its loans or discounts.—Bailey v. Murphy, W. 424.

§ 22. Terms of contract.

Construction of contract terms, see ante § 18.
Terms of contract authorizing compound interest, see post § 33.

¶ 75. Where a mortgage provides that the mortgagor shall pay interest "at the rate of six per cent if the mortgagee pays the taxes, or otherwise if the mortgagor pays all taxes assessed on the mortgage, to be computed at five and one-half per cent," the mortgagee is entitled to interest at six per cent where no assessment whatever is made upon the mortgage.—Rauch v. Seip, 112 Mich. 612.

¶ 76. A mortgage note, payable ten years after date, bore interest at the rate of seven per cent for the first two years, after which it was to bear ten per cent interest. Before the two years had expired, the payee elected, under the interest clause in the mortgage, to treat the entire amount of the note as due. Held, that a foreclosure decree, entered upon the day following the expiration of the two-year period, should bear interest at the rate of seven per cent.—Shelden v. Barlow, 108 Mich. 375.

¶ 77. Where ten per cent interest is exacted the rate need not be expressly stated in writing; it is enough if the contract clearly expresses the sum to be paid.—Cameron v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Bank of Detroit, 37 Mich. 240.

¶ 78. A mortgagee may stipulate for ten per cent interest as a condition to extending time of payment, and if paid and applied as interest the application will not be disturbed.—Havens v. Jones, 45 Mich. 253.

¶ 78a. A mortgagee is estopped from charging 8 per cent interest on the mortgage debt after maturity though the mortgage provided for 8 per cent upon all overdue interest or principal from the time of maturity, where two years after the mortgage became due he furnished a statement in which the rate was computed at 7 per cent, which statement was objected to because of certain charges for disbursements, and he was asked to furnish "a correct statement of the amount due eliminating such items," and such corrected statement was later furnished with the interest again computed at 7 per cent.—Barnard v. Paterson, 137 Mich. 633.

§ 23. Change of rate.

¶ 79. An oral promise without consideration to reduce the rate of interest specified in the mortgage is invalid.—Harris v. Creveling, 80 Mich. 249; Tousey v. Moore, 79 Mich. 564.

¶ 80. An agreement in writing made with the mortgagee, by a purchaser from the mortgagor, to pay a higher rate of interest after due, in consideration of forbearance, is valid.—Smith v. Graham, 34 Mich. 302.

¶ 81. Courts possess no power, legal or equitable, to change contracts as to the rate of interest, fixed by the parties within the statutory limit, no fraud or misrepresentation being charged.—Curtiss v. Sheldon, 91 Mich. 390.

¶ 82. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 1632, How. St. § 1594, fixing the rate of interest at seven per cent, but making it lawful for parties to stipulate in writing for the payment of any rate not exceeding ten per cent per annum, the rate of interest in a note can be changed from seven to ten per cent, if at all, only by a stipulation in writing.—Swift v. Barber, 28 Mich. 503.

¶ 83. A writing signed by the payee in a note then past due, and bearing interest at 10 per cent, by which the payee agrees to let the maker "have all the money at 8 per cent," may be well construed to be an open proposition to the maker to retain the money, at least until further demand, at the reduced rate of interest, and, when acted upon by the maker, the payee cannot be permitted to exact a greater rate.—Vereycken v. Vanden Brooks, 102 Mich. 119.

§ 24. Rates of discount.

Loans and discounts in general, see Banking § 43.
Interest chargeable by banks in loans, discounts and rediscounts, see Banking §§ 43, 44.
Lawful discount rates in banking, see also Banking § 43.
Rate allowable to bank on mortgage loans as distinguished from ordinary loans and discounts, see Banking § 43.
Computation of interest on specific bequests and general legacies, see Wills, VI.

¶ 84. Ten per cent interest for discounts on loans can be taken under the general banking law (Comp. L. 1871, § 2185, How. St. § 3138).—Cameron v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Bank of Detroit, 37 Mich. 240.

§ 25. Computation and accrual.

Computation from date of demand, see post § 26.
From time of default, see post § 27.
From commencement of suit or action, see post § 28.
From rendition of judgment, decree or order, see post § 29.

Date from which computed on negotiable instruments which do not specify date, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6058.

¶ 85. Interest upon an account stated is allowable from the time of statement.—Graham v. Myers, 67 Mich. 277.

¶ 86. When a payment of principal is not equal to the interest due at the time the payment is made, the interest is to be computed at the time when the payment shall be equal to all the accrued interest; or if there has been no such payment, then to the time of liquidation.—Payne v. Avery, 21 Mich. 524.

¶ 87. In foreclosure interest on the mortgage bonds should be allowed only from the date when they were delivered to the owners and holders of them.—Washburn v. Green, 133 U. S. 30, 33 L. ed. 516.

¶ 88. Where money is paid under a contract for legal services and a subsequent agreement is made whereby a smaller sum is allowed for such services, and the amount given in excess of such sum is to be repaid, interest should be allowed on the amount to be repaid only from the time of such subsequent agreement and it is improper to allow interest from the time when the money was paid under the contract.—Nelson v. Stewart, 174 Mich. 127.

¶ 89. Where notes which are secured by a mortgage fall due at different dates each must be treated as a separate debt for purposes of computation of interest.—Lowe v. Schuyler, 187 Mich. 528.

§ 26. ——Computation from date of demand.

¶ 90. Where credit is given for a specified period, without any agreement as to interest, interest is not allowable until the term of credit has expired. And if the term of credit is for an indefinite time, interest is not allowable until after demand of payment.—Beardslee v. Horton, 3 Mich. 560.

¶ 91. Where a note is payable "on demand after date" with interest at a specified rate "after maturity," interest does not begin to run thereon until demand is made for payment.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 92. Where a demand note was renewed by indorsement to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, demand is regarded as made at the date of such indorsement. —In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 93. Where an administrator by bill demands property held by a defendant, and claimed by her under an alleged gift inter vivos, interest is allowed only from the date of demand upon her by the administrator. —Chamberlain v. Eddy, 154 Mich. 593.

§ 27. ——From time of default.

¶ 94. Interest may be recovered from time of default on moneys due under a contract requiring monthly payment.—Manistee Nav. Co. v. Filer, 185 Mich. 302.

¶ 95. Where a promise is made to pay in labor and material in annual payments, interest does not begin to run until the year is completed in which any given payment is to be made, and the debtor is in default.— Fredenburg v. Turner, 37 Mich. 402.

§ 28. ——From commencement of suit or action.

¶ 96. Interest upon an obligation may run from the beginning of suit if the date of a previous demand for payment is not shown. —Brion v. Kennedy, 47 Mich. 499.

¶ 97. In an action upon an insurance policy it is proper to compute interest upon the amount of the loss from the date of commencement of suit, and to add such interest to the amount of such loss in making up the verdict.—Marthinson v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 372.

¶ 98. Where a note is payable "on demand after date" with interest at a specified rate "after maturity" institution of suit is a sufficient demand to commence the running of interest.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 99. Where a certificate of deposit provides for the payment of interest if the deposit is left for a stated time, and suit is brought upon the certificate before the expiration of said period and without previous demand, interest should only be allowed from the date of the commencement of suit.—Beardsley v. Webber, 104 Mich. 88.

¶ 100. Where in a proceeding to enforce a vendor's lien, the bill stated inability of complainant to give the amount of interest and it was not clear as to the amount of interest to be paid, interest from the date of filing the bill was allowed.—Kulling v. Kulling, 124 Mich. 56.

§ 29. ——From rendition of judgment, decree or order.

Interest on judgments, see ante § 11.

Right to interest on costs from date of judgment, see also ante ¶ 42.

Necessity for certainty in statement of amount of interest in verdict or judgment, see Judgments, II.

¶ 101. Where a report on an order of reference must be confirmed before a decree can be carried into effect, interest runs from the date of confirmation.—Match v. Hunt, 38 Mich. 1.

¶ 102. Upon a judgment for costs in favor of one who has appealed from the probate of a will interest runs from the date of rendition.—Hayden v. Hefferen, 99 Mich. 262.

¶ 103. Under a contract of indemnity against liability for personal injury or death caused by the operation of street cars, the judgment in the supreme court, and not that in the circuit court, fixed the time of liability, and therefore interest was only chargeable from the date of the supreme court judgment, in an action on the contract to recover the amount of a judgment rendered against the assured.—Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 135 Mich. 189.

§ 30. ——Suspension during pendency of suit.

¶ 104. Prior to commencing a suit to foreclose a contract as a mortgage, complainant, claiming to own the premises in question, had instituted summary proceedings to recover possession, but was defeated, the court holding that the relation of the parties was that of mortgagor and mortgagee. Held, that the defendant in the foreclosure suit, not having tendered the amount due, was not entitled to a suspension of interest during the pendency of the former suit.—Anderson v. Smith, 108 Mich. 69.

¶ 105. A creditor of an insolvent corporation is equitably entitled to interest upon a dividend payable to him from the date of the order directing the dividend, where payment has been delayed by an unsuccessful contest by the receiver.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Vaughan, 115 Mich. 156.

¶ 106. Interest upon interest is not authorized by How. St. § 1599 for the period during which payment is suspended by litigation to determine title to the land, pending which the rate of interest is reduced by agreement.—Jones v. Shaw, 56 Mich. 332.

§ 31. Computation in case of partial payments.

Statutory provisions relating to interest upon instalments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6001.

¶ 107. The rule adopted in this state for the computation of interest in case of partial payments is to apply the payment in discharge of the matured interest, and the surplus, if any, upon the principal, after which interest is computed on the new principal; but if the accrued interest exceeds the payment, the surplus must not be added to the principal, but interest will be computed on the former principal until the aggregate payments exceed the interest due, when the surplus will be applied upon the principal, after which interest will be computed on the new principal.—Wallace v. Glaser, 82 Mich. 190.

¶ 108. Where moneys paid out by one of two parties having dealings together but not as partners, in their various transactions including taxes paid upon lands held in common, were to be considered as payments upon amounts owed to the other, upon settlement interest upon the several items should be computed on the partial payment rule.—Gay v. Berkey, 137 Mich. 658.

§ 32. Compound interest.

Right to compound interest against fraudulent trustee, see Trusts, XI.
Allowance of compound interest on partnership accounting for wrongful refusal to account, see Partnership, VII.
Right to compound interest against guardian, see Guardianship ¶ 255.

¶ 109. Interest cannot be compounded by virtue of any provision in the obligation on which it accrues, in the absence of any statute providing for it.—Hoyle v. Page, 41 Mich. 533.

¶ 110. Past-due instalments of interest do not, certainly not without the debtor's express agreement, draw interest.—Van Husan v. Kanouse, 13 Mich. 303.

¶ 111. A valid written agreement may be made to pay interest upon interest after the indebtedness becomes due, in consideration of forbearance.—Lowe v. Schuyler, 187 Mich. 526.

¶ 112. Comp. L. 1897, § 4859, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2874, authorizing interest upon interest in certain cases does not include verbal contracts.—Lowe v. Schuyler, 187 Mich. 526.

¶ 113. Interest upon a note the entire principal of which matures at a given date runs from the date of the note until paid, and cannot be added to the principal at maturity as in the case of a note payable in instalments.—Buchtel v. Mason, 67 Mich. 605.

¶ 114. In granting specific performance to a vendee in a land contract who has been in default in his payments, a court of equity may require him to pay compound interest if justice demands it.—Richards v. White, 44 Mich. 622.

¶ 115. How. St. § 1599, authorizing interest upon past-due instalments of interest at the rate specified in the contract, does not apply where there is no written agreement as to interest.—Clapp v. Galloway, 56 Mich. 272.

¶ 116. A vendee who seeks specific performance after default in paying instalments of principal and interest will be required to pay interest on the instalments of interest from the time they fell due.—Morris v. Hoyt, 11 Mich. 9.

¶ 117. Annual rests directed in adjusting accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee, and interest computed on each item of the account, where this course was found to be warranted by the practice of the parties.—Emerson v. Atwater, 12 Mich. 314.

¶ 118. Where redemption is decreed from a mortgage securing notes that bear interest payable semiannually, interest on unpaid instalments of interest should be allowed, even though the notes were dated and executed in another state.—Millard v. Truax, 73 Mich. 381.

§ 33. ——Terms of contract authorizing.

¶ 119. Where a tender of more than was due upon a mortgage was made and refused, and the mortgagor filed a bill to redeem before Laws 1869, p. 12, How. St. § 1599, took effect, the mortgagor will not be allowed, in a computation of the amount due, to compound the interest, there being no agreement, express or implied, authorizing him to do so.—Fosdick v. Van Husan, 21 Mich. 567.

¶ 120. Agreement to compound interest in their mutual dealings is not shown by the fact that in dealing with a corporation in which both parties were interested, they assented to such interest; nor does the fact that each in preparing a statement of account, adopted a different mode of computing compound interest thereon amount to an agreement to compound interest upon the basis of a valid agreement therefor made after the interest had become due.—Gay v. Berkey, 137 Mich. 658.

¶ 121. Where coupons have been detached from the bonds of a city, they are also a promise to pay a certain sum, and interest is recoverable on the sum named where not paid when due.—Hollingsworth v. Detroit, 3 McLean 472, Fed. Cas. No. 6613.

¶ 122. Where the interest on bonds of a city was made payable in the coupons to bearer, the coupons passed by delivery which was intended to give them currency, and being a promise interest is allowed under the Michigan statute, providing that in all actions founded on contracts where any amount shall be ascertained in favor of either party it shall be lawful to receive and allow interest until payment thereof.—Hollingsworth v. Detroit, 3 McLean 472, Fed. Cas. No. 6613.

§ 34. ——Interest on interest in default or arrears.

¶ 123. An interest clause in a bond provided that "in case any sum of principal or interest shall not be paid when due the obligators shall pay interest thereon, at the rate of ten per cent per annum, during all the time the same may remain overdue and unpaid." Held, that this did not authorize the compounding of interest; unpaid principal or interest would draw interest until paid, but without rests.—Morgan v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 57 Mich. 430.

¶ 124. Where, by the terms of a written contract, interest is payable by instalments at fixed periods, and separate from the principal, How. St. § 1599 allows simple interest on each instalment at the contract rate until paid; but where no interest is payable until the principal becomes due, no interest will be allowed except on the principal.—Hoyle v. Page, 41 Mich. 533; Voigt v. Beller, 56 Mich. 140; Rix v. Strauts, 59 Mich. 364; Buchtel v. Mason, 67 Mich. 605.

¶ 125. Interest cannot be allowed on past-due interest in the case of an obligation payable at a future date "with interest."—Hoyle v. Page, 41 Mich. 533; Voigt v. Beller, 56 Mich. 140; Rix v. Strauts, 59 Mich. 364; Buchtel v. Mason, 67 Mich. 605.

¶ 126. After interest has accrued a promise to pay interest upon it may be valid, and interest may perhaps be recovered upon separate or several contracts for future interest to become due at a certain time, such as coupons attached to negotiable paper.—Hoyle v. Page, 41 Mich. 533.

§ 35. ——Limitations upon right.

¶ 127. An agreement before interest becomes due to compound it is void and unenforceable.—Gay v. Berkey, 137 Mich. 658

¶ 128. Computation of interest on interest can only continue until the debt matures and from that time simple interest must be cast upon the principal until the time of liquidation under Comp. L. 1897, § 4859, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 2874.—Lowe v. Schuyler, 187 Mich. 526.

¶ 129. Under How. St. § 1599, allowing interest to be computed upon interest after it matures, such computation can continue only until the debt matures, after which simple interest is to be cast upon the principal until the time of liquidation.—McVicar v. Denison, 81 Mich. 348; Wallace v. Glaser, 82 Mich. 190.

§ 36. ——Waiver or loss of right to compound interest.

Waiver, loss or bar of right to interest, see ante § 13.

¶ 130. Interest upon interest is waived where, without insisting on its payment, simple interest is accepted.—Wetherbee v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 359.

¶ 131. A mortgage discharged by mistake will not be reinstated to secure an extortionate sum made up by semiannual computations of compound interest.—Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 Mich. 138.

§ 37. Recovery in suits and actions.

Recovery permitted in usurious contract, see Usury.

Usury as defense, see Usury, II.

Recovery of usurious interest voluntarily paid, see Usury, II.

Amendment of verdict to include interest omitted by mistake of jury, see Verdicts, V.

¶ 132. Where the evidence was conflicting as to whether the sum of $25 paid when an extension was given but receipted for as "interest" had not been given as a bonus for the extension because the loan drew no interest, although running sixty days, a charge to allow in such case out of this sum ten per cent interest during the running to maturity of the note securing the loan was not error.—Briggs v. Norris, 67 Mich. 325.

¶ 1. An instrument not stamped at the time of execution was stamped afterwards by the collector of internal revenue, who appended a certificate as required by the act of congress of 1866. Held, that the instrument was properly stamped, and no inquiry could be gone into of the propriety of the collector's action.—Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 380.

¶ 2. The provision of the internal revenue law requiring internal revenue stamps to be affixed to an instrument before an action can be maintained thereon is applicable only to Federal courts and not to State courts.—Amos-Richia v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 684.

General law of equity procedure and equitable rights, see Equity.

¶ 1. A bill of interpleader is a bill filed for the protection of a person from whom several persons claim legally or equitably the same thing, debt or duty, but who has incurred no independent liability to any of them, and does not himself claim an interest in the matter; and it will not lie where complainant has incurred an independent liability under an express agreement with some of the defendants.—Sprague v. Soule, 35 Mich. 35.

¶ 2. A bill of interpleader lies only where complainant is, in good faith, and without collusion or fault, so placed that he cannot safely decide between adverse claimants of a fund or right under his control. It is only upheld upon full merits.—Michigan & Ohio Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

¶ 3. A bill of interpleader is not the proper proceeding to enable a township treasurer to determine the right to the amount of specific drain taxes assessed against particular pieces of property and paid under protest, where the several property owners on the one hand claim that the taxes are illegal and should be refunded, and, on the other, those individuals who have received township orders against the specific sums so paid, but whose interests are not themselves conflicting, present their orders to the township treasurer to be cashed.—Wallace v. Sortor, 52 Mich. 159.

¶ 4. A bill alleged that on a certain date complainant, as bailee of defendant Hughes, had an automobile in its possession on which it had a lien; that defendant Cotter replevied the same, sold the machine, paid complainant the amount of his lien, and kept the surplus; and that defendant Hughes had sued complainant in trover for the machine. The bill asked that the surplus money be paid into court and a decree entered determining to whom the money belonged, and that the suits at law against complainant be enjoined. Held, such bill was one of strict interpleader, and not a bill in the nature of an interpleader.—Grant Bros. Auto Co. v. Cotter, 161 Mich. 521.

Interpleader in garnishment proceedings, statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 13149.

¶ 5. Courts of equity are generally very liberal in protecting mere naked trustees or stakeholders against conflicting claims.—Grand Haven School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85.

¶ 6. A party is not entitled to maintain a bill of interpleader unless it fairly appears that, without his fault, he is placed in a position where it is impossible to decide safely between two claimants.—Vogle v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 147 Mich. 333.

¶ 7. A bill of strict interpleader can only be filed by one in possession or control of the fund or thing in dispute.—Grant Bros. Auto Co. v. Cotter, 161 Mich. 521.

¶ 8. Where a deceased owner of land could not, on account of being an interested party, have maintained a bill of interpleader against his lessee's assignee and a contractual vendee, a guardian representing the heirs of the owner is in the same position.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 168 Mich. 180.

¶ 9. A special administrator who, when ordered to pay over funds in his hands to the general administrator, appeals from such order, thereby takes sides in the matter, and cannot have the general administrator and the executrix of their intestate's widow interplead to determine which estate is entitled to the funds.—Atkinson v. Flannigan, 70 Mich. 639.

¶ 10. It is not a valid objection to a bill of interpleader by a trustee sued by claimants to the trust fund, that the complainant would be completely protected by the judgments in the respective suits against it, by paying them in succession till the fund is exhausted; a mere trustee against whom two legal processes are going on at once has the most obvious equity to insist that those who claim that to which he makes no claim should settle that contest among themselves.—Grand Haven School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85.

¶ 11. It is no objection to a bill of interpleader that another suit in chancery is pending in which complainant is defendant, especially where there is more than one such suit pending in equity, besides several at law, and where such suit is one of the very grievances complained of, and neither of the pending suits could determine the rights of all parties or the right to the whole fund.—Grand Haven School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85.

¶ 12. A school district contracted for the building of a schoolhouse. After drawing large sums of money, the contractor failed, owing largely for material and labor, and it was arranged that he should be released from further liability on his contract, and that on account of work completed the district should pay a specified sum at a stated time pro rata to those to whom the contractor had given orders on the district, and to those who had claims for material and labor furnished for the building. Before the money fell due some of the materialmen began proceedings to enforce their claims as mechanics' liens against the school building and its site; others sued the contractor and garnished the district; some presented their claims to the district and demanded pay in full, and others assented to taking their pro rata share; outside creditors having procured judgments against the contractor filed judgment creditors' bill and enjoined the district from paying over the fund; and still others were threatening suits. Held that, under the circumstances, the district sustained the relation of trustee or stakeholder, holding this fund for the benefit of those entitled under the arrangement between it and the contractor, and that a bill of interpleader would lie on its behalf against those entitled to the fund, and those who had begun proceedings against the district to have their claims satisfied out of it.—Grand Haven School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85.

¶ 13. The attorney for several creditors having obtained from the debtor an assignment of certain policies of insurance then payable to him, thereupon executed a paper reciting that he was to pay from the proceeds of the claims held by him, and pay over the residue to the attorneys for certain other creditors. Before this was done he was garnished by still other creditors, but the attorneys to whom he was to pay the residue insisted that their claim thereto could not be affected by the garnishment. Held, that he could maintain a bill of interpleader against them and the other creditors to determine which was entitled to the fund.—Moore v. Barnheisel, 45 Mich. 500.

¶ 14. A bill of strict interpleader, brought by a bailee of an automobile to settle a dispute as to its ownership between the complainant's bailor and a stranger, will not lie where the bill does not show a claim of title by the claimants through a common source.—Grant Bros. Auto Co. v. Cotter, 161 Mich. 521.

¶ 15. A bill of strict interpleader alleged that on a certain date complainant had an automobile in its possession, as bailee of defendant Hughes; that defendant Cotter replevied the same, sold it, paid complainant the amount of the lien, and kept the surplus; and that defendant Hughes had sued in trover for the machine. Held, the complainant had an adequate remedy at law under Comp. L. 1897, § 10675, by means of his defense of the replevin suit and the bill would not lie.—Grant Bros. Auto Co. v. Cotter, 161 Mich. 521.

¶ 16. An owner of real estate leased the same and thereafter contracted to sell it to another person. The contractual vendee claimed that the lessee forfeited his rights under the lease by attempting to assign same and demanded of the lessor that he terminate the lease and deliver possession to the vendee in accordance with the terms of the contract. Held, said owner could not maintain a bill of interpleader against the lessee's assignee and the vendee to settle the controversy, since he was an interested party.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 168 Mich. 180.

§ 3. ——Interpleader by bank.

Rights between interpleaded claimants to bank deposits standing in two or more names, see Banking § 6.

¶ 17. Where money has been deposited in a bank payable to either of two persons, one of whom on the death of the other claims the fund, which is also claimed by decedent's executor and by a third person, the bank may file a bill of interpleader whether as to the parties interpleaded it stands as a debtor for the deposit or a bailee of the money.—People's Sav. Bank v. Look, 95 Mich. 7.

¶ 18. A bill of interpleader may be filed by a bank, where one of its depositors, after giving an order which, upon its face, only authorized his wife to draw money for him, died, and where the money was claimed both by the depositor's administrator and by the administrator of the wife, the latter claiming on the ground that the order was an assignment given under such circumstances as to transfer the title to the wife.—Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Airey, 95 Mich. 520.

Occasion and propriety of interpleader, see also ante § 1.

Claimants to bank deposits, see ante ¶¶ 17, 18.

Necessary and proper parties, see post § 5.

¶ 19. That the interest of one or more of the parties is equitable merely is no objection to interpleader.—People's Sav. Bank v. Look, 95 Mich. 7.

¶ 20. A township treasurer's bill of interpleader to determine the right of two persons who paid drain taxes under protest and then sued to recover the amount so paid will not lie, since there is no common interest in the several sums sued for.—Wallace v. Sortor, 52 Mich. 159.

¶ 21. Interpleading cannot be ordered unless the claims threatening complainant negative each other; if one cannot be legally enforced without implying the other's invalidity there is nothing to be settled by interpleader.—Moore v. Barnheisel, 45 Mich. 500.

¶ 22. It is abstractly true that a bill of interpleader will not lie where one appears to be entitled to the fund claimed to the exclusion of all others.—Grand Haven School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85.

¶ 23. An absolute identity in conflicting claims is not requisite to a bill of interpleader; where the amount claimed by all the claimants together greatly exceeds the fund against which the claims stand, it is not a valid objection to the remedy by such a bill that the several claimants do not claim from the complainant the same debt, fund or duty.—Grand Haven School Dist. No. 1 v. Weston, 31 Mich. 85.

§ 5. Necessary and proper parties.

¶ 24. A legatee is a proper party to a bill of interpleader filed by the holder of certain funds against executors and another person to determine who is entitled to the funds.—Wineman v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 320.

§ 6. Intervention and new parties.

Petition by complainant to make new parties as mark of collusion, see post ¶ 29.
Right to intervene as party in general, see Parties.

¶ 25. A bill of interpleader was filed against two persons, one of whom disclaimed any right to the fund in dispute. A stranger was afterwards admitted, on petition, to contest the interest of the remaining defendant, in which he claimed a partnership right. Held, that there was no practice which would allow him to get into the cause by petition; that bringing him in without an amendment to the bill put nothing in issue; that his claim was not one against which the bill was filed, and that the bill could not be amended so as to reach him, because it was filed to guard against known and not unknown claims.—Michigan & Ohio Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

§ 7. Payment into court and offer of equity.

Right of claimant to payment to him, see post § 8.
General law of payment of money into court and effect thereof, see Payment.

¶ 26. One who files a bill of interpleader must offer to bring into court the money or thing in controversy, and an injunction should not be granted until the offer is complied with; but the omission to make such offer does not render the bill demurrable.—Bliss v. French, 117 Mich. 538.

¶ 27. Where, upon a bill of interpleader, it is ordered that the complainant pay the fund into court for distribution pursuant to the terms of the decree, and, in default, that the bill be dismissed with costs to defendants, it is complainant's duty to comply with the order, and he cannot excuse his failure to do so upon the ground that a defendant has threatened to appeal.—Look v. McCahill, 106 Mich. 108.

§ 8. Payment over to claimant's hands.

¶ 28. Any improper delay after answer to a bill of interpleader, in preparing the cause for hearing, will authorize the party who has answered to apply for the money, if there is any fraudulent purpose or collusion.—Michigan & Ohio Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

¶ 29. It is a suspicious circumstance, if, after one of only two defendants to a bill of interpleader has disclaimed, complainant seeks for delay, and complainant's agent petitions in behalf of a stranger for leave to contest the interest of the other defendant; and an order of court that the fund remain in the register's hands, and that defendant and petitioner interplead is irregular.—Michigan & Ohio Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

§ 9. Bill and other pleadings.

Necessary allegations as to claim by defendant, see also ante ¶ 14.
Delay after answer as ground for ordering payment to claimant, see ante ¶ 28.
Verifying the bill and affidavit of noncollusion, see post § 10.
General law of equity pleadings, see Equity, VII.

¶ 30. A bill of strict interpleader should state distinctly the nature and character of the conflicting claims.—Grant Bros. Auto Co. v. Cotter, 161 Mich. 521.

¶ 31. Where complainant in an interpleader bill avers the assignment of the claim to one of the defendants, who admits it, good pleading requires that, if the other defendant means to dispute the fact, he should notice it in some way in his answer.—Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Sav. Bank, 68 Mich. 116.

¶ 32. A bill of interpleader which set up that complainants were in possession of a fund in which they claimed no interest, and to which there were two different claimants, and others asserting labor liens was held to present equities.—Bliss v. French, 117 Mich. 538.

¶ 33. A complainant administrator alleged in its bill that defendant McNamara had obtained a judgment against the estate; that complainant was ready and willing to pay such judgment; that the other defendants had served notice of their claims on the judgment money for services rendered as attorneys for defendant McNamara; that defendant McNamara and the other defendants were not agreed as to their respective rights; and that complainant could not without hazard to itself undertake to decide between the defendants. Held, the facts alleged gave equity jurisdiction of the bill as a bill of interpleader.—Michigan Trust Co. v. McNamara, 165 Mich. 200.

¶ 34. As against the demurrant to a bill of strict interpleader, the court cannot consider the allegations of the answer in support of the bill, but must determine the issue from the bill alone.—Grant Bros. Auto Co. v. Cotter, 161 Mich. 521.

§ 10. Verification.

¶ 35. A bill of interpleader sworn to by one of the two copartners who filed it, his affidavit stating: "This bill is not filed in collusion with or at the instance of any or either of the said defendants, but merely by your orator's own accord for relief," etc., shows a sufficient compliance with the rules of practice.—Bliss v. French, 117 Mich. 538.

§ 11. Judgment to interplead and further proceedings.

Decree for payment into court or dismissal of interpleader bill failing so to do, see ante ¶ 27.
Costs to interpleading parties, see Costs § 35.
Appealability of decree awarding interpleader, see Appeal § 36, ¶ 145.
Appealable interest in decree, see Appeal §§ 61, 62.
Binding force of decree in unnecessary interpleader suit, see Former Adjudication ¶ 39.

¶ 36. Entering a separate decree or order of interpleader, though the better practice, is not necessary where the decree in the bill fully settles the rights of the parties.—People's Sav. Bank v. Look, 95 Mich. 7.

¶ 37. Where it is determined on a bill of interpleader that one of only two conflicting claimants has no claim, or where the bill is taken as confessed by one, it follows that the fund indisputably belongs to the other.—Michigan & Ohio Plaster Co. v. White, 44 Mich. 25.

¶ 38. An appeal by complainant from a decree awarding the fund to one of the defendants, and not in any manner charging the complainant, is not within the rules of interpleader and has no basis to support it.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44; Atkinson v. Flannigan, 70 Mich. 639.

¶ 39. Where oral testimony indicates that a beneficiary of an insurance policy agreed with the insured to hold the proceeds in trust and distribute same to certain persons, equity will, in a bill of interpleader, determine the terms of said trust in its decree, although said beneficiary does not on the face of her answer admit a limitation upon her right to the fund.—Ladies of Modern Maccabees v. Daley, 166 Mich. 542.

§ 12. Injunction ancillary to interpleader.

Withholding injunction until payment into court, see ante ¶ 26.

¶ 40. Where an insurance company has been garnished in the circuit court of one county for moneys admitted to be due under a policy, and has subsequently been sued by an assignee of the insured in the circuit court of another county, an injunction restraining the parties from prosecuting their several suits may properly issue upon a bill of interpleader filed by the company upon the equity side of the court in which suit was first brought, and which thereby obtained jurisdiction of the question in controversy in both cases, namely, the ownership of the fund.—Hogan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 254.

¶ 41. A bill to enjoin an action at law for a real estate commission brought by one of the defendants and to compel the two defendants to interplead to determine which is entitled to the commission in question cannot be maintained where it appears that complainant made contracts with defendants different in date, in the number of acres to be sold and perhaps in the commission, since defendants are not claiming the same "thing, debt or duty," but their claims for compensation are under separate independent contracts.—Lanning v. Stiles, 176 Mich. 275.

¶ 1. In the absence of a provision in the constitution of a state restricting the power of the legislature in reference to the sale of liquor, the legislature has the power to regulate the mode, manner, and circumstances under which the liquor traffic may be conducted, and to surround the right to pursue it with such conditions, restrictions and limitations as it may deem proper.—People v. Schafran, 168 Mich. 324.

¶ 2. Under its comprehensive police power the legislature may authorize the city council by charter to determine, in licensing sale of intoxicating liquors, place where saloon may be kept.—Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 198.

¶ 3. The regulation or suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors is within the police powers of the state or municipality.—Fuchs v. Common Council Village of Grass Lake, 166 Mich. 569.

¶ 4. The state in the exercise of the police power may regulate or prohibit the manufacture and sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors within its territory.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477. Affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

¶ 5. Section 35, Act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909, providing that no license shall be issued to any one to engage in the retail liquor business who has twice been convicted of violating the liquor laws of Michigan, and that any licensee twice violating the provisions of said acts forfeits his license, is not unconstitutional as disturbing a vested property right, but is a proper exercise of the police power by the state.—People v. Schafran, 168 Mich. 324.

II. CLASSIFICATION OF DEALERS AND TRAFFIC; AND TAXES AND LICENSES.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 2. Statutory classes; "dealers," "wholesalers," "saloons," etc.

Classes of taxes, see post § 8.

Taxing and licensing of "saloons" as compatible with prohibition of licenses to deal in intoxicating liquors, see post § 31.

Persons eligible to license, see post § 34.

What are intoxicating liquors and what is a sale, see post §§ 46, 47.

¶ 6. A single sale in gross of a stock of liquors does not make one a dealer; and, therefore, such a sale by one who has not paid a tax as a wholesale dealer is not illegal so as to invalidate a note given for the price.—Overall v. Bezeau, 37 Mich. 506.

¶ 7. Where a person furnishes three glasses of liquor at the request of an officer, and three glasses at the request of another person, such sales are sufficient to constitute him a dealer, or a person engaged in the business of selling liquor at retail.—People v. North, 153 Mich. 612. (Minority opinion of Hooker and Montgomery, JJ., and Grant, C. J.)

¶ 8. A sheriff, in making a sale of intoxicating liquors under an execution, is not "engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors" within the liquor law. (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313.)—Wildermuth v. Cole, 77 Mich. 483.

¶ 9. "Wholesaler" does not include a manufacturer who keeps his goods at the place of manufacture for the purpose of sale when receiving orders.—People v. Voorhis, 131 Mich. 398.

¶ 10. A manufacturer of brewed or malt liquors who sells his product at the brewery is not a wholesaler within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, § 5379, providing a tax on the business of selling such liquors at wholesale.—People v. Voorhis, 131 Mich. 398.

¶ 13. A wholesale dealer is defined by the dictionaries as one who sells in large quantities to dealers rather than to customers.—People v. Cain, 171 Mich. 279.

¶ 14. Under Act No. 170, Pub. Acts of 1911, § 1, providing that wholesale dealers cannot sell liquor in less quantities than three gallons, and from the definition of the word "wholesale," a dealer who sells beer in single pints, even though to be consumed off the premises, cannot be said to be selling at wholesale.—People v. Cain, 171 Mich. 279.

¶ 15. It is a matter for the legislature to determine whether the definition of a "wholesaler" of liquor, as laid down in Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, gives too wide a latitude to the sales of liquor that a wholesaler may make, and it is not a matter for the courts.—Boos v. Scudder, 163 Mich. 678.

¶ 16. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, subd. 7, the word "saloon" refers to places where persons come to buy drinks of liquor to be drunk in said places.—Boos v. Scudder, 163 Mich. 678.

¶ 17. A room in a hotel or tavern set apart for the sale of intoxicating liquors at retail is a saloon within Comp. L. 1897, § 2769, subd. 7, authorizing villages by ordinance to suppress saloons for the sale of intoxicating liquors and license taverns.—Rattenbury v. Common Council of Village of Northville, 122 Mich. 158.

¶ 18. A social club which distributes liquors among its members, receiving pay therefor as distributed by the glass, the proceeds going into the club treasury to be used in purchasing other liquors or in paying expenses, is required to pay a liquor tax as a retail dealer.—People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250.

¶ 19. Domestic purposes in contemplation of Pub. Acts 1909, No. 291, § 2, as amended by Pub. Acts 1912 (Second Extra Session), No. 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 5056, providing that no tax shall be required from any person for the manufacture or sale of wine or cider made from fruits for domestic purposes, are purposes relating to or belonging to the home or household, or its affairs.—People v. Palasz, 191 Mich. 556.

§ 3. Keepers and servants or agents of keepers.

¶ 20. A brewing company, which had paid the tax and given the bond required by law, entered into a contract by which respondent was appointed agent for the company at and in a certain township for the sale of its beer. He was to collect and remit to the company all money due for beer sold, was to pay the freight on all beer shipped to him, and the company agreed to pay him, as commission, on every barrel of beer sold by him, the difference between five dollars with the freight deducted and whatever price the beer might sell for above that amount, which was to be compensation in full for all services performed by him for the company, and which commission he was authorized to retain. The company retained title to the beer, with the right of possession, until it was sold, and all moneys received by respondent were to belong to the company. Held, that there was practically a sale of the beer to respondent, and that he was liable to pay the tax and give the bond required by law of wholesale liquor dealers.—People v. Newman, 99 Mich. 148.

¶ 21. One Forler secured a license to do business at a certain address as a saloonkeeper and while waiting to have the store at said place repaired was employed by a duly licensed saloonkeeper at another address to look after the latter's saloon. The evidence indicated that Forler was employed at said latter place merely as a manager or clerk and had nothing to do with the running of said place except in said capacity of employee. Held, mandamus brought by the prosecuting attorney to set aside an order of the trial court quashing an information against Forler for violating Act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909, in running a saloon without a license, should be denied.—Weimer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 168 Mich. 498.

B. APPLICATIONS, LICENSES, TAXES, AND BONDS.

§ 4. Requisites and sufficiency of applications.

Procedure on the application and subsequent proceedings, see post § 5 et seq.

Persons eligible for license, see post § 34.

¶ 22. An application for a retail liquor license is required by § 4, Act 291, Pub. Acts 1909 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5058), merely to state the ward, village or township in which it is proposed to carry on the business.—Gable v. Township Board of Three Oaks, 182 Mich. 659.

¶ 23. The requirement of the Warner Crampton Act, § 37, that the consent of all property owners within three hundred feet of the proposed bar or saloon must be obtained is not applicable to a bar or saloon existing at the time the act took effect.—Rohde v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 168 Mich. 683.

§ 5. Hearing or consideration and decision on application.

Consideration of and action upon bond, see post §§ 12, 13.

Vote required for municipal action, see Municipal Corporations, IV.

Mandamus to compel action on application, see Mandamus, III.

Enjoining issuance of saloon licenses, see Injunctions, § 55.

¶ 24. An application for a license to sell intoxicating liquor must be considered and passed upon prior to the consideration of the applicant's bond.—Gable v. Township Board of Three Oaks, 182 Mich. 659.

¶ 25. Where a petitioner for a saloon license tenders his application and his bond, in accordance with the statute and the ordinance, the council is under duty to pass on them at an early date, and to give its reasons therefor, if disapproved.—Cox v. Jackson Common Council, 152 Mich. 630.

§ 6. ——Discretion in granting, and preferences.

Discretion to approve or reject bonds, see post § 12.

¶ 26. A village council has no right to refuse to grant a license for the wholesaling of liquors merely because an ordinance has forbidden the keeping of saloons or bars.—Boos v. Scudder, 163 Mich. 678.

¶ 27. A village council has no power, under Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, to refuse an applicant a saloon license upon proof that the applicant had previously sold liquor to school children.—Hanold v. Common Council Village of Stambaugh, 163 Mich. 242.

¶ 28. An ordinance regulating the licensing of saloons, provided that a saloonkeeper's license should be revoked if he should be convicted within one year of a violation of the ordinance and of "the state law." A saloonkeeper agreed in his application for a license that if so convicted he should not be entitled to a renewal of the license. Held, that where the convictions secured against the saloonkeeper were not such as to call for a revocation of the license, under the ordinance, they were for that reason not sufficient to authorize a refusal by the city to renew the license, since the application was no broader than the ordinance.—Cox v. Jackson Common Council, 152 Mich. 630.

¶ 29. Relator had previously kept a saloon licensed by the respondent city council. The respondent passed an amendatory ordinance naming certain places as permissible locations for saloons, but not including relator's place. Relator brings mandamus to compel respondent to approve his bond, and issue a license. Held, that in view of relator's bad past record and the adaptability of his building for law-breaking purposes, the respondent was justified in passing the amendatory ordinance and refusing relator the license.—Mills v. Common Council of City of Ludington, 158 Mich. 493.

¶ 30. Under the Warner Crampton Law, if the number of eligible applicants for saloon licenses exceeds the number of licenses which can be granted, preference should first be given to those whose applications are filed on or before April 15, and after that to applications in the order in which the same are filed; and where the number of eligible applications for licenses made prior to April 15 exceeds the number of licenses to be issued, the authorities have a right, subject to said limitations, to determine to whom licenses shall be granted.—Rohde v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 168 Mich. 683. (Blair, J., dissenting.)

¶ 31. Under the Warner Crampton Law, a person filing an application for a saloon license prior to April 15, and who is the first to apply for a license, is entitled to the same, and persons already conducting saloons but who have not yet applied for a renewal of licenses, are not entitled to preference over said person so first applying.—Rohde v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 168 Mich. 683. (Blair, J., dissenting.)

¶ 32. Upon rehearing, held, a new applicant for a saloon license is not entitled to take the place of the holder of the license where the old holder declines, for any reason, to ask for a renewal thereof, and where the ratio of saloons to population is greater than one to five hundred.—Ploof v. Bangor Township Board, 168 Mich. 697.

¶ 33. Since Act No. 291, Laws of 1909, § 39, points out the instances in which applicants for saloon licenses in a city shall be preferred, no other preferences can be claimed outside the instances specified.—Bryant v. Common Council of Detroit, 169 Mich. 299.

¶ 34. Where the number of applications for saloon licenses in a city exceeds the number of saloons permitted by Act No. 291, Laws of 1909, § 39, the city council in making selections of applicants is not bound to give an applicant preference by virtue of the fact that he is already and has been conducting a licensed saloon in said city.—Bryant v. Common Council of Detroit, 169 Mich. 299.

§ 7. Nature of license and rights of licensee.

Right to rebate on license, see post § 17.
Surrender or assignment of bond, see post §§ 16, 18.
Effect of death of licensee, see post § 19.
Number of licenses allowable, see post § 35.
Revocation for violation of law, see post § 73.

¶ 35. A retail liquor license is a mere privilege to carry on a business subject to the will of the grantor, and it is not property in the sense which protects it under the Constitution.—People v. Schafran, 168 Mich. 324.

¶ 36. A retail liquor licensee has no vested property right in his license; it would not be in the power of the legislature to make an irrevocable contract as to that which affects public morals or public health so as to limit the exercise of the police power over the subject-matter.—People v. Schafran, 168 Mich. 324.

¶ 37. The word "licensing," as used in the title of Act 291, Pub. Acts 1909, How. Ann.

St., 2nd Ed., § 5055, in connection with the word "regulation," merely expresses some features of the permission granted to carry on the sale of liquor after all the statutory conditions precedent have been complied with, and does not amount to the granting of a license.—McCabe v. Township Board of Burnside, 181 Mich. 683.

¶ 38. An agent of a firm engaged in selling liquors cannot under the tax paid by his principals sell liquors at a place separate from and not connected with the saloon occupied by his principals. (Laws 1887, Act No. 313.)—People v. Lester, 80 Mich. 643.

§ 8. Nature and classes of taxes.

Nature of licenses and taxes, see Licenses § 1; Taxes, I.

¶ 39. The state tax imposed upon liquor dealers is not a mere debt, but a condition precedent to making sales.—Doran v. Phillips, 47 Mich. 228.

¶ 40. While the fee to be paid as a condition precedent to entering upon the business of selling intoxicating liquors is called a tax, there are other conditions precedent that are inconsistent with a purely tax system.—Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 193.

¶ 41. A manufacturer of beer cannot sell his own product at retail without paying retail, or wholesale and retail, tax, even though he has paid manufacturer's tax; since while How. St., § 1281, makes the manufacturer's tax cover the wholesale tax, it does not cover the retailer's tax.—People v. Greiser, 67 Mich. 490.

§ 9. Assessment, levy and collection of tax.

Priority of lien for taxes over other liens, see Taxes, IX.

Mode and medium of payment of license taxes, see Taxes, X.

Adjustment and accounting for tax moneys received, see Taxes, X.

¶ 42. Under an ordinance for a saloon tax whereby the assessor must, after completion of the assessment roll for this special tax, give ten days' published notice to persons aggrieved by the assessment to come in and have the same reviewed, such a notice as to the general tax is not enough, and want of separate notice of review of the assessment will invalidate a saloon tax levied under the ordinance.—Dool v. Village of Cassopolis, 42 Mich. 547.

¶ 43. Before a person's bond as liquor dealer has been filed his tax cannot be received and receipted for by the county treasurer.—Attorney-General v. Huebner, 91 Mich. 486.

¶ 44. Under How. St. § 2283d1 (section 8 of the Act), which requires the payment, by any person engaged in or intending to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, of the statutory tax "on or before May 1 in each year" and section 4 of the same act which calls for payment "in advance," he does not have May 1 on which to pay; and the fact that a person may have been engaged in making such sales during the year preceding May 1 will not render lawful sales made by him on May 1 without having paid the tax for the ensuing year.—People v. Gault, 104 Mich. 575.

§ 10. Necessity and purpose of bond.

Sufficiency of the bond and consideration thereof to approve or reject it, see post §§ 11-13.

Filing bond, see post § 14.

Construction and obligation of bond, see post § 15.

Crime of selling without bond, see post § 50.

¶ 45. It is the duty of a saloonkeeper to see that proper bond is furnished, and the giving of such bond is the condition precedent to his conducting the saloon business and avoiding criminal responsibility.—Kirkpatrick v. Phillips, 162 Mich. 251.

¶ 46. A druggist is punishable under the general liquor law for the sale of liquor without giving the bond required of retail liquor dealers under Comp. L. 1897, § 5386, unless he has given the bond of different form prescribed for druggists under section 5381.—People v. Utley, 129 Mich. 628.

¶ 47. Proceedings by a county treasurer to determine whether a new bond should be required of a liquor dealer were quashed on certiorari, the liquor law of 1889 being wholly void, and that of 1887 being defective because it provided no method for ascertaining the facts by a hearing before any one.—Dunham v. Hough, Treasurer of Barry County, 80 Mich. 648.

§ 11. Form, contents and sufficiency of bond.

Validity of bonds and effect of defective or irregular bonds, see post § 15.

Estoppel in civil damage action to question bond, see post ¶ 565.

Bond of married woman as liquor dealer, see Husband and Wife ¶¶ 264, 265.

Validity of bond by brewing corporation to indemnify sureties on saloonkeeper's bond, see Corporations ¶ 269.

¶ 48. In order to satisfy the requirements of § 8 of Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909 (How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5062), the place where the business of selling liquor at retail is to be carried on must be so described in a liquor dealer's bond so that the exact building, lot, location or place is pointed out so that it can be distinguished from all others.—Gable v. Township Board of Three Oaks, 182 Mich. 659.

¶ 49. Where a liquor dealer gives a bond payable to the city, the condition being that he shall conduct his saloon in conformity with the laws of the state and the ordinances of the city, and save harmless the city from all loss or damage growing out of the running of the saloon in question, the bond is not the statutory bond prescribed by Comp. L. 1897, § 5386.—Kirkpatrick v. Phillips, 162 Mich. 251.

¶ 50. Comp. L. 1897, § 5386, providing that a retail liquor bond shall be subject to the determination as to "sufficiency" of the common council, etc., and that the bond shall be in a sum stated "with two or more sufficient sureties," leaves it to the principal to have more than two sureties, if he wishes, but does not entitle the council to require more if those who do sign are sufficient.—Power v. Common Council of Village of Litchfield, 141 Mich. 350.

¶ 51. The statute precluding a person from becoming surety on more than two liquor bonds at the same time is valid, being equal and uniform in operation.—Wolcott v. Superior Court Judge, 112 Mich. 311.

¶ 52. A statute which provides that the board of trustees of a certain village is "authorized and empowered" to accept the bond of a surety company in lieu of the bond required of liquor dealers, by the provisions of Pub. Acts 1887, Act No. 313, is not mandatory, and mandamus will not lie to compel the acceptance of such a bond.—Hicks v. Perry Board of Trustees, 151 Mich. 88.

¶ 53. Local Acts 1907, No. 532, providing among other things that a village might accept a surety company's bonds in lieu of bonds required of liquor dealers, under the provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 5383, does not repeal such provision.—Hicks v. Perry Board of Trustees, 151 Mich. 88.

¶ 54. A surety's personalty was not to be excluded in determining his pecuniary responsibility.—Post v. Sparta Township Board, 63 Mich. 323.

¶ 54a. An affidavit of justification of the sureties on a liquor bond is legally sufficient though it omits to state—as unconstitutionally required by Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 8—that each surety is not engaged in the sale of liquors, and that neither is a surety upon any other bond required by the provisions of said statute.—Kuhn v. Detroit Common Council, 70 Mich. 534.

§ 12. Consideration and approval or rejection of bond.

Protest as suspending power to approve, see post § 13.

Discretion as to receiving and filing bond, see post § 14.

Consideration of application for license, see ante § 5.

Nonliability of public officers for injurious exercise of discretion, see Officers, VI, A.

Mandamus to compel action on bond, see Mandamus, III.

Parties to bill to enjoin officers from approving bonds for liquor licenses, see Injunctions § 102.

¶ 55. Under How. St., § 2278, which makes it lawful for any one residing within any place not within the village local option law, to carry on the liquor business upon paying to the county treasurer an annual tax, and filing with him the required bond, with two resident freeholders as sureties, who are required to justify in the form fixed by statute, and have the bond approved by the common council, or other local trustees, nothing is left to such council upon the filing of such bond except to pass upon the sufficiency of the sureties.—Potter v. Common Council of Village of Homer, 59 Mich. 8.

¶ 56. In passing upon a liquor bond the town board may consider competent testimony as to the value of the sureties' property. But it must do so fairly and in good faith, and must not act capriciously or against evidence; and while a surety should be allowed to make a further showing if an issue is raised as to the value of property which he has reported to a sufficient amount, he is entitled to no particular consideration when he has intentionally kept silent as to his property. His conduct in withholding information from the assessors is open to scrutiny.—Post v. Sparta Township Board, 63 Mich. 323.

¶ 57. A municipal board cannot arbitrarily refuse to approve a bond that is in the statutory form with sufficient sureties; it must give the applicant a hearing, and, if it rejects his bond, must give valid reasons, which should appear of record.—Potter v. Village of Homer, 59 Mich. 8; Amperse v. City of Kalamazoo, 59 Mich. 78.

¶ 58. A township board may not arbitrarily reject a liquor bond because executed by a surety company, without reference to its legal sufficiency, or without honestly and in good faith investigating and determining the actual responsibility of the surety.—Gable v. Township Board of Three Oaks, 182 Mich. 659.

¶ 59. Where the answer of the village board shows that after investigation, and from their own knowledge, one of the sureties on a proposed liquor dealer's bond is not responsible for the penalty, a mandamus to compel its approval will be denied.—Palmer v. President, etc., Village of Hartford, 78 Mich. 96.

¶ 60. Laws 1887, Act No. 313, gives a village board the power to reject a liquor dealer's bond on the ground of the pecuniary irresponsibility of the sureties, or either of them, and the board is not bound by the affidavit of the sureties.—Palmer v. President, etc., Village of Hartford, 73 Mich. 96.

¶ 61. The relator, a saloonkeeper, conveyed property to one Allen, who later signed relator's bond. The circumstances in evidence tended to show that the conveyance was not made for an adequate consideration, but only to enable Allen to qualify as relator's bondsman. In mandamus to compel the city council to accept relator's bond, held, the council acted in apparent good faith, and the writ was properly denied. —Knabush v. Common Council Village of Britton, 158 Mich. 577.

¶ 62. Pub. Acts 1895, No. 266, declaring that any bond required by law to be given with surety or sureties may be executed by a surety company, and that such execution shall be in all respects a full and complete compliance with every requirement as to the execution of such bond by sureties, and that in those cases where, by the laws of the state, more than one surety is required, it shall be lawful to approve and accept a bond with but one surety, provided the surety is a corporation duly qualified, and that the certificate of the insurance commissioner shall be conclusive proof of the solvency and credit of such company for all purposes, and of its right to be accepted as sole surety, and of its sufficiency as such, does not operate to compel those charged with the duty of accepting and approving bonds of saloonkeepers to accept a bond with a foreign corporation as sole surety, where their refusal is based on an honest doubt as to the sufficiency of the surety proposed.—Schmitt v. Common Council of Village of Clinton, 111 Mich. 99.

¶ 63. Approval of bond as a retail liquor dealer offered by a hotel proprietor and properly describing his hotel as the "place" of business (Laws 1887, Act No. 313) cannot be refused on the ground merely that he proposes to operate two bars in the hotel under one license.—Courtright v. Village of Newaygo, 96 Mich. 290.

¶ 64. A liquor dealer presenting the statutory bond for approval is entitled to prompt action upon it.—Amperse v. Kalamazoo Common Council, 59 Mich. 78.

¶ 65. As the bonds of liquor dealers are required by statute to be filed before May 1, a municipal board must approve a sufficient bond seasonably filed before that date, and an ordinance prohibiting saloons which does not take effect until after that date is no excuse for refusing approval.—Warner v. Village of Lawrence, 62 Mich. 251.

¶ 66. A resolution regularly passed by the common council of a village, having power to suppress saloons for the sale of intoxicating liquors, fixing the saloon bonds at $3,000 with two sureties, stands until modified or repealed, and while such resolution is in force the council has no power to suppress saloons by refusing to accept the bond.—Hawkins v. Common Council of Village of Litchfield, 120 Mich. 390.

¶ 67. An applicant for a license to sell intoxicating liquor who knows that at a meeting of the township board, consisting of the supervisor, township clerk and two senior justices of the peace, his application was rejected by an equally divided vote and that one of such justices was opposed to the approval of the bond, procures counsel after its rejection, induces the supervisor to call another meeting, knows that such justice was not at such meeting and that his place was taken by a junior justice, which was permissible when a senior justice was unable to act, is not an innocent party who will be protected by the face of the record showing approval of his bond, where it appears that three votes were cast in favor of the approval of the bond, including that of the junior justice, the other justice protesting that the meeting was illegal, and that the other senior justice was able to come but was not called. —Jones ex rel. Hall v. Turner, 197 Mich. 523. (Ostrander, Brooke and Steere, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 68. The favorable report of a committee of a common council to which a bond is referred does not preclude a member of the council from voting against approval.—Amperse v. Winslow, 75 Mich. 234.

¶ 69. The approval of a liquor bond by the mayor is unnecessary, where the charter does not require it; and the fact that under the charter all ordinances and resolutions must receive the approval of the mayor, and that a provision enacted subsequent to the general liquor law confers upon the council the power to regulate, license, prohibit, and suppress saloons, does not necessitate the mayor's approval of the bond, where no action has been taken by the council under the power so conferred.—O'Halloran v. Jackson, 107 Mich. 138.

¶ 70. The certificate of a township clerk indorsed upon a liquor bond filed with the county treasurer, to its approval by the township board, is made authentic evidence of such fact by Laws 1887, No. 313, § 8, which provides for such approval and certificate.—Smith v. Anderson, 82 Mich. 492.

¶ 71. Act No. 321, Pub. Acts 1907, provides that "Whenever a majority of the qualified electors of any * * * village equal to a majority of the votes cast for governor at the last general election shall file a petition" protesting against the acceptance of liquor bonds, such bonds shall not be accepted by the village officials. Held, that the majority required was a majority of the number of qualified voters existing at the last general election, and not of the number existing at the time of the filing of the petition.—Village of Wolverine v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 713.

¶ 72. Where a majority of the electors of a village filed a protest with the common council against the acceptance of a bond offered by a prospective saloonkeeper under Public Acts 1907, No. 321, the vote of the village at the last election for Governor may, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be determined by the poll list as Public Acts 1907, No. 321, providing for a protest by the majority of electors of a village against the acceptance of a bond offered by a prospective saloonkeeper contemplates only the filing of a petition of protest, a favorable petition cannot be considered by the council although bearing more names than the petition of protest.—Covell v. Common Council of Village of Fife Lake, 179 Mich. 151.

¶ 73. Where the majority of the electors of a village filed a protest under Public Acts 1907, No. 321, with the common council against the acceptance of a bond offered by a prospective saloonkeeper, such bond cannot be approved although there is no method indicated in the Act by which the council may determine with accuracy the vote of the village electors in the last election for Governor as provided in the Act.—Covell v. Common Council of Village of Fife Lake, 179 Mich. 151.

¶ 74. Under Act No. 321, Pub. Acts 1907, the decision of a village council on the sufficiency of a petition of protest by electors against accepting saloon bonds and issuing licenses, is not controlling but is open to the review of the courts.—Village of Wolverine v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 162 Mich. 713.

§ 14. Receiving and filing bond.

¶ 75. No discretion in regard to the receipt and filing of a liquor-dealer's bond is lodged in the county treasurer, who is bound to receive and file it, when presented with the approval of the town board indorsed thereon.—Brockway v. Petted, 79 Mich. 620.

¶ 76. The bond of a liquor dealer, when filed relates back to its date and covers the time prior to its filing. Filing is not essential to validity.—Brockway v. Petted, 79 Mich. 620.

§ 15. Construction, effect and obligation of bond.

¶ 77. The liability of sureties upon a liquor dealer's bond attaches upon the acceptance and approval of the instrument and notwithstanding any failure to file it with the county treasurer.—Brockway v. Petted, 79 Mich. 620.

¶ 78. A liquor dealer's bond in Bay City cannot be enforced until approved by the common council; and the report of a committee approving it will not be sufficient unless the report is adopted by the council.—Garrison v. Steele, 46 Mich. 98.

¶ 79. Where a saloonkeeper gave a bond under sec. 5386, Comp. L. 1897, and judgments were recovered against him and his surety for the full amount for violations of the liquor law (sec. 5389, Comp. L. 1897), the fact that judgments for the full amount of the bond have been recovered does not bar the recovery of future judgments for the violations of said law—the surety not being discharged until he has individually paid the amount of the bond, the principal being liable for any amount, as the bond was only intended as additional to his individual responsibility.—Squires v. Miller, 173 Mich. 304.

¶ 80. The neglect of the sureties to annex the statutory affidavits to a liquor dealer's bond will not relieve them from liability.—People for use of Clinton v. Laning, 73 Mich. 284.

¶ 81. The acceptance by the common council of a liquor dealer's bond, unaccompanied by the statutory affidavits of the sureties, may render them liable for neglect of duty, but such neglect will not invalidate the bond. People for use of Clinton v. Laning, 73 Mich. 284.

¶ 82. A surety upon a liquor bond cannot discharge himself by removing from the corporation limits, nor is he relieved by the county treasurer's notifying the principal to file a new bond and to close his saloon until he does so.—Wright v. Treat, 83 Mich. 110.

¶ 83. The liability of the sureties upon a liquor bond does not extend to the acts and conduct of a firm succeeding that whose members were principals in the bond, although one of such principals is a member of the new firm.—Mathews v. Garman, 110 Mich. 559.

¶ 84. A liquor dealer's bond, where the penalty has by mistake been left in blank, will be held valid at the lowest statutory penalty when the sureties have justified at that sum in accordance with the statute requiring the justification to conform to the penalty.—Garrison v. Steele, 46 Mich. 98.

¶ 85. A liquor bond executed prior to the passage of the liquor law of 1887, and covering a period of one year from May 1, 1887, must be held good in so far as it embraces provisions in the new law which were taken from the former act.—Gullickson v. Gjorud, 89 Mich. 8.

¶ 86. The fact that the law of 1887 differs from the prior law in requiring that the sureties must be male persons and not officeholders, and must not be sureties upon more than two bonds, and must justify in real estate in the proper county, does not affect the liability upon bonds given under the former law, nor the conditions thereof.—Gullickson v. Gjorud, 89 Mich. 8.

C. SURRENDER OR TRANSFER OF LICENSE; DEATH OF LICENSEE.

§ 16. Surrender or cancellation.

Revocation for violation of law, see post § 78.

¶ 87. Section 39, Act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909, provides that saloon licenses shall not exceed the number of saloons doing business in a given township in the month of April, 1909, and that if said number exceeded the ratio of one for every five hundred inhabitants, no license should be issued to take the place of licenses revoked or voluntarily surrendered until the ratio of saloons should not exceed one for every five hundred inhabitants. In the township in question of 1,249 inhabitants, six saloons were doing business in April, 1909. Later three of these failed to apply for renewal of licenses at the expiration of the license term. Held, such failure to apply for renewal of licenses was a voluntary surrender of licenses within the meaning of said section and the complainant's mandamus to compel the issuance of a license in excess of the three licenses remaining in effect should be denied.—Ploof v. Bangor Township Board, 168 Mich. 697.

¶ 88. The death of one holding a license to sell intoxicating liquors constitutes a voluntary surrender of his license within the meaning of Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 291, How. 2nd Ed., § 5055, known as the Warner-Crampton law.—Hartingh v. Bay Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 289.

§ 17. Rebate of license.

Right to recover payment made under protest, see Payment, VI; Taxes, VIII.

¶ 89. In the absence of a statute authorizing it, a retail liquor licensee is not entitled to a rebate for the unexpired term upon revocation; such a right is dependent upon the statute, and where there is no statute, the licensee must be held as taking his license subject to such laws as prevail.—People v. Schafran, 168 Mich. 324.

§ 18. Assignment, transfer or succession.

¶ 90. A license to sell intoxicating liquors is personal and cannot be transferred to another.—Kennedy v. Stimming, 192 Mich. 600.

§ 19. Effect of death of licensee.

Death as surrender by operation of law, see also ante ¶ 88.

¶ 91. In the absence of legislation to the contrary, upon the death of a person licensed to sell intoxicating liquors, the privileges conferred by the license do not pass to or vest in his personal representatives.—Hartingh v. Bay Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 289.

¶ 92. Under Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 170, How. 2nd Ed., § 1976, amending Pub. Acts 1909, Act No. 291, known as the Warner-Crampton law, the administrator of a deceased person licensed to sell intoxicating liquors can continue the business under certain conditions during the period of the license but no such right existed where a licensee died prior to the passage of the amendatory act.—Hartingh v. Bay Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 289.

III. LOCAL OPTION; PROHIBITED TRAFFIC.

A. STATUTES; ELECTION AND OTHER PROCEDURE.

§ 20. Statutory provisions in general.

Effect of local and general prohibition, see post §§ 31-33.

General law of statutes and statutory construction, see Statutes.

¶ 93. The Local Option Law of 1889 (How. St., §§ 2283a-2283c3) is valid.—Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393.

¶ 94. General liquor law of 1887 (Laws 1887, Act No. 313, How. St., §§ 2283c4-2283f7) held valid and enforceable as to the new taxes and penalties not involving peculiar disabilities, and as to the new method of prosecution in the upper instead of in the justices' courts.—Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549; Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

¶ 94a. A city council may refuse approval of a liquor bond for a license in a territory covered by a "no license" ordinance even if it provides no penalty, since such an ordinance is self-executing in its prohibition.—Johnson v. Common Council of City of Bessemer, 143 Mich. 313.

§ 21. Petitions for and calling of election.

Petition for resubmission after adverse vote, see post § 30.

¶ 96. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5415, How. 2nd Ed., § 5020, only one petition for the submission of the question of local option to the electors may be circulated on a township, ward or election district.—Heyer v.

Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

¶ 97. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5415, How. 2nd Ed., § 5020, where there are duplicate petitions for submission of the local option question to the electors all are void, and it is immaterial that one of them is regular on its face.—Heyer v. Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

¶ 98. While but one petition may be circulated in any one township, ward or election district, yet, such petition may be circulated in the form of several sheets headed alike, if such sheets are subsequently attached together as one petition, and a copy thereof, thus attached, is duly posted.—Anker v. Board Sup'rs of Iosco County, 190 Mich. 610.

¶ 99. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5415, How. 2nd Ed., § 5020, any number of headings of a petition for submission of local option question to electorate may be circulated in a precinct and signed, and, if all the headings are alike and in the proper form, and attached together, and a copy thereof posted. and filed as one petition, the statute is complied with.—Heyer v. Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

¶ 100. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5414-5417, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 5019-5022, where poll lists of the last preceding general election from all the voting precincts do not accompany the petitions to the board of supervisors for a referendum of the local option question to the voters the petitions are sufficient if the total number of petitioners, as ascertained by the returns or county canvass of the vote at the last general election, equals one-third of the votes cast as such general election.—Graham v. Board Sup'rs of Manistee County, 190 Mich. 162. (Kuhn, Bird and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 101. A qualified elector, within the meaning of the Local Option Statute (Act No. 207, Pub. Acts 1889, as amended by Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899), is one who meets the requirements of section 1, art. 3 of the Constitution of Michigan (1909).—Rutledge v. Board Sup'rs Marquette Co., 160 Mich. 22.

¶ 102. A registered elector is a qualified elector within the meaning of the local option law, although his name does not appear upon the poll lists.—Werstein v. Board Sup'rs Calhoun Co., 156 Mich. 63.

¶ 103. The signers of a petition for the submission of the question of prohibiting the sale of liquor in a county cannot make a withdrawal of their names after the petition has been posted.—Lewis v. Board Sup'rs Montmorency Co., 164 Mich. 595.

¶ 104. One signing his name on a local option petition under Act No. 207, Pub. Acts 1889, as amended by Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, which makes no provision for withdrawal by a petitioner, is not permitted, after the posting of the petition lists, to withdraw his name therefrom.—Rutledge v. Board Sup'rs Marquette Co., 160 Mich. 22.

¶ 105. A signer of a local option petition could not have his name removed after the petition had been filed, when his signature was genuine and voluntary.—Kern v. Board Sup'rs St. Clair Co., 160 Mich. 11.

¶ 106. Persons signing a local option petition, under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, cannot be permitted to withdraw after the petition is filed in the office of the clerk.—Fischer v. Board Sup'rs Washtenaw Co., 156 Mich. 1; Werstein v. Board Sup'rs Calhoun Co., 156 Mich. 63.

¶ 107. Section 5415, Comp. L. 1897, gives to one whose name has been fraudulently attached to a petition for the submission of the question of prohibition to the vote of the people, the right to have it erased; but it confers no right upon one whose name is attached of his own volition, and without any fraud, to demand such withdrawal.—Koerber v. Board Sup'rs Ionia Co., 155 Mich. 677.

¶ 108. After adequate local option petitions under Act No. 207, Pub. Acts 1889, as amended by Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, had been posted, the board of supervisors permitted enough petitioners to withdraw their names to make the petition insufficient in number. Held, mandamus would lie to compel the board to submit the question to the voters.—Rutledge v. Board Sup'rs Marquette Co., 160 Mich. 22. (Blair, McAlvay and Brooke, JJ., concurring, recommending an additional order that the board reconvene and act upon the evidence required by the statute.)

¶ 109. Petitions to a board of supervisors asking a submission of the local option question to the electors may be filed prior to, presented at, and acted upon at an adjourned term of a board of supervisors, instead of at its regular annual meeting.—Anker v. Board Sup'rs of Iosco County, 190 Mich. 610.

¶ 110. The affidavit which Laws 1889, Act No. 207 (How. St. § 2283a3), relative to the calling of a special election to determine the question of local option, provides shall accompany the petition for such election, need only allege, when accompanied by the poll-list required by the statute, the then residence of the petitioners; but if there is no poll list then the affidavit must show that petitioners are qualified electors.—Friesner v. Common Council of City of Charlotte, 91 Mich. 504.

¶ 111. Where several identical headings of a petition for submission of local option question to the voters are circulated in a precinct the affidavit or affidavits of the genuineness of the signatures and that the signers are qualified electors may be attached to each heading.—Heyer v. Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

§ 22. ——Action on petition and resolution for election.

Action upon the election and declaration of result, see post § 26.

Mandamus to compel action on petition, see Mandamus, III.

¶ 112. It is competent for the board of supervisors, when convened for the purpose of determining whether or not an election under the local option law has been prayed for by the requisite number of electors, to collect and collate the required statutory facts through a committee appointed for that purpose.—Giddings v. Van Buren County Treas., 99 Mich. 221.

¶ 113. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5414-5417, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 5019-5022, relative to the presentation of petitions for a referendum of the local option question to the voters and the determination of the sufficiency thereof by the board, it is not the duty of the board or of the county clerk, where the transcripts of the poll lists of the last preceding general election do not accompany the petitions, to consult the poll lists, where they are available and not defective, in order to determine the sufficiency of the petitions, but the returns or county canvass at the last general election may be resorted to.—Graham v. Board Sup'rs of Manistee County, 190 Mich. 162. (Kuhn, Bird, and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 114. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5417, requiring an examination and determination of the sufficiency of local option petitions by the board of supervisors, a finding by the clerk that one-third of the qualified electors of the county have prayed for submission of the question is not a jurisdictional prerequisite to the action of the board of supervisors, and his failure to make such finding does not affect the validity of the election.—Madill v. Common Council of City of Midland, 156 Mich. 56.

¶ 115. The provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 5417, How. 2nd Ed., § 5022, relating to local option elections, are mandatory, and the board of supervisors has no jurisdiction to order an election until it has by resolution determined and declared that the submission of the question has been petitioned for by the requisite number of electors.—Ehinger v. Graham, 190 Mich. 132.

¶ 116. It is not within the discretion of the board of supervisors to refuse to call an election for a resubmission of the question of prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquors upon presentation of a petition answering the requirements of the statute.—Keefer v. Hillsdale County Sup'rs, 109 Mich. 645.

¶ 117. Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, governing local option elections, provides for affidavits of the genuineness of the signatures on the petitions submitted, and states that where upon its face the petition is sufficient, the board of supervisors shall submit the question of prohibition. Held, the board has no authority to inquire into the genuineness of the signatures by extrinsic evidence, the affidavits being conclusive, and mandamus will not lie to compel them so to do.—Kern v. Board Sup'rs St. Clair Co., 160 Mich. 11. (Ostrander, McAlvay and Brooke, JJ., concurring, in separate opinions.)

¶ 118. In passing upon the sufficiency of a local option petition under Act No. 207, Pub. Acts 1889, as amended by Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, the board of supervisors may not, by extrinsic testimony, enter upon the sufficiency of the posting of the notices, or the questions whether the signatures were fraudulently obtained or were the signatures of qualified voters.—Rutledge v. Board Sup'rs Marquette Co., 160 Mich. 22.

¶ 119. The board of supervisors in passing on the sufficiency of petitions filed under the Local Option Statute, decided by extrinsic evidence that 224 of the names were not those of qualified voters, and should be stricken off, thereby leaving less than the requisite number. Held, the board had no power to do this, and mandamus would lie to reconvene and submit the question of prohibition to the voters.—Flanders v. Board Sup'rs Van Buren Co., 160 Mich. 27.

¶ 120. There can be no legal objections for a board of supervisors to combine in a single resolution the successive resolutions finding that a petition to submit a local option law was sufficient under the law and the order calling the election.—People v. Hamilton, 143 Mich. 1.

¶ 121. A resolution of the board of supervisors ordering a local option election which fails to determine what the petitions for the election contained or whether they complied with the law is insufficient under Comp. L. 1897, § 5417, How. 2nd Ed., § 5022.—Ehinger v. Graham, 190 Mich. 132.

¶ 122. An order of the supervisors directing the submission of the question of local option to the electors of the county on a named date is sufficient under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, § 6 requiring "that such question shall be voted upon at the next annual township election," where as a matter of fact the date fixed is the date of such election, but the order fails so to state.—Attorney General v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 366.

¶ 123. An order of the board of supervisors submitting the question of local option to the electors is not insufficient, although it contains no recital of the number of names on the poll lists, or of the number of electors who signed the petition, where it does state that the election has been prayed for by the requisite number, to wit, by not less than one-third of all the qualified electors of the county as shown by the poll lists.—Attorney General v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 366.

¶ 124. The statute does not provide for the filing or keeping of any separate order, distinct from that entered upon the journal, and the provision that the board "shall thereupon issue an order directing that such election be held," is complied with by the service upon the officers named in the act of copies of the order, and the publication of the same. —Thomas v. Abbott, 105 Mich. 687.

¶ 125. Under Laws 1889, Act No. 207, § 6, which provides that the order of the board of supervisors directing that an election be held "shall be entered in full upon the journal of the proceedings of the board for that day, and the same shall be signed by the acting chairman and clerk of the board before final adjournment," it is sufficient if the journal for the day, including other matters, is signed after the close of the session.—Thomas v. Abbott, 105 Mich. 687.

§ 23. ——Conclusiveness and finality of order for election.

Mandamus to compel action, see Mandamus, III.

Conclusiveness on certiorari of finding of facts warranting submission, see Certiorari § 55.

¶ 126. Under Laws 1889, Act No. 207 (local option law), the determination by the board of supervisors upon questions preliminary to the holding of a special election on local option (e. g., whether or not a sufficient number of electors had petitioned for such election) is final and cannot be reviewed; nor can it afterwards be shown that some of the petitioners were not qualified electors.—Friesner v. Common Council City of Charlotte, 91 Mich. 504; Covert v. Munson, 93 Mich. 603.

¶ 127. Where a resolution of the board of supervisors to submit the question of local option to the electors has been adopted in conformity to law and the record is regular, it is conclusive as to the preliminary steps necessary to set the board in motion, and a mandamus to show cause to compel the board to vacate such an order because the petition signed by the electors was not in proper form, that the affidavits of posting were prematurely made, and copies of the petitions were not in fact properly posted is properly refused.—Attorney General v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 366.

¶ 128. On a contention that the board of supervisors had not complied with the proceedings provided for by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183 and that their procedure was not sufficient to authorize the submission of a local option law to the vote of the electors in the county, in that they did not before adopting the order of submission determine and declare by resolution that, upon the face of the petition and by reference to the transcripts of the poll lists or by the returns and canvass of the last general election, such submission has been prayed for by the requisite number of electors of the county; while it might perhaps be more in accord with the letter of the statute if the board had adopted a distinct resolution determining "that such submission of said question has been prayed for by the requisite number of electors," yet the proceedings were sufficient to comply with the statute where the question whether the requisite number had signed was directly presented to the board for the decision by a majority and minority report, and the board had adopted the minority report and thereby determined that there was a sufficient number, and explained in the preamble its interpretation of the effect of its action and declared as a matter of fact "that the highest vote cast for any state officer in and at the said last general election was 4,324 votes, and that said petition had been signed by 2,344 electors." The board having determined this fact, which it was its duty to determine, it will be presumed that the law was complied with.—People v. Hamilton, 143 Mich. 1.

¶ 129. The adoption of the report of the committee, and of a resolution included therein, declaring and determining that such election has been prayed for by the requisite number of electors, is, in legal effect, a declaration and determination by the board of supervisors of that fact, and it cannot be presumed that the fact that the report was made excluded every other inquiry, or that the members of the board did not verify the facts set forth in the report, or possess or avail themselves of any other means of information.—Giddings v. Van Buren County Treas., 99 Mich. 221.

¶ 130. The resolution of the board of supervisors, adopted in conformity to law, and the record thereof being regular, that an election under the local option law has been prayed for by the requisite number of electors, is conclusive of the preliminary steps necessary to set the board in motion.—Thomas v. Abbott, 105 Mich. 687.

¶ 131. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5417, requiring an examination and determination by the board of supervisors as to the sufficiency of local option petitions, the duty of determining whether the requisite number of electors have signed the petitions rests finally upon the board of supervisors, and their action thereon is final.—Madill v. Common Council of City of Midland, 156 Mich. 56.

¶ 132. A determination of the board of supervisors as to the sufficiency of local option petitions, and as to the requisite number of electors signing the same, is final, and not subject to review by the courts.—Werstein v. Board Sup'rs Calhoun Co., 156 Mich. 63.

¶ 133. Under section 5417, Comp. L., 1897, a determination of the board of supervisors that the proper steps have been taken for submitting the question of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to a vote of the people, and that the requisite number of electors have signed the petition for such submission, is final, and cannot be reviewed by the courts.—Koerber v. Board of Sup'rs Ionia Co., 155 Mich. 677.

¶ 134. Where there is more than one separate and distinct petition for the submission of the local option question to the voters from a township the determination of the board of supervisors as to the sufficiency of the petition is not conclusive, and may be reviewed by the courts.—Anker v. Board Sup'rs of Iosco County, 190 Mich. 610.

§ 24. ——Posting, publication and proofs thereof.

Computation of time for posting, first and last days, see Time.

¶ 135. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5415, neither the posting of copies or the filing of the local option petition need be done on any particular day.—Crawford v. Board Sup'rs Gratiot Co., 160 Mich. 31.

¶ 136. The law does not, in terms, require the posting of the certified copy of the order served upon the township clerk, and it is sufficient if said order is embodied in the notice of election posted by that officer.—Thomas v. Abbott, 105 Mich. 687.

¶ 137. Where, in the record of the day's proceedings, other matters appear besides the resolution or order of the board directing the holding of a local option election, it is proper to omit such irrelevant matter from the notices served and posted, and to append thereto the signatures of the clerk and chairman found at the close of the day's proceedings as recorded.—Thomas v. Abbott, 105 Mich. 687.

¶ 138. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5422, 5425, relating to the publication of a resolution of the board of supervisors ordering a local option election, the failure of the board to specify the newspaper in which the resolution is to be published does not vitiate the proceedings, where, on discovering their mistake the next day, the board unanimously passed a resolution directing publication in designated newspapers.—Madill v. Common Council of City of Midland, 156 Mich. 56.

¶ 139. An affidavit as to posting a petition for submission of local option question to the electors which states that one of the three notices posted in a township was posted "at J. L. Seelhoff on telephone pole," is defective.—Heyer v. Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

¶ 140. An affidavit as to posting a petition for submission of the local option question to the electors which states that each of the three notices posted in a certain ward of a city was posted at the "corner" of designated intersecting streets is insufficient in description.—Heyer v. Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

¶ 141. The Local Option Statute, Comp. L. 1897, § 5415, did not specify any particular day on which the petition for the submission of the prohibition question should be filed with the county clerk. It required affidavits to be made that copies of the petition had been posted ten days before the petition was filed. The copies were posted on various days from December 23d to December 27th. The petition was filed January 8th. The affiants, on the days the copies were posted or on the day thereafter, made affidavits that they had been posted ten days before the filing with the county clerk. Held, such affidavits were insufficient, since at the time they made them the affiants could not have known the fact they swore to; and that mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to submit the question to vote should be denied.—Crawford v. Board Sup'rs Gratiot Co., 160 Mich. 31.

¶ 142. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5415, How. 2nd Ed., § 5020, where several identical headings of petition for submission of local option question are circulated in each precinct the affidavit or affidavits as to the posting should be attached to the completed petition after the headings have all been attached together as one petition, and should refer to it as such.—Heyer v. Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

§ 25. Local option elections and ballots.

Effect of irregularities in election, see post § 27.

General law of elections and ballots, see Elections.

¶ 143. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 109, regulating nomination and election expenses, and requiring accounts thereof was intended to regulate and control all elections, and election expenses wherever the electors are called upon to decide any measure or measures that may be before the people to be voted upon, and includes the voting upon the question of local prohibition.—People v. Gansley, 191 Mich. 357. (Brooke, Bird, Kuhn and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 144. Though Laws 1889, Act No. 207, § 8, provides for the printing of the ballots by the county clerk for a local option election, the commissioners of election have authority, under the more recent Australian ballot law, to provide ballots for a local option election, containing both "yes" and "no" votes to be indicated by a cross.—Thomas v. Abbott, 105 Mich. 687.

¶ 145. Where on the question of prohibition, there is a clear majority of the votes cast in favor of license, excluding the votes rejected as illegal, the board of supervisors has no power to go behind the returns of the inspectors of election to determine whether the votes rejected as illegal were properly so rejected, but must determine the question of majority solely upon the legal vote cast as shown on the face of the returns. (Hooker, J., dissenting.)—Attorney General v. Board Sup'rs Genesee Co., 166 Mich. 61.

§ 26. Procedure to declare result and put law into operation.

Repeal of resolution and vote, see post § 29.
Resubmission after adverse vote, see post § 30.
Evidence and proofs of adoption of law, see post § 28.
Going behind returns, see also ante ¶ 145.

¶ 146. The statutory provisions in regard to the making up of the record of the proceedings for election on local option, and as to stating and certifying the result of the vote, are mandatory, and a failure to comply with them vitiates such election.—Covert v. Munson, 93 Mich. 603.

¶ 147. Where the record of the proceedings of the board of supervisors upon a petition for an election on local option was not entered upon the journal until some weeks after adjournment, and was not signed by the chairman of the board until after he had gone out of office, it was held that there was no such record as the law requires to put the local option law in operation within the county.—Covert v. Munson, 93 Mich. 603.

¶ 148. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5417, requiring an order for a local option election to be entered in full upon the journal of the proceedings of the board "that day," and signed before the final adjournment, it is not necessary that the proceedings leading up to the order shall be entered and signed on the very day thereof, but only that they be entered upon the journal of the proceedings for that day, and signed before final adjournment.—Madill v. Common Council of City of Midland, 156 Mich. 56.

¶ 149. Where the clerk receives the original affidavit of publication, indorses the fact of filing on its back, and pastes the same in the record immediately following the resolution of the board of supervisors adopting the local option act, there is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of said Act (Comp. L. 1897, § 5425) respecting the spreading of record of said affidavit.—People v. Fisch, 164 Mich. 680.

¶ 150. In pasting on the record the original affidavit of publication required by the Local Option Act, the clerk in his entry stated that said affidavit was affixed on the 2d day of May but did not state the day of filing. It appeared that the affidavit was not on file May 1st. Held, there was a sufficient compliance with the said statute requiring the clerk to record the date when the affidavit was entered for record.—People v. Fisch, 164 Mich. 680.

¶ 151. A rule of a county board of supervisors, that if the board remains in session for the space of two hours without any business it shall adjourn for the term, is not applicable to an adjournment or recess taken to allow time for the clerk of the board to enter local option proceedings in the record book as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 5417.—Madill v. Common Council of City of Midland, 156 Mich. 56.

¶ 152. Record of proceedings of board of supervisors in ordering election under local-option law and declaring result thereof is fatally defective if not containing designation by board of newspaper in which resolution of prohibition is to be published.—Moran v. Darby, 97 Mich. 186.

¶ 153. Under Laws 1889, Act No. 207, § 14 (How. St., § 2283b3), the paper in which a resolution of prohibition is to be published must be "designated by the board" of supervisors adopting the resolution; and a previous letting by the board of the county printing to certain newspapers is not a sufficient designation.—Moran v. Darby, 97 Mich. 186.

¶ 154. A board of supervisors in their resolution adopting the local option act provided for "publication in every newspaper within the county," which provision was amended to read "in the Presque Isle News and all the other newspapers in the county." Held, either provision was a sufficient compliance with the statute.—People v. Fisch, 164 Mich. 680.

¶ 155. An affidavit that a local option resolution was published "for four successive weeks; that the first of such publications was on the 3d day of March, 1894, and the last on the 31st day of March, 1894,"—shows that the publication was for four successive weeks, and complies with the requirements of the statute.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 156. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5426, providing that the prohibitory provisions of the Local Option Act shall take effect on the first day of May following the adoption by the board of supervisors of a resolution ordering such prohibition, and upon the publication of the notice of the adoption thereof, such adoption and publication are the only conditions to put the local option law in force, and the failure of the clerk to properly record the resolution, and the affidavits of publication does not affect the enforcement of the prohibition law pursuant thereto.—Madill v. Common Council of City of Midland, 156 Mich. 56.

¶ 157. On certiorari to review the action of a board of supervisors in recounting votes at a local option election under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 352, and to set aside the preamble and resolution declaring that the general liquor law had been suspended, held, that as the original and subsequent canvass of votes supported the preamble and resolution, the writ should be quashed.—Alward v. Board Sup'rs of Oakland County, 187 Mich. 573.

¶ 158. The neglect of an officer to perform a mere ministerial duty cannot be permitted to defeat an election at which a local option law was adopted.—People v. Hamilton, 143 Mich. 1.

¶ 159. The fact that the clerk of the board of supervisors had not spread the original affidavit of publication on the records of the board following the record of adoption of the resolution of prohibition as required by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, § 14, but it followed after some intervening pages cannot be held fatal to the proceedings so as to invalidate a local option law adopted at an election.—People v. Hamilton, 142 Mich. 1.

¶ 160. A local option election is not invalidated by the fact that the county clerk published the first notice of the election 17 days prior to the election, instead of 21 days, as required by section 5417, Comp. L., 1897, where the issue was thoroughly discussed throughout the county, and a majority of all the voters in the county voted for prohibition.—Bauer v. Township Board of Denmark, 157 Mich. 395.

¶ 161. A board of supervisors cannot nullify the effect of a vote of the electors to adopt prohibition in the county by a faulty compliance with the statutory requirements with respect to filing affidavits of publication.—Paul v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 169 Mich. 452.

¶ 162. An unconstitutional provision of a city charter providing for a central polling place, with but one board of election inspectors, will not vitiate a local option election, where notice of the subject to be voted upon was properly given, the result of the election honestly declared, and no elector was deceived or misled.—Holt v. Board Sup'rs of Ogemaw County, 186 Mich. 241. (McAlvay, J., dissenting.)

¶ 163. The consideration by the board of supervisors, in determining the result of an election under the Local Option Law, of illegal returns from certain townships, will not invalidate the election, where the exclusion of such returns will not destroy the majority in favor of the proposition submitted to the electors.—Giddings v. Wells Van Buren County Treas., 99 Mich. 221.

¶ 164. The requirements of Comp. L. 1897, § 5422, that the canvass, determination, and declaration of the result of a local option election shall be entered in full upon the journal of the proceedings of the board of supervisors for that day, and signed by the acting chairman and clerk, is merely directory, and the will of the electors cannot be defeated by the omission or inability of the board to perform the duty on the precise day fixed.—Madill v. Common Council of City of Midland, 156 Mich. 56.

¶ 165. Under the Local Option Law, Act No. 207, Pub. Acts of 1889, as amended by Act No. 183, Pub. Acts of 1899, the board of supervisors in declaring for local option in a county exercise no legislative power but merely a ministerial duty, and a resolution declaring for local option passed by it, which fails to include the preamble contained in said Act of 1889, § 13, to the effect that the board has canvassed the election returns and found a majority of votes in favor of prohibition, is not a fatal omission making said resolution inoperative.—Paul v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 169 Mich. 452. (Ostrander, Blair and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 166. The objection that the resolution of prohibition prohibits the sale of wine for sacramental purposes, and prohibits druggists or registered pharmacists from selling for purposes allowed by Local Option Act § 15, which provides "that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prohibit the sale of wine for sacramental purposes nor shall anything herein contained prohibit druggists or registered pharmacists from selling or furnishing pure alcohol for medicinal art, scientific, and mechanical purposes," does not affect the rights of a respondent charged with keeping a saloon in violation of the provisions of said act, as the resolution may be proper with those provisions eliminated.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 167. The operation of the local option law in a given county (Laws 1889, Act No. 207, § 6) depends on the making of the record in the journal and not upon the forwarding, without delay, by the county clerk to the secretary of state, of a certified transcript of the resolution of prohibition, and of so much of the journal of the proceedings of the board of supervisors as pertains to the election, including the tabular statement of votes, together with a copy of the affidavit of publication of the notice of the adoption of the resolution; and the failure of the clerk to comply with said provision will not defeat the proceeding.—Giddings v. Wells Van Buren County Treas., 99 Mich. 221.

§ 28. Evidence and proof of adoption of local option law.

Alleging adoption of law in information for violation, see post § 60.

Court and jury questions, see post § 70.

¶ 168. The jurisdiction being shown by a valid record and canvass, the determination of the board of supervisors as to the result of a local option election is final.—Thomas v. Abbott, 105 Mich. 687.

¶ 169. Under How. St. §§ 2283b2, 2283b6, a resolution of the board of supervisors prohibiting the sale of liquor, but omitting the required preamble reciting that an election was duly called and held, etc., is not sufficient evidence that the "local option" law is in force in the county to sustain a conviction for violation thereof.—People v. Murphy, 93 Mich. 41.

¶ 170. The existence of the local option law within a county is sufficiently proved by the introduction in evidence of a certified copy of the preamble and resolution of the board of supervisors, ordering prohibition in the county.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 171. Where, in a prosecution for violation of the Local Option Law, Act No. 207, Pub. Acts of 1889, the resolution of the board of supervisors declaring for prohibition is faulty in failing to include the preamble that the election returns have been canvassed and prohibition duly carried, and where therefore said resolution does not afford evidence, as provided by section 17 of said act, of the adoption of prohibition by the voters, proof of said adoption may be made by evidence outside the record of said resolution.—Paul v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 169 Mich. 452.

¶ 172. Where prohibition under the local option act has been in force, and the electors vote to discontinue the same, the board of supervisors, under section 13, Act No. 183, of 1899, which provides that the board "may repeal" prohibition, have no discretion in the matter, and must comply with the decision of the electors.—In re Wilson, 1(Mich. 42.

¶ 173. On the question of prohibition, the vote was in favor of it, 6,832, against it 6,857, blank and rejected votes, seventy-one. Held, that under section 13, Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, providing that previous resolution of the board of supervisors determining the question of prohibition shall not be repealed unless a majority of the electors of the county voting on such proposition at a subsequent election declared against prohibition, the said vote cast was a sufficient majority to authorize the resolution of the board of supervisors declaring for license, since the vote in favor of liquor was a majority of all the legal votes cast.—Battle Creek Brewing Co. v. Board Sup'rs Calhoun County, 166 Mich. 52. (Hooker and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 30. Resubmission and new petitions.

¶ 174. The provisions of Pub. Acts 1889, No. 207, §§ 9, 13, to the effect that the proposition to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquors, having been once submitted and decided, shall not be again submitted within a period of two years thereafter, do not operate to require that the action of voters in preparing petitions for a resubmission of the question, or of the board of supervisors in calling an election, must await the lapse of two years.—Keefer v. Hillsdale County Sup'rs, 109 Mich. 645.

¶ 175. Act No. 183, §§ 6, 9, provides that the question of prohibition shall be submitted at the annual township election, and having been submitted and decided either way, it shall not be submitted again for two years. Where an election was held April 5, 1909, deciding for prohibition and another April 3, 1911, deciding against it, held, the latter election was not void as being held two days short of the two-year period the word "year" in the statute meaning a political and not a calendar year.—Battle Creek Brewing Co. v. Board Sup'rs Calhoun Co., 166 Mich. 52. (Hooker, J., dissenting.)

B. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF PROHIBITION.

§ 31. In general.

Effect of local option prohibition, see post § 32.

Exceptions from the prohibition, see post § 33.

Restrictions on sales to specific classes of persons or at specific times and places, see post IV.

Effect of illegality on contracts, see post § 43; Contracts, IV, D.

Unconstitutionality of laws on grounds other than violation of constitutional prohibition, see Constitutional Law.

¶ 176. Const. art. 4, § 47, prohibiting any act authorizing license to sell spirituous liquors, was not violated by Laws 1851, Act No. 178, prohibiting sales by any person before giving bond to pay the damages that should be occasioned by his traffic.—Langley v. Ergensinger, 3 Mich. 314.

¶ 177. The provision in the Act of 1855 authorizing druggists, under certain restrictions, to sell liquors for medicinal, mechanical and sacramental purposes, was not an act authorizing license to sell, and, therefore, was not repugnant to Const. art. 4, § 47.—People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 244.

¶ 178. Whether the authority to sell under the prohibitory law of 1853 was to be regarded as a license to sell within the constitutional prohibition, thus avoiding the statute, quære.—People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343.

¶ 179. The taxation of the business of selling intoxicating liquors is no license of such business, and therefore the liquor tax laws of 1875 (Acts 226 and 228) were not invalid as repugnant to said constitutional prohibition.—Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 406; People v. Walling, 53 Mich. 264; Reversed 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454.

¶ 180. A city ordinance requiring saloon-keepers generally to take out a licence and pay a substantial license tax did not violate the constitution forbidding the licensing of the traffic.—Kitson v. City of Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325.

¶ 181. The constitutional provision against licensing the sale of liquors did not prevent municipalities from licensing "saloons." A saloon is not necessarily or exclusively a place for liquor selling.—Kitson v. City of Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325; Wolf v. City of Lansing, 53 Mich. 367.

¶ 182. A city ordinance which required all saloon-keepers to obtain licenses, and then used terms excepting from its operation all not engaged in the sale of intoxicants, but including all who were or should be so engaged, was invalid.—Dewar v. People, 40 Mich. 401.

¶ 183. The removal of the constitutional prohibition against licensing the sale of liquor does not authorize a city or village council to license drinking saloons under a charter granted before the constitutional amendment.—Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265; Village of Mount Pleasant v. Vansice, 43 Mich. 361.

¶ 184. The liquor business is as lawful (since the repeal of the prohibitory law) as any other when conducted within the restrictions imposed by the legislature, and rights thereunder should be respected and protected by the courts to the same extent as those under other kinds of business.—Amperse v. City of Kalamazoo, 59 Mich. 78; People v. Scranton, 61 Mich. 244.

¶ 185. Even while the prohibitory statute was in force the law recognized beer as property and brewing as a lawful business, and protected this property as it protected any other lawful product.—Kreiter v. Nichols, 28 Mich. 496.

¶ 186. Under the statutes forbidding sale as a beverage and avoiding contracts of sale, a mortgage of liquors under which possession had been taken by the mortgagee could not be treated as void as between the parties, or as between the mortgagee and the creditors of the mortgagor.—Bagg v. Jerome, 7 Mich. 145.

§ 32. Of local option prohibition.

Criminality of acts in violation of local option law, see post § 49.

¶ 187. A prohibitory law limited to the territory of one county must have the same rules of law applied to it in its construction as would be applied were it state wide in its application.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477. Affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

¶ 188. The suspension of the general liquor law in a given county by the adoption of the local option law therein will not prevent the trial of a respondent who had been held for trial for a violation of the general law prior to its suspension.—People v. Wade, 101 Mich. 89.

¶ 189. Where a brewing company has a quantity of beer on hand at the time of the adoption of the Local Option Law (Act 207, Pub. Acts 1889, as amended) it cannot thereafter manufacture beer for the sole purpose of using the same to preserve the said old beer without being guilty of a violation of said statute.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477. Affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

§ 33. Exceptions from prohibition.

See also ante ¶ 189.

¶ 190. Under the Local Option Law (Act 207, Pub. Acts 1889 as amended), the exception permitting the manufacture of wine and cider in a county adopting said law, and the sale thereof at wholesale to parties residing outside of the county, applies only to wine and cider manufactured from home-grown fruit.—People v. Eberle, 167 Mich. 477. Affirmed in 232 U. S. 700, 58 L. ed. 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464.

IV. RESTRICTIONS OR PROHIBITION AS TO PERSONS, PLACES AND TIMES.

Validity of condition against sale of liquor on premises conveyed, see Deeds § 82.

Admissibility in ejectment of evidence of violation of condition against liquor selling on premises, see Ejectment ¶ 160.

§ 34. Persons eligible to license.

¶ 191. Section 36, Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, providing that two convictions for violation of the liquor laws of the state shall render a person ineligible for a license, if the convictions are had after the new act takes effect, is prospective in its operation, and has no bearing upon prosecutions pending at the time the new statute became law, nor is a conviction had after the new law took effect, for an offense committed before that time, a conviction within the meaning of section 36 so as to count as one of the two convictions which would render the offender ineligible for a license.—People v. Schoenberg, 161 Mich. 88.

§ 35. Number of licenses allowable.

¶ 192. Section 39, Act 291, Pub. Acts 1909, provides that village boards may license liquor dealers "not to exceed the number doing business in the month of April, 1909." At that date a village had no saloons and had a population in excess of five hundred. Held, the language in said section 39 was not intended to apply to a municipality which on that date had no saloons doing business, and such a municipality had the same right to grant licenses as those which on that date had saloons already doing business.—Brown v. Common Council of Sparta, 167 Mich. 492.

§ 36. Wholesale and retail trade relations and contracts.

¶ 193. Act No. 1, 2nd Extra Session 1912, approved April 9, 1912, cannot be construed not to affect a contract between a wholesale liquor dealer and a retailer made during the preceding April.—Lynch v. Val Blatz Brewing Co., 179 Mich. 355.

§ 37. Prohibition of "saloons."

¶ 194. Respondent village passed an ordinance forbidding the keeping of saloons or bars for the sale of liquor, or the selling of liquors in saloons or bars. Held, such ordinance did not prevent the selling of liquor at wholesale in places other than saloons or bars.—Boos v. Scudder, 163 Mich. 678.

§ 38. Vicinity of church.

¶ 195. Under the provisions of Act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909, prohibiting the location of a saloon within four hundred feet of a church, to the effect that said provisions shall not apply to any bar or saloon established or existing at the time the act took effect, a saloon or bar is a "new" one, within the meaning of such provisions, if opened, after a period of prohibition in a county, during the subsequent period of license at a place occupied as a saloon when the law went into effect.—People v. Schneider, 170 Mich. 150.

¶ 196. Where a church has a common entry or lobby at one corner of the building, with doors opening onto intersecting streets, with one of the doors less than four hundred feet along the street lines, from the entrance to a saloon, § 37 of Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, § 5091, How. St., 2nd Ed., is violated.—George v. Travis, 185 Mich. 597.

¶ 197. Under Act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909, § 37, making it criminal to open a saloon having its front entrance within four hundred feet along the street line from the front entrance of a church, in determining the distance, the street line, the dividing line between private property and the highway, is the line to be measured, and it is to be taken from a point in such street line nearest to the front entrance of the saloon to a point in such line nearest to the front entrance of the church; the distance from such street line to the door of either structure or place is not to be measured.—People v. Schneider, 170 Mich. 150.

¶ 198. Where measurements are taken under section 37, Act 291, Pub. Acts 1909, prohibiting the establishment of a saloon within a certain distance of a church or school, they should be made from the front entrance to the saloon and a measurement from the entrance to a hotel through which entrance to the saloon may be gained is unauthorized.—Starks v. Presque Isle Circuit Judge, 173 Mich. 464.

¶ 199. Where a room in a business block has been hired for the purpose of conducting church services but is not occupied until a few days subsequent to the issuing of a license to conduct a saloon within the distance thereof prohibited by section 37, Act 291, Pub. Acts, 1909, a mandamus will not lie to compel the circuit judge to issue an injunction to restrain the usé of the premises for saloon purposes. Brooke and Bird, JJ., giving as a reason that the said act does not apply where the church is established subsequent to the issuing of the license. Stone, J., Moore, C. J., Stone, McAlvay, Brooke, Kuhn and Ostrander, JJ., giving as a reason that such room or hall, in a business block, used for occasional church services is not a church within the meaning of said act.—Starks v. Presque Isle Circuit Judge, 173 Mich. 464.

¶ 200. Under Act No. 291, Public Acts of 1909, prohibiting the opening of a saloon with its front entrance within four hundred feet of an entrance of a church, the fact that the consent of all property owners within three hundred feet is obtained will not excuse the establishment of such a saloon or bar within four hundred feet of the front door of a church.—People v. Schneider, 170 Mich. 150.

§ 39. Residence district restrictions.

¶ 201. A verdict should be directed for defendant in a prosecution of a saloon keeper for violation of the Warner-Cramton Act of 1909, No. 291, § 37, How. 2nd Ed., § 5091, relative to the establishment of any saloon or bar in any residence district unless the consent of all the property owners within three hundred feet of such saloon or bar first be obtained, when the place in which defendant's saloon was established had been used for business purposes a good many years and where the buildings in the section in which the saloon was located were mostly of a business character.—People v. Kirchoff, 201 Mich. 100.

§ 40. Sale by druggists.

Criminality of sales, see post § 51.

¶ 202. Payment of a liquor tax for the coming year does not exempt the dealer from the operation of a subsequent law passed during the year, forbidding the sale of liquor on specified days.—Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280.

¶ 203. Under How. St., § 2282, regulating the sale by druggists of "spirituous, malt, brewed, fermented or vinous" liquors, the sale of fermented or "hard" cider is included, and bond is required.—People v. Foster, 64 Mich. 715.

§ 41. ——Reports and records.

¶ 204. Public Acts 1899, Act No. 183, § 25, requiring druggists to make reports to the prosecuting attorney giving the name and residence of any person procuring liquor, the kind and quantity of liquor procured and the date and object of its procuring, did not forbid the use of ditto marks to indicate residence, kind and quantity, and the word "medicinal" was a sufficient statement of the object of the purchase.—People v. Remus, 135 Mich. 629.

¶ 205. A blank affidavit on a report to the prosecuting attorney, of sales of liquor, containing nothing but the signature of a notary public, was not a compliance with the local option law requiring the druggist to "make and swear to" the report.—People v. Remus, 135 Mich. 629.

¶ 206. Failure of the report required by druggists to the prosecuting attorney as to the sales of liquors in local option territory to comply with the law (Pub. Acts, 1899, No. 183, § 25) does not at all affect the record required to be kept by Comp. L. 1897, § 5381, by the druggist himself.—People v. Thompson, 147 Mich. 444.

¶ 207. The report required by Pub. Acts, 1899, No. 183, § 25, requiring druggists in local option territory to make report of sales of liquors to the prosecuting attorney, need not be made contemporaneously with the sale and is not required to be a copy of the record kept by the druggist, but is an independent report of sales for the apparent purpose of furnishing a public record from which interested persons may ascertain whether the provisions of the law relating to liquor sales by druggists are being observed.—People v. Thompson, 147 Mich. 444.

V. TRANSPORTATION, MARKING AND BRANDING.

¶ 208. Intoxicating liquors illegally kept for sale may lawfully be insured from destruction by fire.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124.

¶ 209. Plaintiff presented to defendant an account, for what purported to be foreign wines and ales, opposite each item of which were added the words "imported and sold in the original packages"; and defendant admitted the correctness of the account. Held, that this was not such "positive proof" that they were "imported under the laws of the United States, and in accordance therewith, and contained in the original packages in which they were imported, and in quantities not less than the laws of the United States prescribe," as is required by the prohibitory liquor law, to entitle the seller to recover therefor.—Niles v. Rhodes, 7 Mich. 374.

§ 44. Crimes and defenses.

[Note. It is not intended here to collect decisions on the general law of crimes or criminal procedure, but only those which are ruled by laws or principles peculiar to this topic. Accordingly the general law of crimes is treated in Crimes, although announced in a case arising under the liquor laws, and the matter relating to the indictment or information, arraignment and trial, evidence and review are treated in Indictment and Prosecution, whenever controlled by principles not peculiar to intoxicating liquor crimes.]

Persons responsible for violations, see post § 48.
Particular violations of law, see post §§ 49-58.

Drunkenness as an offense, see post § 92.
Good faith and intent as immaterial factors in civil liability, see post § 77.
Entrapment into sale as defense, see also Crimes § 17.

¶ 210. It is doubtful if the rule that there can be no crime without a criminal intent would hold true under Pub. L. 1881, p. 350 (How. St. § 2271), the purpose of which is to compel every person who engages in the sale of intoxicating drinks to keep within the statute at his peril.—People v. Roby, 52 Mich. 577.

¶ 211. Unsurveyed lands within the boundaries of the various counties and townships of the state are not exempt from the operation of the general liquor law.—People v. Rush, 113 Mich. 539.

¶ 212. The fact a barroom is also used as a hotel office does not exempt the proprietor of the place from the operation and effect of Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 31 (How. St. § 2283f4), providing that all curtains, screens, partitions, and other things obstructing the view from the sidewalk, street, alley or road in front of or at the side or end of the building, in which liquors are sold or kept for sale, of the bar or place where such liquors are sold or kept shall be removed, and that any person violating such provisions shall be punished.—People v. Carrel, 118 Mich. 79.

¶ 213. In a criminal prosecution, the fact that a license is issued to carry on the saloon business in a hotel and that the saloon was at that time and had been for years located in a room which could not be seen from the street, is not a waiver of the law requiring the removal of all obstructions between the saloon and the public street (Comp. L. 1897, § 5409), where the statute gives no discretion in the person issuing the license and where there are plenty of places in the hotel where the business could have been carried on in compliance with the law.—People v. White, 127 Mich. 428.

¶ 214. A room on the first floor of a hotel building, although locked, in which intoxicating liquors were found, is within the prohibition of Act No. 381, Pub. Acts 1913, relating to the keeping and storing of liquors where such room was surrounded by and was accessible from other rooms of public resort.—People v. Wheeler, 185 Mich. 164.

§ 45. ——Construction of statutes.

Who regarded as dealers, wholesalers, etc., see ante § 2.

¶ 215. The word "actions" in section 13 of the Local Option Act, which provides that all actions which have been brought and all rights of action which have accrued, before the repeal of the act, shall not be affected by its repeal, applies to both criminal actions under section 16 and civil actions under section 19.—In re Adler, 171 Mich. 263.

¶ 216. In a prosecution for the violation of the Local Option Law (Act No. 207, Laws of 1889) as amended, if sentence is pronounced after the repeal of the act, such sentence is invalid unless the case comes within section 13, the saving clause of the act.—In re Adler, 171 Mich. 263.

¶ 217. Under R. S. 1846, p. 184, § 1, presuming or professing to be a seller of whisky was forbidden, although that kind of spirituous liquor was not therein specifically mentioned.—People v. Webster, 2 D. 92.

¶ 218. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 107, § 38, How. 2nd Ed., § 5053, providing that the having or keeping in any house or building, or in any room or place occupied by any person, except a private residence occupied as such, intoxicating liquors for the purpose of selling, giving away, or furnishing to those frequenting such place, or to others, shall be held to be the keeping of a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, furnished or given away, and § 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 5017, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture, sell, keep for sale, give away or furnish any intoxicating liquor or keep a saloon or any other place where any such liquors are manufactured, sold, stored for sale, given away or furnished, must be read together, and as such, construed that if the offense of keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are stored, given away and furnished is shown to have been in a private residence, something more must be shown than simply the keeping or having any of the liquors mentioned in § 1.—People v. Lester, 195 Mich. 477.

¶ 219. Under Act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909, § 1, where a retail liquor dealer has been twice convicted of violating said act, it is not a condition precedent to his prosecution for making sales after the date of the second conviction that his license fee be refunded to him.—People v. Schafran, 168 Mich. 324.

§ 46. ——What are intoxicating liquors.

As jury question, see post § 70.
Hard cider as intoxicant, see also ante ¶ 203.

¶ 220. Strong beer and ale are "intoxicating," and were, therefore, within the prohibition of the act of February 12, 1853.—People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 330.

¶ 221. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5379 and 5380, a sale of malt liquor containing about two per cent of alcohol constitutes an unlawful sale, where the tax required by such sections has not been paid.—People v. North, 153 Mich. 612. (Minority opinion of Hooker and Montgomery, JJ., and Grant, C. J.)

§ 47. ——What is a "sale."

Giving or furnishing liquor as crime, see post § 55.

Single sale as selling, see also post ¶ 288.

¶ 222. In a criminal prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 5380, there is a sale of a quantity less than one dozen quart bottles of beer, where the transaction purports to be a sale of 18 bottles with the privilege of taking any smaller part at one time and no special 18 quarts were set aside for the purchaser and the whole evidence tends to show such sale a subterfuge.—People v. Luders, 126 Mich. 440.

§ 48. Responsibility and complicity; principalship.

Permitting adult to buy and then give liquor to minor, see post ¶ 295.

General law of principalship and responsibility for crimes, see Crimes § 10 et seq.

Civil responsibility for acts of servants, see post § 79.

¶ 223. A liquor dealer cannot be held criminally responsible for the sale of liquor by his clerk, and without his knowledge or concurrence, to habitual drunkards.—People v. Parks, 49 Mich. 333.

¶ 224. Under Pub. Acts 1889, No. 207, governing the sale of intoxicating liquors and providing that "Any person who by himself, or by his clerk, agent or employee, shall violate, etc.," it is no defense to the prosecution of a druggist for violating its provisions, that the sale was made by his clerk contrary to his general instructions.—People v. Longwell, 120 Mich. 311.

¶ 225. A conviction of a saloonkeeper for keeping his saloon open on a legal holiday, was sustained although the barkeeper opened the saloon in disregard of the saloonkeeper's instructions.—People v. Kriesel, 136 Mich. 80.

¶ 226. A liquor dealer is not criminally responsible for the sale of liquor by his clerk, without his knowledge or concurrence, to habitual drunkards.—People v. Parks, 49 Mich. 333. [Note. In People v. Roby, 52 Mich. 577, a doubt was thrown on this case, it being said that the facts were not fully reported in the earlier case, and that there was positive evidence negativing respondent's intent that the criminal act should be committed. Editor.]

¶ 227. The provisions of Laws of 1887, Act No. 313, § 14, making the proprietor or keeper of a saloon liable for the acts of his clerks or agents in permitting any student, or any minor to play cards in his saloon does not comprehend the liability under section 15 of the saloonkeeper to acts of his clerks or agents, because in the latter section these are not mentioned.—People v. Hughes, 86 Mich. 180.

¶ 28. A saloonkeeper who has paid the tax imposed upon the business of selling malt liquors only is not criminally liable for the act of his bartender in selling spirituous liquors without his knowledge or direction, and during his absence from the saloon.—People v. Metzger, 95 Mich. 121.

¶ 229. All persons engaged in the sale of liquor in an open saloon on a legal holiday are made principals by the liquor law of 1887, § 24, and all may be punished for violating the statute.—People v. Ackerman, 80 Mich. 588.

¶ 230. An employee of one who has paid tax for sale of malt liquors only may be convicted as a principal for selling whisky.—People v. Metzger, 95 Mich. 121.

¶ 231. Under How. St. § 2283d, an employee of one who has paid tax for the sale of malt liquors may be convicted in a criminal prosecution for selling two glasses of whisky without payment of tax, as under How. St. § 2283c5, all persons who sell any spirituous liquors by the drink are retail dealers.—People v. Metzger, 95 Mich. 121.

¶ 232. As all who aid and assist in keeping a place where intoxicating liquor is sold in violation of the local option law, whether owner or clerk, are principals, it is not ground for acquittal that another person has been convicted of keeping the place at the time covered by the complaint.—People v. Barnes, 113 Mich. 213.

¶¶ 233, 234. One who sells liquors at retail as the agent, clerk or servant of a corporation which has not paid tax or complied with the statute is properly informed against as a principal, under § 24 of the liquor law of 1887 (How. St. § 2283e7).—People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250.

¶ 235. One who sells liquor as agent of a corporation that has not paid the tax or filed the bond required by law may be informed against as principal.—People v. De Groot, 111 Mich. 245.

¶ 236. Bartender may be charged as principal for aiding and assisting to keep a place where intoxicating liquors are sold contrary to the local option law.—People v. Rice, 103 Mich. 350.

¶ 237. Employment in a saloon as a bartender to sell, both in the presence and absence of the proprietor, is aiding and assisting to maintain said place; and, in a prosecution under the local option law for keeping a saloon where liquors of the prohibited kinds were sold and furnished as a beverage, a bartender so employed may be charged as a principal.—People v. Rice, 103 Mich. 350.

¶ 238. A partner is not criminally liable for the illegal selling of intoxicating liquors to a minor by his copartner, even though at the time of the sale he was close to his partner and could have seen what was going on. —People v. Bronner, 145 Mich. 399.

§ 49. Sale in violation of local or general prohibition.

See also ante ¶ 218.
"Giving" or furnishing defined, see post § 55.
Sales by druggists in violation of local option law, see post § 51.
Sales by clerks or agents, see ante § 48.

¶ 239. The local option law in the use of the words, "sell, give away or furnish" contemplates that the offending party shall be the owner or have some interest other than that of a carrier.—People v. Driver, 174 Mich. 214.

¶ 240. The local option law is not violated by defendant, who, at the request of his neighbor, in good faith merely to serve such neighbor, orders beer shipped to himself and advances money therefor, which is subsequently repaid, though he takes the beer to his own home where the neighbor gets it, since the contract is executed where the order is received and defendant has no interest therein.—People v. Driver, 174 Mich. 214.

¶ 241. Where, in a prosecution for violating the local option law respondent is shown to have kept and furnished liquors in his shop for others who might come there to drink, the offense is complete and the intent is immaterial.—People v. Bacon, 117 Mich. 187.

¶ 242. A conviction may be had for selling intoxicating liquors in violation of the Local Option Law (Act 207, Pub. Acts 1889 as amended by Act 183, Pub. Acts 1899) though defendant has no intent to violate such law. —People v. Hatinger, 174 Mich. 333.

¶ 243. Where liquor is shipped into a prohibition county, C. O. D., to a person ordering it from defendant vendor, and the express agent receiving same refuses to deliver it to the consignee, but returns it to the place of shipment, the transaction is not a sale, and defendant is not liable to conviction under section 36, Act No. 107, Pub. Acts of 1909, which provides that such a shipment shall be held to be a sale made at the place of destination.—People v. C. Kern Brewing Co., 166 Mich. 292.

¶ 244. Intoxicating liquor is not sold at the place where an order is taken by a salesman for a wholesale liquor dealer of another county for subsequent shipment therefrom to the purchaser.—People v. Meloche, 186 Mich. 536.

¶ 245. A sale of intoxicating liquor is not made at the place where an order for it was given, where it was afterwards shipped from the seller's place of business in another city to the purchaser by common carrier, and the pay subsequently collected by the seller in person at the place where the order was taken.—People v. Perenchio, 181 Mich. 314.

¶ 246. One who takes orders for intoxicating liquors in a town other than that in which he is licensed to sell at wholesale, and who afterwards ships by common carrier from his place of business to the several purchasers the liquor so ordered, and from whom he afterwards in person collects the pay therefor, is not guilty of selling liquor without a license in the town where the orders were taken, since the sale was made at his place of business, and not where the order was taken.—People v. Perenchio, 181 Mich. 314.

¶ 247. Prior to the adoption of local option in Calhoun County, the brewing company of which defendant was secretary was manufacturing and selling beer in said county. After the adoption of said law the company's business was reorganized in the County of Kalamazoo. It established an office there, bought its beer at Detroit, and stored the same at its place of business in Kalamazoo County. It continued to maintain an office in Calhoun County with a bookkeeper in charge. Said bookkeeper took an order for beer and received cash payment therefor in Calhoun County. The order stated that it was subject to the approval of defendant and the same was approved by defendant in Kalamazoo County. Held the sale took place in Calhoun County so as to make defendant liable under Comp. L. 1897, § 5412, as amended by Act No. 183 of the Laws of 1899.—People v. Martin, 169 Mich. 113.

¶ 248. Respondent together with several persons in Ionia County, where the local option act was in force, made up a sum of money with which respondent was to buy a quantity of liquor in another county, where said act was not in force. Respondent purchased a keg of liquor and brought the same to Ionia County, where said persons drank each as much as he wanted out of the keg. Held, respondent was guilty of violating the Local Option Act.—People v. Curry, 163 Mich. 180.

¶ 249. Comp. Laws 1897, § 6412, making it unlawful to keep for sale, sell, or furnish any intoxicating liquors in local option counties, does not, either in terms or by construction, prohibit common carriers from transporting or delivering intoxicating beverages within a local option county when purchased outside thereof; and no liability attaches to express companies or their agents for transporting or delivering liquor to consignees in local option counties.—People v. Converse, 157 Mich. 29.

¶ 250. One who purchases liquor in a county where the purchase and sale are lawful and transports the same in his own conveyance into a local option county for his own personal use without having the packages labeled, in accordance with Pub. Acts 1913, No. 381, § 2, is neither a consignor nor a consignee and is not subject to the penalties of such act.—People v. Bola, 197 Mich. 370.

¶ 251. A conviction for violation of § 2 of the Pray Act, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 381, § 2, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to consign, ship, or transport intoxicating liquors into a dry territory, unless properly labeled, and imposing the penalty of the act upon any consignee accepting or receiving any package containing liquors not properly labeled, or any person consigning, shipping, transporting, or delivering any such package, knowing that the statement on the package is false, for going to a wet county and obtaining liquor shipped to such county from another state and consigned in the name of a fictitious person, and conveying such liquor to his home town in a hired auto truck, was affirmed by a divided court.—People v. Spaulding, 201 Mich. 58.

§ 50. Sale without license, bond or payment of tax.

¶ 252. Selling a single pint of liquor without having given the bond required of dealers by Pub. Laws 1881, Act No. 259, § 9 (How. St. § 2270), is a violation of the statute, whatever the seller's intent was as to becoming a liquor dealer.—People v. Kropp, 52 Mich. 582.

¶ 253. The law forbidding the selling of liquors without first paying the tax thereon (Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 17) has for its object the taxation of the business wherever found or by whomsoever carried on; regardless of whether the place be or be not a social club.—People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250.

¶ 254. A liquor saloon proprietor who, in confident expectation of a court decision invalidating a local option law, keeps on hand a stock of liquors, ready for production and sale immediately on the announcing of the decision, may, notwithstanding the decision when made and announced, be prosecuted and convicted under a law forbidding the business of selling and keeping for sale spirituous, etc., liquors at retail without first having paid the required license.—People v. Hicks, 79 Mich. 457.

¶ 255. Where orders for beer are taken by an agent at Z. and sent to the principal, a brewery company, at G., and the goods are shipped in gross to the agent, who delivers the same and collects the money therefor, the sales are made at Z., so as to subject the agent to punishment for selling liquor without having paid tax, etc., in the county wherein Z. lies.—People v. De Groot, 111 Mich. 245.

¶ 256. Section 5379, Comp. Laws 1897, as amended by Act No. 62, Pub. Acts 1903, required the payment of a tax upon the business of selling liquors, and defined retail dealers in liquors as all persons who sell any liquors by the drink. Defendant, a carpenter working about a hotel, in the absence of the hotel owner, sold the prosecutor a single bottle of liquor and was indicted under the statute. Held, that defendant came within the terms of the statute so as to be subject to the tax, and the penalties of the statute.—People v. Wilcox, 152 Mich. 39.

¶ 257. Laws 1887, Act No. 313, making it unlawful to engage in the business of selling spirituous and intoxicating liquors without having paid the tax required therein does not cover sales made upon public waters outside of shore line of adjoining township, and to which its boundaries, according to government survey, extend.—People v. Bouchard, 82 Mich. 156.

¶ 258. Comp. Laws 1897, § 5379, as amended by Act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909, relating to the sale of liquor, makes it unlawful for a corporation "to solicit or do business" in Michigan without the license provided by statute. Held, that a.. agent of a foreign corporation who solicits orders from wholesalers without such license is guilty under said statutes, although he is authorized only to solicit orders to be accepted at the home office of the corporation.—People v. Swenson, 162 Mich. 397.

¶ 259. If a wife, as administratrix of her husband's estate, can continue to carry on the business of liquor selling in which he was engaged at the time of his death, she cannot do so without first paying the tax and giving the bond required by the statute; and if she does so she is criminally liable.—People v. Sykes, 96 Mich. 452.

¶ 260. Under How. St. § 2283d (Comp. L. § 5385), making it a misdemeanor for any person to engage in the liquor business without having given the bond required by the act, a saloonkeeper whose bond is insufficient because one of his bondsmen is disqualified is not relieved from liability by the fact he gave it in good faith believing the bond to be good, and that the officers charged with the duty of determining as to the sufficiency of the bond have accepted and approved the same.—Wolcott v. Superior Court Judge, 112 Mich. 311.

¶ 261. In a prosecution for an alleged violation of Act 291, Pub. Acts 1909, providing that only one saloon for every 500 inhabitants may be established in villages, etc., in counties which adopt local option and return to the license system, the unlawful conduct of a village council in attempting to license a second saloon in a town of 308 inhabitants in such a county is no protection to respondent who secured the second license though he complied with the law in obtaining it.—People v. Edwards, 174 Mich. 445.

§ 51. Sales by druggists or physicians.

Sales by clerks, see also ante § 48.
Averring the crime, see post § 62.
Evidence as to offense, see post §§ 68, 69.

¶ 262. In a local option county a druggist who sells liquor without filing bond, or who, having filed bond, sells in violation of restrictions, should be prosecuted under the local option law, not under the general statute.—People v. Murphy, 93 Mich. 41; Bishopp v. Hillsdale Circuit Judge, 94 Mich. 461.

¶ 263. A druggist who has complied with the general law by filing a bond entitling him to sell liquors for medicinal purposes but has made a single unlawful sale, cannot be convicted of "keeping a place for the sale of liquors" in violation of the local option law (How. St. § 2283a). The prosecution in such case should be for the illegal sale.—Maynard v. Eaton Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 201.

¶ 264. A druggist, acting in good faith in the sale of liquors, has a right to rely upon the statement made by the purchaser as to the purpose for which the liquor is to be applied, unless circumstances or facts known to him show such statement to be false, and are sufficient to satisfy such druggist, acting in good faith and in an honest endeavor to obey the law, that the purpose is not such as stated by the purchaser; the law does not require him to enter into an extended investigation, or to refuse to sell to a stranger without investigation and proof of the truth of his assertion of such purpose.—People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587.

¶ 265. The information charged defendant with selling at retail intoxicating liquor, without any license or authority, he not having paid any tax, and not having a receipt and notice. Held, the fact that he was engaged in the business of selling drugs would not constitute a defense.—Stewart v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 642.

¶ 266. One who keeps a drug store, giving a bond as a druggist, may not keep a saloon or habitually sell liquor as a beverage without being liable under the local option act or the general liquor law for keeping a place where intoxicating liquor is sold as a beverage unlawfully.—People v. Congdon, 137 Mich. 133.—Writ of error dismissed in 200 U. S. 612, 50 L. ed. 619, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 753.

¶ 267. A violation of Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, § 25, requiring a report of a druggist in local option territory to the prosecuting attorney of liquor sales made, subjects the offender to punishment but does not of itself render a sale theretofore legal unlawful.—People v. Thompson, 147 Mich. 444.

¶ 268. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5381, 5391, forbid, and were intended to forbid, sales of liquor by druggists to certain persons, even for medicinal purposes.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

¶ 269. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5381, 5391, make it unlawful for any one to sell liquor to an intoxicated person. Druggists by the terms of the act are permitted to sell liquor for medicinal purposes, but are required to do so in strict compliance with the law, and are forbidden to sell to persons in the habit of becoming intoxicated. The Local Option Act (Act No. 207, Pub. Acts 1889) provides that said act shall not apply to druggists, but states that druggists shall be under the restrictions imposed by the general laws of the state. Defendant druggist sold a mixture of whisky and quinine to a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated. He made the sale on a physician's prescription, in good faith and without knowledge that said person had said habit. Held, defendant was criminally liable despite his good faith, since by the terms of the statute he must act at his peril.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

¶ 270. Where a statute expressly forbids the sale of liquor to one in the habit of becoming intoxicated, it is immaterial that a respondent sells the liquor in good faith, on a physician's prescription and without knowledge of said habit.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

¶ 271. How. St. § 2283c6 absolutely prohibits the sale of spirituous liquor by a druggist to a person who is in the habit of getting intoxicated, whether to be used as a beverage or not; and the words "to be used as a beverage" do not apply to portions of the statute prohibiting sales to persons in the habit of getting intoxicated.—People v. Hamilton, 101 Mich. 87.

¶ 272. Where a druggist mixes ten grains of quinine with eight ounces of whisky and sells it, the sale is as a matter of law a sale of intoxicating liquor, and not a sale of medicine.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

¶ 273. How. St. § 2282, regulating the sale by druggists of "spirituous, malt, brewed, fermented or vinous" liquors, includes the sale of fermented or "hard" cider, and the sale thereof as a beverage without giving a bond as required by the statute is unlawful.—People v. Foster, 64 Mich. 715.

¶ 274. There is nothing that prohibits a druggist from retailing spirits, provided he complies with the law relating to retailers. —Stewart v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 642.

¶ 275. Where a druggist without a license sells liquor to be drunk as a beverage on the premises, such sale cannot possibly be within any of his lawful privileges.—Stewart v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 229.

¶ 276. The mere fact that a person is a practicing physician does not prevent his conviction for violation of the local option law, so called, by keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, stored for sale and furnished.—People v. Bell, 170 Mich. 675.

¶ 277. A druggist in a local option county who had given the required bond and who had sold intoxicating liquor in excess of three gallons, in good faith for medicinal purposes, was not limited to selling quantities within the limit prescribed by statute for retailers, and was not subject to prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 5380, as a wholesaler. —People v. Longwell, 136 Mich. 302.

¶ 278. Where the act of a druggist in selling liquor upon a physician's prescription is unlawful, the physician cannot be held liable on the theory of an accessory before the fact, aider or abettor, for issuing the prescription in bad faith.—People v. Rice, 161 Mich. 657.

¶ 279. Section 26, Act No. 107, Pub. Acts 1909, provides that druggists may sell liquors upon the bona fide prescription of a physician. Held, that unless there is open or tacit collusion between the druggist and the physician, so that the actual sale is unlawful because, though made upon a certificate proper in form, it is made in bad faith, the conduct of the physician is not unlawful.—People v. Rice, 161 Mich. 657.

¶ 280. Section 26, Act No. 107, Pub. Acts 1909, provides that druggists may sell liquors upon the bona fide prescription of a physician. Held, that under this act a physician cannot be convicted merely for issuing such a prescription in bad faith to a drunkard. —People v. Rice, 161 Mich. 657.

§ 52. Sale to minors.

Sales by clerks or servants, see ante § 48.

¶ 281. Belief in good faith upon inquiry that a person to whom liquor is sold is of lawful age is a good defense for one charged with selling liquor to a minor in violation of the law.—People v. Bronner, 145 Mich. 399.

¶ 282. In a prosecution against a saloon keeper for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor, held, that the defense of good faith under Comp. L. 1897, § 5391, should have been allowed.—People v. Averill, 179 Mich. 224.

¶ 283. In a prosecution of a person engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors, for selling to a minor, the question of good faith is involved and Comp. L. 1897, § 5391, applies.—People v. Averill, 179 Mich. 224.

¶ 284. Pub. Acts 1909, Act 160, making it unlawful for any person to sell intoxicating liquors to a minor, does not repeal Comp. L. 1897, § 5391, since such act refers only to persons engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors.—People v. Averill, 179 Mich. 224.

¶ 285. Act No. 160, relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors, if inconsistent with the later statute on the subject, Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, must yield to the latter.—People v. Thompson, 161 Mich. 391.

¶ 286. Section 13 of the Law of 1887 forbids the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors for any purpose. Act No. 160, Pub. Acts 1909, makes it an offense to sell them as a beverage. Held, Act No. 160 does not repeal the law of 1887.—People v. Thompson, 161 Mich. 391.

¶ 287. Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors, does not amend section 13 of the law of 1887 so as to increase the penalty for violations previously committed.—People v. Thompson, 161 Mich. 391.

¶ 288. A single sale constitutes engaging in the business of selling intoxicating liquors within the meaning of the statute forbidding sales to minors.—People v. Thompson, 161 Mich. 391.

¶ 289. Proprietors of a saloon who, at the time a minor was in such a saloon, were absent therefrom, the saloon being in charge of their clerk, and who had no knowledge of the minor's presence, cannot be convicted of violating Laws of 1887, Act No. 313, § 15 (How. St. § 2283d8), providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to allow a minor to visit or remain in any room where liquors are sold, unless accompanied by his father or guardian.—People v. Hughes, 86 Mich. 180.

¶ 290. The offense, under Laws 1875, Act No. 231, of selling liquors to a minor was not committed where the dealer sold to one whom he had reason to believe and did believe to be of age.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 291. In a prosecution for selling liquor to a minor contrary to Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 13 (How. St. § 2283d6), which declares that a sale of liquor to any minor shall be "prima facie evidence of intent" to violate the law, proof that respondent made the sale in good faith, relying on the minor's appearance and his statements that he was of full age, precludes conviction. Criminal intent is material.—People v. Welch, 71 Mich. 548.

¶ 292. Comp. L. 1897, § 5391, making it unlawful for any person except a druggist to furnish or give intoxicants to a minor as construed with the title of the act "An act to provide for the taxation and regulation of the business of manufacturing and selling," etc., does not apply to the giving of intoxicants to a guest in a private home. —People v. Bird, 138 Mich. 31.

¶ 293. Comp. L. 1897, § 5381, forbidding the sale of liquor to a minor imposes upon the seller the duty of ascertaining the age of the minor at his peril.—People v. Curtis, 129 Mich. 1.

¶ 294. A child cannot be made an agent to purchase or get liquor, and a statute forbidding the sale of liquors to a minor is violated though the liquor is delivered to the minor for an adult's use.—People v. Garrett, 68 Mich. 487.

¶ 295. A saloonkeeper who permits an adult to buy intoxicating liquor and give it to a minor to drink in his saloon is guilty of "furnishing" such liquor to minors within the meaning of Act 313 of Laws of 1887, prohibiting the furnishing of liquor to minors.— People v. Neumann, 85 Mich. 98.

¶ 296. One who owns and occupies a building used as a club house, and customarily, for a stated service charge, furnishes beer to members which has been bought directly from wholesalers by members or through such proprietor, is guilty of furnishing beer to a minor under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 160, § 2, regardless of his intent, where he furnishes beer to a party, one of whom was conceded to be a minor, at the request of a member of a club who was a member of the party.—People v. Lumley, 189 Mich. 613.

¶ 297. Section 5392, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5068, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor to students attending any public or private institution of learning does not unconstitutionally deprive adult students during the school year of privileges enjoyed by them in vacation.—People v. Damm, 183 Mich. 554.

¶ 298. Since intent is not made an ingredient of the offense described by § 5392, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5068, the owner of a saloon is criminally liable for the sale in his absence and without his knowledge by his agents of intoxicating liquor to a student of the University of Michigan.—People v. Damm, 183 Mich. 554.

§ 54. Sale to Indians.

¶ 299. Section 5391, Comp. L. 1897, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to "any Indian or person of Indian descent," applies to all persons with Indian blood in their veins.—People v. Gebhard, 151 Mich. 192.

§ 55. "Giving" or "furnishing" liquor.

¶ 300. The act of an individual in serving liquor to private citizens at his home without an intention to violate or evade the Local Option Law (Pub. Acts 1889, No. 207), is not a criminal violation of such law.— People v. Peterson, 156 Mich. 235.

¶ 301. It is not a violation of the local option act for a person in his home to extend hospitality to his guests in furnishing liquor to them, so long as there is no intent to traffic in liquors.—People v. Slater, 164 Mich. 156.

¶ 302. One who at his own house as an act of hospitality, without charging or receiving money therefor, gives a guest one or two drinks of intoxicating liquor, is not guilty of a violation of the Local Option Law. —People v. Hancock, 166 Mich. 654.

¶ 303. One going to a farmhouse to secure milk, and while there partaking of intoxicating liquor at the invitation of the farmer, cannot be held as a matter of law not to have been a guest.—People v. Hancock, 166 Mich. 654.

¶ 304. A clerk living in a hotel who furnishes beer to a servant girl in her room in the hotel is furnishing liquor in the girl's, and not in his own home.—People v. Myers, 161 Mich. 40.

¶ 305. A clerk living in a hotel who furnishes beer to a servant girl in her room in the hotel is liable to conviction under Comp. L. 1897, § 5412, prohibiting the giving away of liquor.—People v. Myers, 161 Mich. 40.

¶ 306. Defendant in the office of a livery stable belonging to another person gave one Vipond a drink from his bottle of whisky. Held, such act was a violation of the local option statute, in force in the county in question.—People v. McCall, 161 Mich. 674.

¶ 307. Respondent and one Davis, together with others, were playing billiards together. Davis gave respondent some money to purchase liquor, and the latter went out and got a bottle of whisky which he passed around to the others. Held, he was guilty under Act No. 207, Pub. Acts 1889, as amended, of furnishing liquor.—People v. Lapham, 162 Mich. 394.

¶ 308. Respondents, located in a local option county, took orders signed by customers for beer and they were forwarded to the brewery in another county. Respondents received the price in cash and the freight money. They sent said cash, less the freight money, to the brewery with the orders. The brewery shipped the beer, each case or package being marked to the customer as consignee. The money paid for freight was put into a receptacle to be paid later to the transportation companies. The brewery sent respondents a notification sheet which they checked up with the beer received at the station. One of respondents, the son of the other, transferred the beer over to his father's place. Respondents received their compensation in the form of payment for the return of empty bottles. The beer was distributed to customers without attention as to whether each customer got the particular case consigned to him. Held, respondents were guilty of violation of the Local Option Law under a charge of keeping a place where intoxicating liquors were sold, stored for sale and furnished.—People v. Adler, 169 Mich. 322.

¶ 309. Respondent and one Mathews were working together on a farm in a local option county. Mathews gave respondent a dollar and requested him to purchase a bottle of whisky in a county where the same might be legally sold. Respondent went to said county, purchased the whisky, and turned it over untouched to Mathews. Respondent did what he did merely as an accommodation to Mathews. Held, he was not guilty of violating the Local Option Law, Comp. L. 1897, § 5412.—People v. Tart, 169 Mich. 586.

§ 56. Selling at prohibited times and days.

Sunday closing, see post § 57.
Sale after legal hours, see post § 58.

¶ 310. The statute prohibiting the keeping open of saloons, during certain hours and on holidays, imposes upon the keeper of a saloon the affirmative duty to see that it is closed during the prohibited time, and the neglect of such duty is an offense.—People v. Lundell, 136 Mich. 303.

¶ 311. Laws 1879, Act No. 267, closing all "saloons" on "legal holidays" is meant to prevent the sale of liquors on holidays in any place of resort for refreshments.—People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27.

¶ 312. In a prosecution for having a saloon open on the 4th of July, it cannot be said that respondent must be convicted if the saloon was open for any purpose whatever.—People v. Minter, 59 Mich. 557.

¶ 313. Christmas is a "legal holiday" within the meaning of a statute directing saloons to be closed on legal holidays, Sundays and election days.—Reithmiller v. People, 44 Mich. 280.

¶ 314. The term "all legal holidays" as used in the Liquor Law of 1887, § 17, includes all days set apart by the governor or by the president of the United States as days for fasting and prayer, or of thanksgiving; e. g., April 30, 1889, known as "centennial day."—People v. Ackerman, 80 Mich. 588.

¶ 315. Pub. Acts 1875, No. 163, in force in 1887 (How. St. § 1591), concerning legal holidays, enacted that in case any of the holidays should fall upon Sunday, then the Monday following should be considered as said holiday; and the amending act (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 185) provided that whenever certain specified holidays (including July 4) should fall upon Sunday, the Monday following should be deemed a public holiday "for any or all of the purposes aforesaid." Held, that one who kept his saloon open on Monday, July 5, 1897, violated How. St. § 2283e (being Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 17), requiring saloons to be closed on all "legal holidays."—People v. Thielman, 115 Mich. 66.

¶ 316. A conviction in 1903, under Comp. L. 1897, § 5395, requiring saloons to remain closed on legal holidays, was sustained, although said section became law in 1887, and Labor day, the holiday in question, was not made a holiday until 1893.—People v. Kriesel, 136 Mich. 80.

¶ 317. Defendant saloonkeeper was prosecuted under section 5395, Comp. L. 1897, and section 51, Act No. 4, Ex. Sess. 1907, for keeping open on election day. The election was one for the making of nominations under a newly enacted direct primary law, under which elections had been held for two years. Held, a conviction was not invalid from the fact that the People were unable to prove that all the statutory requirements had been fulfilled in adopting the system.—People v. Doyle, 160 Mich. 423.

¶ 318. Liquor dealers or other business men will not be permitted to excuse noncompliance with or violation of the statutes relating to legal holidays by pleading ignorance that a particular day has been set apart by proclamation of the governor or president as a day of "fasting and prayer or thanksgiving."—People v. Ackerman, 80 Mich. 588.

§ 57. ——Sunday closing.

Sales by servants, see ante § 48.

¶ 319. In a prosecution under a statute requiring places where liquor is sold to be closed on Sundays a proprietor's intent or purpose in allowing his saloon to be kept open is immaterial.—People v. Waldvogel, 49 Mich. 337.

¶ 320. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday the proprietor's intent or purpose in keeping it open is immaterial; and this is so though the opening was the act of respondent's bartender and without his knowledge or express authority.—People v. Blake, 52 Mich. 566; People v. Roby, 52 Mich. 577.

¶ 321. A statute requiring saloons, etc., to be "closed" on Sundays and after certain hours at night means that all sales shall be entirely stopped, and the traffic shut off effectually, so that drinking and the conveniences for drinking shall be no longer accessible, and those who frequent such places for that purpose shall be dispersed.—Kurtz v. People, 33 Mich. 279; and see Lynch v. People, 16 Mich. 472.

¶ 322. Under § 5395, Comp. L. 1897, § 5074, How. St., 2nd Ed., it is the duty of the proprietor of a saloon to keep it closed at his peril on Sunday.—People v. Damskey, 180 Mich. 664.

¶ 323. Sections 7 and 17 of Act No. 313, Pub. Acts 1887, are not repealed by Act No. 291, Pub. Acts 1909, passed without a saving clause, and the provisions of the said Act of 1887, relating to the closing of saloons on Sunday, are in force so as to support a conviction had after the passage of the Act of 1909 for an offense committed before its passage.—People v. Schoenberg, 161 Mich. 88.

¶ 324. A saloon is not "closed," within the meaning of How. St. § 2274, requiring such places to be closed at certain times, so long as it is possible for persons desiring liquor to get in peacefully, whether by the outside entrance or any other, or so long as any customer who is inside at the time for closing remains inside. And it is not important that there is no one attending the bar, if the liquor is accessible, nor is it important that none is sold; since it is not alone the intent or purpose for which the saloon is kept open that is offensive to the law, but also the opportunity furnished persons to obtain liquors at the hours and on the days prohibited by the statute.—People v. Cummerford, 58 Mich. 328.

¶ 325. Where the keeper of a garden used as a pleasure resort maintains therein a bar at which intoxicating liquors are sold on week days, he must, in order to comply with the statute, close access to the bar completely on Sunday, either by closing the bar itself or the garden.—People v. Beller, 73 Mich. 640.

¶ 326. Where a door leading from a saloon into a hallway that does not connect with any room but the saloon is left open, and where persons are allowed to enter the hallway the saloon is open within the meaning of the statute requiring it to be closed on Sunday.—People v. Schotley, 116 Mich. 1.

¶ 327. Where the owner of a saloon permits occupants of the building to go in and out through the bar room on Sunday, he is liable for violation of Sunday closing law.—People v. Norman, 158 Mich. 37.

¶ 328. Under Comp. L. 1898, § 5395, requiring saloons to be kept closed on Sundays, a saloonkeeper who enters his saloon on a Sunday to fix the fires, empty the pans under the refrigerators, light the lights, and prepare his meals in an adjoining kitchen, is guilty, although he may have no other place to prepare his meals and no liquors are ever served in the kitchen and no other person enters on Sunday.—People v. Henze, 149 Mich. 130.

¶ 329. Comp. Laws 1897, § 5395, requiring saloons to be closed on the first day of the week, is not complied with by surrounding the bar of the saloon with a temporary fence on that day, the room itself being open for the conduct of a restaurant business.—People v. Gordon, 156 Mich. 237.

¶ 330. Where a saloonkeeper lived with his family in rooms over his saloon, which were reached by means of a stairway and a room communicating with the wine rooms, the presence of persons in one of these wine rooms on Sunday constituted a violation of the law requiring saloons to be closed on Sundays.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

¶ 331. A saloonkeeper occupied three rooms for that business, and lived over them. The rooms opened into one another from front to rear, and the rear room had an outer door. The bar was in the front room; the other two were used for card-playing and drinking. Between the front and back rooms there was a hole in the wall. Held, that the saloon included the three rooms; and if any outsider had access to the rear rooms on Sunday, no matter for what purpose, the statute requiring the saloon to be kept closed on that day was violated.—People v. Higgins, 56 Mich. 159.

¶ 332. The rooms, in which a saloonkeeper and his family live, constitute part of the saloon, if he sometimes uses them to serve or dispense liquors in as part of his saloon business, and to open them or not keep them closed on Sunday to persons not members of his family is a violation of the law against opening saloons on Sunday.—People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247.

¶ 333. L., a saloonkeeper, was properly convicted of violating Pub. L. 1881, p. 350, How. St. § 2274, whose clerk, without his knowledge or consent, but while he was on the premises, opened the saloon on Sunday morning to have it cleaned, and meanwhile sold a drink to a casual customer who insisted on having it.—People v. Roby, 52 Mich. 577.

¶ 334. A room connected with a saloon, where sales of liquor can be made on Sundays and after hours, and where liquors are served from the saloon on week days, is a part of the saloon, and failure to keep it closed on Sunday is criminal.—People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371.

¶ 335. A front room having on its door the signs "Lager Beer" and "Wines and Liquors," and connected by double doors with a room having a bar where liquors are stored, though nominally an eating room, is such a part of the saloon, where liquors are served indiscriminately in it or in the rear room during week days, as to warrant a conviction for keeping it open on Sundays.—People v. Koob, 109 Mich. 358.

¶ 336. A saloonkeeper who serves liquor upon Sunday in a room adjoining and connected with his saloon is guilty of a violation of the law against keeping saloons open on Sunday, even though he receives no pay for the liquor so furnished.—People v. Bowkus, 109 Mich. 360.

¶ 337. Laws 1881, Act No. 259, How. St. § 2274, requiring saloons to be kept closed on Sunday, is violated if a saloon is allowed to be open whether for the sale of liquor, for cleaning up, or for any other business purpose; and the question of the proprietor's intent is immaterial.—People v. Waldvogel, 49 Mich. 337.

¶ 338. Where a saloonkeeper is prosecuted for keeping his saloon open on Sunday, the respondent's intent in allowing his saloon to be open is immaterial, even if the opening was the act of his bartender and without his knowledge or express authority.—People v. Blake, 52 Mich. 566.

¶ 339. A saloonkeeper charged with opening his saloon on Sunday cannot justify on the ground of overruling necessity, in that his father was taken suddenly ill in the vicinity of the saloon, and had to be immediately cared for, where it appears that there were drug stores equally convenient of access and that a number of customers were admitted to the saloon while so open.—People v. Taylor, 110 Mich. 491.

¶ 340. The fact that a saloonkeeper relied upon the advice or permission of a police officer to keep the doors of the saloon open on Sunday, with the bar merely screened off from the balance of the room, is no defense to a prosecution for keeping the saloon open in violation of law.—People v. Gordon, 156 Mich. 237.

¶ 341. The fact that other saloons are kept open on Sunday in violation of law is no defense to a prosecution of a saloonkeeper for violating such law.—People v. Gordon, 156 Mich. 237.

¶ 342. A saloonkeeper charged with failing to keep his saloon closed on Sunday cannot base a successful defense on the fact that the bar was closed and separated by damask curtains and other barricades from other rooms, and that he received his friends in these rooms on that day.—People v. Hughes, 90 Mich. 368.

¶ 343. It is no defense to a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday that the owner lived over the saloon and the only entrance to his home was through a room connected with the saloon by means of swinging doors.—People v. Talbot, 120 Mich. 486.

§ 58. ——Unlawful hours.

¶ 344. A saloon keeper acts at his peril if he conducts any business in his saloon that requires its doors to be open or permits people to enter at unlawful hours.—People v. Minter, 59 Mich. 557.

¶ 345. One was properly convicted of keeping open his saloon after eleven o'clock at night, where, on his trial, he testified that on the night in question he closed the saloon at eleven o'clock; that his bartender and a third person remained in the saloon with him for the purpose of "cleaning up the place,—scrubbing the floor, cleaning the glasses, and fixing the things up all right for Monday morning"; that when they got through they went out at the back door, and locked it; that no one was admitted to the saloon during the time they remained there; that no liquor was sold there; but that the parties took one drink when they went away.—People v. James, 100 Mich. 522.

¶ 346. Interconnecting billiard and lunch rooms, the lunch room connecting with a saloon in front of it, all being arranged for use together and for the accommodation of customers, must all be closed to the public during unseasonable hours.—People v. Hughes, 97 Mich. 543.

¶ 347. A barkeeper who permitted the keeper of a boarding house in a portion of the building in which the saloon in question was located to remain in the saloon during prohibited hours longer than the time required to clean out a water pipe, was in effect having or keeping the saloon open contrary to law, the entry having been made to clean out such pipe.—People v. Lundell, 136 Mich. 303.

¶ 349. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open after hours, it is no defense that defendant in good faith believed he had the right to keep the saloon open.—People v. Worges, 176 Mich. 685.

General law of complaints serving as accusations on which to prosecute, see Indictment, XVIII.
General law of indictments and informations, see Indictment, I.
Searches and seizures and procedure for search, see Searches and Seizures.

¶ 350. A complaint under Comp. L. 1857, § 1667, which does not set forth any facts or circumstances, but merely states the belief of the complainant that the person complained of has, between certain specified days, sold liquors in violation of the act, is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the justice to whom it is made to issue subpoenas and compel the attendance of witnesses to testify concerning supposed violations.—In re Morton, 10 Mich. 208; In re Hall, 10 Mich. 210.

§ 60. Charging and describing offense.

¶ 351. An indictment for a violation of the statute against the presuming to be "a seller of wine, brandy, rum or other spirituous liquors," etc., without being licensed as an innholder (R. S. 1846, p. 184, § 1), charged the defendant with presuming to be a seller of whisky, alleging it to be spirituous liquor, without license. Held sufficient.—People v. Webster, 2 D. 92.

¶ 352. An information for selling whisky without payment of a tax is not defective for not stating whether respondent was engaged in a business requiring the payment of a $300 or $500 tax provided for in the statute, or which tax it was respondent failed to pay.—People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

¶ 353. It is not necessary in an information in a prosecution for engaging in liquor business without having paid tax, etc., to describe the building in which the business was carried on.—People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

¶ 354. An allegation of sale "without having the receipt and notice for such tax posted up," etc., sufficiently charges that the receipt and notice were not posted where the liquors were kept for sale.—People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

¶ 355. A complaint which merely charges that on a particular day the defendant sold liquor without having given a bond will not support a conviction under Sess. L. 1881, p. 350 (How. St. § 2270), if it does not allege a sale to any person or persons or identify some act or acts as illegal.—People v. Minnock, 52 Mich. 628.

¶ 356. A complaint and warrant for selling liquor without giving bond, contrary to How. St. § 2270, must allege some specific act of selling to some person.—People v. Heffron, 53 Mich. 527.

¶ 357. A complaint under How. St. § 1286 for doing business as a liquor seller without having first paid the annual tax and posted notice need not allege any specific act of selling, etc., to some person, as is required in a complaint under section 2270.—People v. Breidenstein, 65 Mich. 65.

¶ 358. A warrant alleging that respondent unlawfully sold to a minor "a large quantity of, to wit, spirituous liquors," etc., is not rendered void by the use of the words "to wit."—People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625.

¶ 359. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11924, How. 2nd Ed., § 15095, an information charging the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor to a person in the habit of getting intoxicated following the language of the statute is sufficient.—People v. Smith, 177 Mich. 358.

¶ 360. An indictment under the Local Option Law (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183) for keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, etc., need not charge specific instances of sales, the charge being for the continuing act of keeping a place for such purpose.—Anderson v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 130 Mich. 697.

¶ 361. An information charging violation of the local option law need not designate the building wherein is situated the room in which liquors are alleged to have been sold unlawfully, nor need it describe the room.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 362. An information alleging that respondent sold fermented cider contrary to the provisions of a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors in pursuance of the local option law sufficiently sets forth that said law has been made and is operative in the county.—People v. Adams, 95 Mich. 541.

¶ 363. The objection that an information for violating the local option law did not sufficiently allege the various steps in the adoption of said law was without force.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 364. In a prosecution for violation of Act 313, P. A. 1887 as amended by Act 291, P. A. 1909, § 39, providing that in counties which adopt local option and return to the license system, saloons may be established in villages, etc., therein not to exceed one to every 500 inhabitants, where it is alleged that respondent conducted a saloon in violation thereof, the information must set forth with certainty that the county adopted local option and returned to the license system before it can be proved at the trial.—People v. Edwards, 174 Mich. 445.

¶ 365. An information under the local option law which alleges that respondents on a certain day unlawfully kept a saloon where intoxicating liquors were sold, stored for sale and furnished as a beverage, is not open to the objection that it does not charge that intoxicating liquors were either sold, stored for sale, or furnished as a beverage at the time respondents were charged with keeping a saloon; nor is such information open to the objection that it does not charge that respondents, or either of them, sold, stored for sale, or furnished any of the liquors prohibited by the statute.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 366. Where an information charging violation of the local option law alleges that respondents on a certain day did unlawfully keep a saloon where intoxicating, etc., liquors were sold, etc., they not selling, etc., such liquors as a druggist or registered pharmacist, under and in compliance with the restrictions and requirements imposed upon druggists and registered pharmacists by the general laws of the state, is not open to the objection that it does not charge that either of the respondents was not selling, etc., as a druggist or registered pharmacist, under and in compliance with, etc.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 367. An information averring that defendant did "by means of certain curtains * * * obstruct the view from the sidewalk and street in front of said bar" does not state that the view "of the bar" was obstructed as forbidden in Comp. L. 1897, § 5409.—People v. Schimmel, 141 Mich. 310.

¶ 368. An information charging the violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 5409, by the failure to remove the screens and other obstructions to view, of defendants' saloon on Sunday (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313) is sufficient for conviction, even though such information is in the language of the statute, and charges every offense enumerated in the section, and contains no specific allegations of the kind and nature of the obstructions complained of.—People v. Smith, 145 Mich. 530.

¶ 369. In a prosecution for a violation of How. St. § 2283f4, which provides that, during the time when places where liquor is sold or kept for sale must be closed, all curtains, screens, partitions, and other things that obstruct the view, from the sidewalk, street, alley, or road in front of or at the side or end of said building, of the bar or place in said room where said liquors are sold or kept for sale, shall be removed, an information which charges that the respondent, on a specified day, being an election day, was proprietor of and kept a saloon, in a specified village and county, where intoxicating liquors were sold at retail (designating the room and building in which the saloon was kept); that on said day the curtains, screens, partitions and other things that obstructed the view, from the sidewalk and street and alley in front of and at the side of the building in which said saloon was, of the bar and place in said room where said liquors were sold and kept for sale, were not removed, but, on the contrary thereof, said respondent did then and there, as aforesaid, obstruct the view from said sidewalk, street and alley in front of and at the side of the building in which said saloon and room were, by not removing said curtains, screens, partitions, and other things then and there obstructed the view as aforesaid—suffices, "said" curtains, screens, etc., being those of which it had been alleged in the previous part of the information that they obstructed the view of the bar and place in said room where liquors were sold and kept for sale.—People v. Kennedy, 105 Mich. 75.

¶ 370. A complaint under Sess. L. 1881, Act No. 259 (How. St. § 2274), for not closing a saloon "at the hour of 9 o'clock" on a specified day, and for keeping it open "until twenty minutes past 11 o'clock in the afternoon of said day," is not bad for failing to show that 9 o'clock at night was meant and for using the word "afternoon."—People v. Husted, 52 Mich. 624.

¶ 371. A complaint for a violation of the statute which requires saloons to be kept closed on legal holidays (Laws 1879, Act No. 267) is sufficiently precise if it avers that respondent kept a saloon; that he kept it open on the holiday named, and that he then and there sold spirituous and intoxicating or malt liquors.—People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27.

¶ 372. A complaint charging that respondent was the proprietor of a place where spirituous and intoxicating liquors were by her kept to be sold, said place not being a drug store, and that on a stated day, "that being the first day of the week, commonly called 'Sunday,' she kept the said place open, and did not keep it closed," is sufficient under How. St. § 2283e, being substantially in the words of the statute.—People v. Wheeler, 96 Mich. 1.

¶ 373. A count for keeping a saloon open on Sunday is not open to the objection that it does not state that liquors were kept for sale "either at wholesale or retail" since the statute applies to either and the offense and punishment are the same.—People v. Talbot, 120 Mich. 486.

¶ 374. An information in a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday which is in the language of the statute is sufficient.—People v. Possing, 137 Mich. 303.

¶ 375. Under section 1, Act No. 107, Pub. Acts 1909, forbidding the keeping of any place where liquors are given away or furnished, an information is sufficient which alleges specific instances of violation of the statute, and it is not necessary to allege the carrying on of a continuing business or the intent to do so.—People v. Lewis, 166 Mich. 513.

¶ 376. Under section 5391, Comp. L. 1897, an information charging the sale of liquors to a minor is sufficient if it employs the language of the statute, and it is unnecessary to allege that the defendant was engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors. —People v. Thompson, 161 Mich. 391.

§ 61. ——Negativing exceptions.

In informations against druggists, see also post § 62.

General rule as to negative averments, see Indictment § 32.

¶ 377. The information charged defendant with selling at retail intoxicating liquor, without any license or authority, he not having paid any tax, and not having a receipt and notice posted. Held, the information was valid under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5380, 5385, 5386.—Stewart v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 642.

¶ 378. A complaint for keeping a saloon open at night need not negative the existence of an ordinance allowing such opening (How. St. § 2274).—People v. Richmond, 59 Mich. 570.

¶ 379. A complaint and warrant for selling liquor on a legal holiday were held sufficient where they set forth that on the date specified the respondent, "being then and there a keeper of a saloon in said village, and the same being a place where spirituous and malt liquors are sold at retail, and the said 4th of July, A. D. 1882, being a legal holiday, did not keep the said saloon closed, and did then and there on the said 4th day of July, A. D. 1882, a legal holiday, keep the said saloon open for the purpose of selling spirituous and malt liquors at retail therein, the said (respondent) not being then and there a druggist nor a person whose business consists in whole or in part of the sale of drugs and medicines," etc.—People v. Baumann, 52 Mich. 584.

¶ 380. A complaint for selling liquor without having the liquor tax receipt posted in view is sufficiently specific in identifying respondent as a dealer if it describes him as "a person then and there engaged in the business of selling and offering and keeping for sale spirituous and intoxicating liquors"; it need not set forth the specific acts for the purpose of showing him to to be a dealer. But as druggists are not required to keep such receipt posted, it must aver that he is not a druggist selling for chemical, scientific, medicinal or sacramental purposes only; and if he does not so aver it is fatally defective (How. St. §§ 1281, 1285, 1286).—People v. Telford, 56 Mich. 541.

¶ 381. A complaint, How. St., chap. 71, § 5, against a person for keeping open "saloon" on week days after 9 o'clock need not state that such a person is not a druggist. The word saloon in such case distinguishes the place.—People v. Robbins, 70 Mich. 130.

¶ 382. Under the Law of 1887 relating to the selling of liquors and keeping them for sale (How. St. § 2283c6), which provides that the penal provisions of the act "shall not apply to druggists who sell liquors for chemical, scientific, medicinal, mechanical, or sacramental purposes only, and in strict compliance with the law," an information alleging that respondent, "not being then and there a druggist," unlawfully sold liquor, does not sufficiently negative the exception in the statute.—People v. Haas, 79 Mich. 449.

¶ 383. In a prosecution for selling liquors without having paid tax, the exception in Laws 1887, Act No. 313 (How. St. § 2283c6), must be negatived, and an information which alleges that respondent was not "a druggist nor a person whose business was at that time to sell drugs and medicines" does not sufficiently exclude respondent from such exception.—People v. Decarie, 80 Mich. 578.

¶ 384. An information for keeping a saloon open contrary to the statute need not state that the place kept open is not a drug store, and that respondent is not a druggist.—People v. Sullivan, 83 Mich. 355.

¶ 385. An information for keeping a saloon open on Sunday, in violation of How. St. § 2283e, providing that "all saloons, restaurants, bars, in taverns or elsewhere, and all other places, except drug stores, where any of the liquors mentioned" in the act are sold, shall be closed on that day, is not required to state that the saloon was not a drug store.—People v. Taylor, 110 Mich. 491.

¶ 386. "Not being then and there a druggist, and said liquor not being then and there sold for chemical, scientific, mechanical, medicinal, or sacramental purposes," sufficiently negatives the fact that the liquors were sold by respondent as a druggist "in strict compliance with law."—People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

¶ 387. In a prosecution for engaging in the sale of intoxicating liquors without having paid the required tax, respondent is sufficiently shown not to come within the provision which excepts from the penal provisions of the statute druggists who sell liquors for chemical, scientific, medicinal, mechanical, or sacramental purposes only, "and in strict compliance with law," by an averment in the information that he is not a druggist who sells liquors for any of said purposes, naming them, but omitting the quoted words. —People v. Gault, 104 Mich. 575.

¶ 388. A warrant and information in a prosecution for violating the local option law were not invalid because they failed to show that the acts of the defendant were not within the exceptions contained in Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 183, § 15, as to selling for sacramental purposes, and rendering it inapplicable to druggists or registered pharmacists in selling under and in compliance with law.—People v. Rall, 135 Mich. 510.

§ 62. ——Sales by druggists.

Duplicity in averments as charging general violation as well as unlawful druggist's sale, see post § 63.

¶ 389. An information which charges respondent with being engaged in a business consisting in part of the sale of drugs and medicines, which negatives his right to sell spirituous liquors as a beverage, and which alleges sale by him of such liquors as a beverage to a designated person, charges an offense under How. St. § 2282, punishing unlawful sales by druggists.—People v. Quinn, 74 Mich. 632.

¶ 390. An information charging a druggist with the sale of liquor "as a beverage" is equivalent to charging that the liquor was sold "to be used as a beverage," and is sufficient.—People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587.

¶ 391. An averment that a druggist sold whisky to be used as a beverage is tantamount to stating that he was engaged in a business that required payment of the special tax required of retail liquor dealers; a druggist must pay such tax if he desires to sell liquors to be so used.—Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

¶ 392. An information against a druggist for selling whisky as a beverage contrary to Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 3, need not allege that respondent did or did not keep a record of lawful sales as required by statute, nor the quantity sold, nor whether the sale was at retail or by wholesale.—Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

¶ 393. A conviction for the sale of liquor by a druggist without a bond is not sustained by an information charging the defendant with selling liquor without the bond prescribed for druggists under Comp. L. 1897, § 5381, where it does not state that he has not given the retailer's bond prescribed in section 5386; the law does not prohibit a druggist from selling under the general retailer's bond.—People v. Utley, 129 Mich. 628.

¶ 394. An information against a druggist for violation of the Local Option Law (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183) which charges "that the sale was not made under and in compliance with the general laws of the State of Michigan" is insufficient since it fails to describe definitely the violation charged.—Anderson v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 130 Mich. 695.

¶ 395. Where an information is brought against a druggist for violating the provisions of the bond prescribed by section 5381, Comp. L. 1897, to enable druggists to retail intoxicating liquors, it must allege that the defendant gave such a bond.—Stewart v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 642.

¶ 396. If an information charges that the defendant, being a druggist, did sell a quantity of spirituous liquor, called "brandy," to one S., to be used as a beverage, which liquor was drunk upon the premises by S. and others, it is sufficient under How. St. § 2283c6, and need not show negatively that the defendant was not licensed to keep a saloon under other sections of the statute.—People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212.

¶ 397. Druggists are not exempted from the provisions of the Local Option Law (Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183) since the exemption is expressly limited to druggists selling in compliance with the general laws and with section 25 of the act, and hence an indictment against a druggist for keeping such place is sufficient if it negatives the exception in the words of the statute.—Anderson v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 130 Mich. 697.

¶ 398. An information charging the violation of Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 183, by the illegal sale of liquor by a druggist, was not defective in failing to negative section 15 of the act permitting the sale of wine for sacramental purposes and of pure alcohol for medicinal, etc., purposes.—People v. Shuler, 136 Mich. 161.

¶ 399. An information against a druggist for selling liquor without a license which recites that the liquor was not sold for medicinal, chemical, scientific, mechanical or sacramental purposes, but was sold to be used as a beverage, and drunk on the premises, adequately negatives the idea of any possible sale within the lawful privileges of a druggist.—Stewart v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 229.

Duplicity, what constitutes, see generally Indictment § 76.

¶ 400. An information alleging that a person engaged in the business of a druggist sold whisky to be used as a beverage, and without having paid the special retail tax required of dealers by the statute, is not bad for duplicity.—Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610; People v. Scott, 90 Mich. 376.

¶ 401. Each sale of spirituous liquor to a person in the habit of getting intoxicated is, under our statute, a separate offense, and an information which charges respondent in the same count with making such a sale on a certain day, and on divers days and times between that day and a later day, is bad for duplicity.—People v. Hamilton, 101 Mich. 87.

¶ 402. The information in a prosecution for engaging in liquor business without having paid tax, etc., charged that, on a certain day and at a specified township, respondent was unlawfully engaged in the business of selling and offering for sale intoxicating liquors at retail as a beverage, and did then and there sell two drinks of whisky to certain persons, naming them, without having first paid in full the tax required by Laws of 1887, Act No. 313, and without having the receipt and notice for such tax posted up in the place where such liquors were kept for sale, as required by said act, said respondent not being then and there a druggist, and said liquor not being then and there sold for chemical, scientific, mechanical, medicinal, or sacramental purposes. Held, not bad for duplicity, as only one offense is alleged, viz., for unlawfully engaging in the business of selling and offering for sale at retail intoxicating liquors as a beverage, without having first paid the tax, and without having the receipt and notice posted, as required by law. —People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

¶ 403. An information charging a person with engaging in the business of selling and offering for sale spirituous and intoxicating liquors, without having paid to the county treasurer the annual tax, and without having the receipt and notice for such tax posted up in the place where such liquors were sold, he not then and there being a druggist who sells liquor for chemical, scientific, medicinal, or sacramental purposes only, sufficiently charges an offense under Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 7, and charges but a single offense.—People v. Paquin, 74 Mich. 34.

¶ 404. The information charged defendant with selling at retail intoxicating liquor, without any license or authority, he not having paid any tax and not having a receipt and notice. Held, the fact that it added that he was "engaged in the business consisting in part of the sale of drugs and medicines" did not make the information bad on the ground that it indicates defendant had intended to furnish a druggist's bond as permitted by section 5381, Comp. L. 1897.—Stewart v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 642.

§ 64. Issues and variance.

In penal actions, see post § 74.
General rules as to material issues and variances, see Indictment, I, E.
Election between counts, see Indictment § 46.

¶ 405. In a prosecution for keeping open saloon on Sunday the prosecution is not required to state, before testimony is taken, the particular location of the saloon; the charge in the information that the saloon is situated in a certain city and county is sufficient.—People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371.

¶ 406. Under information for selling without license the jury is not called upon to try the question of sales to the persons named therein, it not being averred that such sales were unlawful, except because of nonpayment of tax and failure to post receipt and notice as required by law. The allegation as to specific sales may be treated as surplusage. —People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

¶ 407. There is no variance between an information charging that defendant did not keep his saloon closed on Sunday but on the contrary kept it open, and proof that it was kept open by his barkeeper, since the statute imposes upon the saloonkeeper the positive duty of keeping it closed.—People v. Possing, 137 Mich. 303.

¶ 408. In a criminal prosecution for violating the liquor law in having failed to pay the tax required to be paid the prosecution is not limited to the precise date laid in the information.—People v. Dieterich, 142 Mich. 527.

¶ 409. Where an information is framed on the theory that a defendant physician is guilty of crime for merely issuing in bad faith to a drunkard a prescription for intoxicating liquors, a conviction cannot be sustained, even though the evidence shows a collusion between the defendant and a druggist to make illegal sales.—People v. Rice, 161 Mich. 657.

§ 65. Presumptions and burden of proof.

Sales to minors, see also ante ¶ 291.
General law of presumptions and burden in criminal cases, see Indictment, VIII, A.

¶ 410. The court could not presume that intoxicating liquors were sold in the barroom of a licensed tavern, when by the law as it then stood every license to keep a tavern did not authorize the sale of such liquors.—Savier v. Chipman, 1 Mich. 116.

¶ 411. In a prosecution for engaging in business of selling liquors without having paid tax, the burden of showing beyond a reasonable doubt such engagement and nonpayment is upon the people.—People v. Drennan, 86 Mich. 445.

¶ 412. In a prosecution under How. St., § 2283e for not closing saloon on Sunday, it is not necessary to prove that any liquor was sold.—People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247.

¶ 413. Upon a trial for not removing curtains, etc., which obstructed the view of a bar from a street or alley, it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to show the dedication of the street or alley, but it is sufficient if the fact appear that said street or alley was at the time open to the use of the general public.—People v. Kennedy, 105 Mich. 75.

¶ 414. Where, on the trial of a saloonkeeper for failing to keep his saloon closed on Sunday, it appears that an adjoining room, containing a temporary bar, and where liquors were served on week days, was open, it is not necessary to show that such liquors were paid for in said room.—People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371.

¶ 415. In a prosecution for violation of the local option law in selling liquors, proof that the defendant sold beer is sufficient, it being incumbent on defendant to show that the beer was not intoxicating if he wishes to rely on such a defense.—People v. Anderson, 159 Mich. 185.

¶ 416. Where a defendant in a prosecution for selling liquor without a license in violation of Pub. Acts of 1909, No. 291, as amended by Pub. Acts 1912 (Second Extra Session), No. 1, How. 2nd Ed., § 5055 et seq., claims that he is within an exception not contained in the enacting clause of the statute providing that no tax shall be required from any person for the manufacture or sale of wine or cider used for domestic purposes, such claim must be made a matter of defense, and the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that the sales came within the exception.—People v. Palasz, 191 Mich. 556.

§ 66. Admissibility of evidence.

Of adoption of local option law, see ante § 28.
Of evidence of other sales or acts, see post § 67.
In prosecutions of druggists, see post § 68.
General law of criminal evidence, see Indictment, VIII, B.
Competency of evidence of purchase of liquor made to secure means of conviction, see Indictment ¶ 700.

¶ 417. On a prosecution for keeping a place where liquors were illegally sold, evidence that persons were seen to enter such place sober, and afterwards come out intoxicated, is admissible.—People v. Berry, 107 Mich. 256.

¶ 418. In a prosecution for keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold in violation of the local option law (§ 5412, Comp. L. 1897), testimony of respondent's intoxication is inadmissible.—People v. Converse, 157 Mich. 29.

¶ 419. In a criminal trial for keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquor contrary to the local option act, there was evidence that respondent had directed the freight agent of the railroad company to deliver his freight to one Mosher, a drayman; that Mosher had receipted for liquor consigned to respondent; and that Mosher's son had delivered the same to respondent. Held, the shipping bills were admissible in evidence.—People v. Aldorfer, 164 Mich. 676.

¶ 420. Defendant was indicted for violating the local option law by furnishing liquor to one Foster. He had a tent in a berry swamp, and employed pickers. Foster, a picker, came to defendant's tent and got some whisky. Defendant contended that Foster helped himself to the liquor without defendant's consent or knowledge. A witness testified that one Holmes, in defendant's employ, had given his wife some liquor out of a bottle in his possession. Nothing appeared to involve defendant in this transaction. Held, the admission of such testimony to prove the guilty intent of defendant in supplying Foster with liquor was error.—People v. Giddings, 159 Mich. 523.

¶ 421. As the local option law prohibits the sale of fermented cider, inquiry as to the stage of fermentation, and as to whether fermented cider is intoxicating, is excluded.—People v. Adams, 95 Mich. 541.

¶ 422. In a criminal trial for keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquor contrary to the local option act, evidence of the chemical analysis of the liquor seized is admissible irrespective of whether the officer seizing same acted with the authority of the court issuing the search warrant.—People v. Aldorfer, 164 Mich. 676.

¶ 423. Where, in a criminal prosecution for carrying on a retail liquor business without having paid the tax required, one of the issues is whether respondent was the person conducting whatever business was carried on at the particular place, it is competent as bearing on this question for the prosecution to prove that goods billed as mineral water were shipped over a railroad line to respondent, and delivered at the particular place of business, and the admission of such evidence is not prejudicial on the ground that the jury were permitted to infer that the packages really contained intoxicating liquors.—People v. Moore, 155 Mich. 107.

¶ 424. In a criminal prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor without having paid the tax required, it is competent to prove that respondent stated to the sheriff when the warrant was read to him that he had paid the tax, and that he then exhibited a federal license, as tending to prove that respondent was engaged in the business of selling liquor.—People v. Moore, 155 Mich. 107.

¶ 425. For the purpose of identifying the proprietor of a saloon, it is proper for a witness to testify as to a license card posted up in the saloon, and its contents.—People v. Davis, 171 Mich. 241.

¶ 426. In a prosecution for selling and keeping for sale intoxicating liquors without first obtaining a license it is competent for a witness to testify that he saw barrels, bottles, etc., in the defendant's place of business, as showing that he had all the means and facilities for carrying on the business on the day in question.—People v. Hicks, 79 Mich. 457.

¶ 427. In a criminal trial for keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors contrary to the local option act, the liquors, implements and furniture, and the testimony of the officer as to where he found the same, may be introduced in evidence irrespective of whether the provisions of said act relating to search and seizure were regularly followed.—People v. Aldorfer, 164 Mich. 676.

¶ 428. In a prosecution of a druggist for selling liquor as a beverage in violation of the local option law, it was proper to show that there was a room adjoining respondent's store, maintained by him, in which purchasers of liquor from him sometimes drank their liquor.—People v. Van Alstyne, 157 Mich. 366.

¶ 429. In prosecution for selling liquor to a minor under How. St., § 2283d6, respondent may show all that transpired between him and the minor at the time the liquor was sold as a part of the res gestæ and as bearing upon the criminal intent.—People v. Welch, 71 Mich. 548.

¶ 430. Where, on the trial of a respondent for selling liquors in violation of the local option law, it appears that the sales were made in the evening from a buggy, and one of the purchasers, after testifying that he was within three feet of the person in the buggy when he purchased the liquor, testifies that he thought at the time that the man in the buggy who sold the liquor was respondent, for he heard his name spoken, the fair inference is that the witness refers to the time when he made the purchase, and this testimony is admissible as a part of the res gestæ.—People v. Stanley, 101 Mich. 93.

¶ 431. Certain witnesses testified that they were within three or four feet of the man in the buggy when he sold them liquor. Held, that it was competent for them to testify further that it was their impression, from what they saw of the occupant of the buggy, that it was respondent.—People v. Stanley, 101 Mich. 93.

¶ 432. On the trial of a druggist for selling liquor to be drunk on the premises it cannot be shown that a liveryman sued the prosecuting attorney to recover for driving a detective to a neighboring town, where he entrapped the defendant into selling liquor in violation of law, as tending to prove that the prosecuting attorney had a part in the employment of the detective.—People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212.

§ 67. ——Other sales or gifts or acts to show knowledge, intent or system.

Other acts and offenses as evidence in prosecutions generally, see Indictment, VIII, B, 1.

Other offenses as evidence of intent, see also Indictment § 166.

Other sales as discrediting testimony that transaction was not a sale but a gift, see Witnesses, VI, D.

¶ 433. When offense consists of selling, etc., a person to whom liquor was sold or given must be named or identified in the information, and proof of a sale to "divers other persons" is not admissible except to support charge that respondent kept a saloon where liquors were sold, etc.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 434. Upon a prosecution for keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the local option law, evidence of sales made prior to the date alleged in the information, extending over a period of three months, is admissible, as bearing upon the character of the place kept by respondent at the time charged.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374.

¶ 435. In a prosecution for the violation of the local option law, where the defense is that the liquor was furnished as an act of hospitality, evidence of prior similar acts may be admitted as bearing upon the intent that such liquor was furnished upon the day charged in the information.—People v. Hancock, 166 Mich. 654.

¶ 436. Defendant was indicted for violating the local option law by furnishing liquor to one Foster. Defendant had a tent in a berry swamp, and employed pickers who likewise lived in tents. Foster, a picker, came to defendant's tent and got some whisky. Defendant contended that Foster helped himself to the liquor without defendant's consent or knowledge. Held, evidence that defendant supplied liquor to other berry pickers was admissible to show that defendant did not act innocently or from mistake.—People v. Giddings, 159 Mich. 523.

¶ 437. Under Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 17, there can be but a single offense of opening a saloon on any particular Sunday, howsoever many times the saloon is open on the same day; therefore proof of several acts of opening is admissible after one has been shown, the others not constituting distinct offenses. Section 7, providing that each violation of the act on the same day shall be a different offense, refers to sales of liquor —People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247.

¶ 438. In a criminal prosecution for keeping, storing and possessing intoxicating liquor in other than his own residence, where it appeared that defendant was professedly engaged in the sale of nonintoxicating liquors in a room of a building, the remainder of which was his mother's residence, but had at one time been engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors in such room, and liquor was found under the floor of his mother's room, which defendant claimed belonged to his mother, and defendant claimed that he handled only nonintoxicating liquor, held that evidence that certain persons were seen drinking beer in certain others rooms of the building was competent.—People v. Calliari, 196 Mich. 475.

¶ 439. Respondent, who had been engaged in selling liquor ostensibly, discontinued his business when the local option law went into effect, but kept his stock on hand awaiting the decision of the supreme court as to the validity of said law. He took out a government license, and sold soft drinks and wild cherry bitters over his counter, behind which he kept a bottle of liquor, which was replenished from said stock, and also received cases of beer weekly, which liquor and beer he claimed were kept for his own use. After the law was declared unconstitutional, and on May 19, 1888, he was advised that he had a right to go on with his business, and invited certain parties from the street to come in and "take something," to whom he gave cigars and "soft stuff," and liquor from the aforesaid bottle. He was prosecuted for engaging in the liquor business on May 19, 1888, without paying the state tax, etc. Held, that while the people were confined to the day laid in the information as the date of respondent's carrying on the business in violation of law, yet they had the right to show that a few days prior to May 19, and after May 1, in answer to a wife who forbade his selling to her husband, respondent answered that he was selling him no more than other saloon men; also to show by the wife that her husband was a constant visitor at respondent's place of business during the week preceding May 19, and was intoxicated almost every day, and at times brought home whisky in a bottle—as tending to prove what respondent's place of business was used for, and its surroundings, as well as the manner in which respondent had conducted his business immediately preceding May 19.—People v. Hicks, 79 Mich. 457.

§ 68. ——Sales by druggists.

Requiring filing of reports and use as evidence as compulsory self-crimination, see Indictment ¶ 694.

¶ 440. In a prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor by a druggist, testimony that the vendee was seen on the same day and after such sale with a bottle containing whisky, which he said he obtained of the respondent, is irrelevant.—People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587.

¶ 441. In a prosecution for illegal sale of liquor by a druggist, testimony that the alleged vendee was seen on the same day and after such sale with a bottle containing whisky which he said he obtained of respondent is irrelevant.—People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587.

¶ 442. Where a druggist sells a mixture of ten grains of quinine with eight ounces of whisky, and is prosecuted for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, he is not entitled to introduce evidence to show that reasonable persons would not use the mixture as a beverage.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

¶ 443. In a prosecution against a druggist for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, it was held proper to show on cross-examination that the purchaser went home drunk on the day he bought the intoxicant.—People v. Frost, 179 Mich. 180.

¶ 444. In a prosecution for keeping a drug store for the unlawful sale of liquors in violation of the local option law evidence of purchasers of whisky and beer as to the use made thereof after leaving respondent's premises, without the knowledge of such use on his part is inadmissible where the witnesses had purchased the liquor upon the representation that it was to be used for medicinal purposes.—People v. Thompson, 147 Mich. 444.

¶ 445. In a prosecution of a druggist for violation of the local option law, his reports to the prosecuting attorney of the sales of intoxicating liquors made in his business, showing a large number of sales and large quantities sold, are admissible in connection with other evidence to prove the illegal nature of the business, although none of such sales was proved to be unlawful.—People v. Van Alstyne, 157 Mich. 366.

§ 69. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

Of adoption of local option law, see ante § 28.
In penal actions, see post § 74.
Matters necessary to be proved under the issues, see ante § 64.
General rules as to sufficiency of criminal evidence, see Indictment, VIII, C.

¶ 446. The testimony of an eyewitness that a man at the bar of a saloon was furnished with a glass containing liquor that looked like beer and that he paid for it, and was presently thereafter very much intoxicated, is evidence tending to show that intoxicating liquor had been sold to him.—Wilson v. Booth, 57 Mich. 249.

¶ 447. The admission of a respondent on trial for failing to keep his saloon closed on Sunday, that he was the keeper of a liquor saloon located in a front room on the first floor of a designated building, is not prima facie evidence that he was the keeper of a like saloon located in a rear room in the second story of the same building, and only connected with the other saloon by an outside stairway from an alley at the side of the building.—People v. Kridler, 80 Mich. 592.

¶ 448. On the testimony of a bartender that he went into the saloon on Sunday, that the defendant was there and no one else, that later in the day he went into the saloon and no one was there, that he got a cigar and a drink of beer, and went away, the defendant may be convicted for failing to keep his saloon closed on Sunday.—People v. Crowley, 90 Mich. 366.

¶ 449. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on a legal holiday, evidence that, upon the day in question, respondent, during the absence of his copartner, sold liquors in rooms occupied by the latter as living apartments, situated above the saloon proper, and accessible only by an outside stairway, is sufficient to justify a conviction.—People v. Whipple, 108 Mich. 587.

¶ 450. Evidence which shows that the paraphernalia of a saloon was in a certain place, and that in this place bottles labeled with the name of a certain brewing company and containing lager beer were sold, is enough to indicate that the parties conducting these sales were engaged in selling intoxicating liquor at retail.—People v. Boos, 155 Mich. 407.

¶ 451. A conviction, based upon competent evidence and following proper instructions, of keeping a saloon and of selling intoxicating liquors without having paid tax or given bond, was affirmed.—People v. Harrington, 113 Mich. 523.

¶ 452. On a prosecution under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 291, How. 2nd Ed., § 5055 et seq., as amended, for selling intoxicating liquor without a license, evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction.—People v. Palasz, 191 Mich. 556.

¶ 453. In a prosecution for violation of the local option law promulgation of adoption of preamble and resolution of board of supervisors need not be proved since Pub. Acts 1889, No. 207, § 17 (Local Option Law) makes a certified transcript of the record evidence. —People v. Adams, 95 Mich. 541.

¶ 454. The evidence held to show the keeping for sixty days within a local option county, of a place where spirituous and intoxicating liquors were stored, sold and kept for sale in violation of law.—People v. Wheeler, 186 Mich. 489.

¶ 455. Where a respondent charged with violation of the local option law is proved to have kept liquor on ice in his quarters, and to have permitted persons to go and come to and from the room and help themselves to the liquor, the evidence is sufficient to sustain a conviction.—People v. Bedell, 162 Mich. 230.

¶ 456. Under Act No. 107, Pub. Acts 1909, forbidding the keeping of a place where liquors are given away or furnished, evidence of a violation of the statute is sufficient which shows that respondent mixed and left on a table in his room an intoxicating beverage, of which various persons partook in his presence without invitation being extended on his part.—People v. Lewis, 166 Mich. 513.

¶ 457. In a prosecution for keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors in violation of the local option law (section 5412, Comp. L. 1897), there was testimony that two cases of beer had been shipped to respondent as agent for an express company; that the consignee carried away one case immediately; that subsequently he took the rest away, a few bottles at a time, and without the knowledge of respondent, and that he paid for all the beer at the time of ordering it. Held, that such testimony did not warrant an instruction that if the jury believed it to be true defendant would be guilty. —People v. Converse, 157 Mich. 29.

¶ 458. Upon a prosecution for keeping open a saloon on a legal holiday (How. St. § 2274), testimony that the saloon was open on a certain day, and identifying respondent as keeper of the saloon, and as keeping liquor and being about the building, though the bartender was in charge, is enough to go to the jury upon the main charge.—People v. Baumann, 52 Mich. 584.

¶ 459. Where the chief dispute was as to the intoxicating quality of the drinks sold on Sunday at respondent's bar, it not being disputed that intoxicating liquors were sold there during week days, a conviction for keeping open on Sunday a bar where intoxicants are sold, was proper.—People v. Beller, 73 Mich. 640.

¶ 460. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 5395, requiring the closing of saloons on Sunday where the evidence showed that two employees of the respondent were engaged in cleaning the saloon, one having been admitted by the other, after which the doors were locked and kept locked and no other person admitted but the sheriff, who demanded admittance as an officer, and no person took a drink it was not error for the court to refuse to direct a verdict of not guilty, and the commission of the acts narrated is sufficient to constitute the offense of keeping a saloon open on Sunday.—People v. Tolman, 148 Mich. 305.

¶ 461. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday in violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 5395, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5074, a conviction was sustained where it appeared that the defendant's son, having a key, entered the barroom on Sunday and that such act did not constitute a trespass.—People v. Damskey, 180 Mich. 664.

¶ 462. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5409, requiring the removal of all curtains, screens, partitions, and other things obstructing the view from the sidewalk, street, alley or road in front of, at the side or end of the building in which a saloon is conducted, a conviction is sustained by evidence that the saloon was conducted in a hotel in a place not open to view from any street, sidewalk, etc.—People v. White, 127 Mich. 428.

¶ 463. A conviction of keeping a place and saloon where intoxicating liquors were sold as a beverage, in violation of the local option law is sustained by evidence of the selling, and that the premises occupied by the accused contained the fixtures, surroundings, and furniture usually found in an ordinary saloon, and never in a drug store, although no evidence was offered that he was not a registered pharmacist.—People v. Knopf, 109 Mich. 145.

¶ 464. Where a person, not a druggist, has been complained against for having sold liquor at retail without having paid tax, posted notice, or given bond, and the evidence has showed that he was a druggist, but has failed to show that he had not filed a bond, the conviction should be set aside.—People v. Beach, 93 Mich. 25.

¶ 465. A failure to comply with Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183, § 25, requiring reports of liquor sales made by druggists in local option territory to the prosecuting attorney is not conclusive as to the illegality of such sale, but may in connection with other circumstances be some evidence.—People v. Thompson, 147 Mich. 444.

§ 70. Trial practice; questions of law and fact.

General trial practice in criminal cases, see Indictment, IX.

Juror's views on liquor question or laws as ground of disqualification, see Jury § 31.

Tasting liquor in evidence as erroneous conduct by jury, see also Indictment § 461.

¶ 466. Although in a prosecution for violating the local option law the existence of the law is a fact to be proved, the question of the sufficiency of the proof is for the court and not for the jury.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 467. Under a prosecution for violating the local option law, evidence was introduced by the state tending to prove that respondent, who had previously been a saloonkeeper at the store in question was keeping and selling cider at his place of business, which cider "had commenced to work"; that a barrel of beer, not opened, a case of beer sealed and not opened, both of them apparently consigned to some other person than respondent, a quart bottle of beer on ice behind the counter, and a quantity of cider, were found by officers. Respondent was conducting a restaurant. There was no proof of sales of liquor and none that the cider was intoxicating. Held, the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant.—People v. Hickman, 164 Mich. 672.

¶ 468. On a prosecution for selling liquor without a license where the evidence showed that the respondent kept a restaurant and there was a saloon next door with no door or connections between the restaurant and saloon, and the respondent had no proprietary interest in the saloon, but with money given her by customers for that purpose she purchased beer for the patrons which was served at her tables, and made no profit out of the transactions, there being no secrecy in the transactions, the question as to whether she acted as a mere intermediary of the buyer or as a seller was one to be determined by the jury from the evidence, and such evidence as related did not warrant the court in directing a verdict.—People v. Journeau, 147 Mich. 520.

¶ 469. In a prosecution for keeping open saloon on Sunday it appeared that defendant used three rooms in connection with each other—one a card room, the second for the sale of tobacco, the third for the sale of liquors. Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say what room constituted the saloon.—People v. Scranton, 61 Mich. 244.

¶ 470. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday, a showing that defendant's barkeeper opened the saloon without authority and contrary to instructions, does not require a directed verdict in favor of defendant.—People v. Possing, 137 Mich. 303.

¶ 471. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday in violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 5395, where the undisputed evidence demonstrated the respondent's guilt, it was not error for the court to charge that it was the duty of the jury to find the respondent guilty.—People v. Gordon, 156 Mich. 237.

¶ 472. Whether a particular mixture containing alcohol is a medicinal compound, a medicine, and unfit for use except in medicinal doses, is generally a question of fact.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

§ 71. Instructions and requests.

Criminal instructions in general, see Indictment, IX, E.

Instructions on credibility of informers, policemen and detectives, see Indictment § 438.

¶ 473. In a prosecution for engaging in the business of selling liquors without having paid tax, the burden of proof is upon people to show beyond a reasonable doubt that respondent was engaged in the business and had not paid his tax, and a refusal so to instruct the jury is error.—People v. Drennan, 86 Mich. 445.

¶ 474. In a prosecution for violating a local option law by selling fermented cider, a charge conveying the idea to the jury that they might convict if they found the cider in any stage of fermentation, though it might not then be intoxicating, is not erroneous.—People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486.

¶ 475. In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of fermented cider, a charge that if the cider was fermented, defendant was guilty, without going into the degree of fermentation necessary to cause intoxication, approved.—People v. Emmons, 178 Mich. 126.

¶ 476. In a prosecution for violating the local option law, where respondent claimed the drinks sold were nonintoxicating, it was proper to refuse his request for an instruction that if the jury found the drinks sold contained some alcohol, but not enough to cause intoxication, there should be an acquittal.—People v. Ingraham, 100 Mich. 530.

¶ 477. Where one charged with violating the local option law has testified that he was assured by those from whom he bought the drink sold by him that it was nonalcoholic and nonintoxicating, his request for an instruction that he should be acquitted should the jury find he purchased and sold the drink in good faith, believing it to be nonalcoholic and nonintoxicating, is properly refused; and it is proper to charge that respondent's ignorance that the liquors were intoxicating would not excuse him unless he took such reasonable means as an ordinarily careful and prudent man, desirous of obeying the law, would take to ascertain whether the liquors were such as were prohibited.—People v. Ingraham, 100 Mich. 530.

¶ 478. In a prosecution for violating the local option law two witnesses for the people testified that they drank beer in respondent's place, and one of them further testified that the beer was intoxicating. Another of the people's witnesses testified on cross-examination that he drank with one of said witnesses, and from the same bottle; that what he drank was "hop-pop"; that he could not swear whether or not "hop-pop" is intoxicating, but that he was not affected by drinking it. A witness for respondents testified that he was present, and that what the witnesses first mentioned drank was not lager beer. Respondents testified that they did not keep lager beer for sale at the time charged, and did not sell to said witnesses any such beer; that they had tested "hop-pop," and it was not intoxicating. Held, that the court should have instructed the jury, as requested by respondents, that, in order to convict, it must believe from the evidence introduced, beyond a reasonable doubt, that respondents, on the day charged, sold lager beer, as alleged in the information, and that, if it should believe they only sold "hop-pop" they should acquit; but that it would have been proper to add to this instruction a caution that, if what was sold was in fact lager beer, responsibility for the sale could not be avoided by giving it the name of "hop-pop."—People v. Rice, 103 Mich. 350.

¶ 479. An instruction was properly refused in a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 5381, for illegal sale of liquor to be drunk upon the premises, which stated that if nothing was said or done after the purchase to indicate that it was the purchaser's intention to take the beer into the back yard and there drink it, then respondent would not be guilty of the sale of such beer to be drunk on the premises; as the purpose might be proved by what was said or done before or at the time of the sale.—People v. Shuler, 136 Mich. 161.

¶ 480. In a trial for the sale of intoxicating liquors to a minor, a charge of the court that the fact of the sale raises a presumption of a felonious intent is not prejudicial error on the ground that it intimates the offense is a felony.—People v. Thompson, 161 Mich. 391.

¶ 481. In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor without a license, an instruction that respondent is guilty if there was an unlawful business being carried on in the place in question, and respondent was engaged in helping to carry it on, and that it is not necessary to show what interest he had in it, whether he was a clerk or partner, or how he was interested, is proper.—People v. Boos, 155 Mich. 407.

¶ 482. In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, a request stating that proof of any number of single illegal sales, or even a series of such sales, covering the time alleged, would not establish the keeping of a place, etc., was properly refused.—People v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 511.

¶ 483. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5429, providing that proof of a single sale of any one or more of the liquors or beverages mentioned in the act should be presumptive evidence of keeping a place where such liquors are kept for sale, it was error, in a prosecution for violation of the local option law, to refuse a request stating that a druggist who had complied with the general law by filing a bond entitling him to sell liquor for medicinal purposes cannot, on proof of a single unlawful sale, be convicted of keeping a place for the sale of liquor.—People v. Remus, 135 Mich. 629, additional opinion, reaffirming Maynard v. Eaton Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 201.

¶ 484. In a prosecution under the Local Option Law for keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, stored for sale and furnished, where defendant does not claim that the information fails to charge an offense under said statute, it is not error for the court to refuse a requested instruction that the state must prove that the liquor in question, claimed to have been sold, stored for sale and furnished at said place, was intoxicating liquor.—People v. Adler, 169 Mich. 322.

¶ 485. A respondent charged with violating the local option law requested an instruction that if the jury believed the drinks sold contained only one per cent of alcohol, and if it was not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that they were intoxicating, it should acquit. The court charged that the statute prohibited the keeping of a place where intoxicating liquors, or liquors some part of which was spirituous or intoxicating were sold, that if respondent was not keeping such a place he could not be convicted, and that it was for the jury to say, under all the evidence, whether he kept such a place. Held, that respondent could not complain. —People v. Ingraham, 100 Mich. 530.

¶ 486. Defendant was indicted for violating the local option law by furnishing liquor to one Foster. Defendant lived in a tent pitched in a berry swamp, and employed pickers, who likewise lived in tents. Foster, a picker, came to defendant's tent and got some liquor. Defendant contended that Foster helped himself without defendant's knowledge or consent. Held, the court properly refused a requested instruction that if defendant supplied the liquor at all the jury was to say whether or not he did so to Foster as a guest.—People v. Giddings, 159 Mich. 523.

¶ 487. On the trial of one charged with selling and keeping for sale at retail intoxicating liquors without first obtaining the required license; an instruction by the court "that a man has a right to treat his friends, if he does it for that purpose alone, and in good faith, and without intending to evade the laws; but he had no right to open his saloon, and treat different individuals, as a means of introducing the business he is about to engage in; neither for the purpose of advertising the business he is engaged in," is sufficiently favorable to the defendant.—People v. Hicks, 79 Mich. 457.

¶ 488. Where a respondent charged with violating the local option law is shown to have kept in his shop liquor which he furnished to persons who came there to drink, and some of whom became intoxicated, an instruction that proof of a single sale of liquor or the posting of a United States revenue receipt would be presumptive evidence, etc., is not error, although there is no direct proof of such a sale or posting, the instructions given at respondent's request preventing all possibility of the jury's being misled into a belief that such proof was not needed.—People v. Bacon, 117 Mich. 187.

¶ 489. In a prosecution for selling liquor in violation of the local option law, where the claim of the prosecution was that respondent's store was divided into several rooms, one of them being his general store, and the other rooms where liquor was drunk by purchasers, an instruction that respondent was chargeable with notice of what occurred in the back rooms if purchasers went there and drank liquor bought from him, although he was in the front of the store and could not see them, was proper.—People v. Van Alstyne, 157 Mich. 366.

¶ 490. In a prosecution for violation of the local option act, there was evidence that respondent and one Keyes were engaged in conversation in front of the building where respondent roomed; that respondent said he had to write some letters and went up to his room; that Keyes followed him; that a bottle of liquor was in the room and both of them drank thereof; and that respondent did not expressly ask Keyes to drink. Held, it was error for the court to instruct the jury to find respondent guilty, as the question of his intent to violate the act was one for the jury.—People v. Slater, 164 Mich. 156.

¶ 491. Upon the trial of a druggist for selling liquor contrary to law it is proper to refuse an instruction that the defendant cannot be convicted if he was entrapped by a detective into making the sale; the public authorities being in no way concerned in setting the trap.—People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212.

¶ 492. In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, it was not error in response to a question by a juror as to whether, if defendant were told the liquor was wanted for medicine, he could take the purchaser's word for it, for the court to charge that defendant could only rely on such statement if he sold the liquor in good faith, without any surrounding circumstances to tell him different.—People v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 511.

¶ 493. An instruction in a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday, that "if a saloon is kept open on one of the forbidden days, for any purpose, or for any business, or for any length of time, no matter how short, it will be a violation of the statute," is not prejudicial to respondent, where he admits having served liquor upon the day in question in a room alleged to constitute a part of his saloon.—People v. Bowkus, 109 Mich. 360.

¶ 494. In a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday, it was proper to instruct the jury to the effect that respondent had no right to let persons into his saloon on that day, and that, if he did so, he was guilty of the offense charged, whether he sold them liquor or not.—People v. Bowkus, 109 Mich. 360.

¶ 495. In a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 5395, requiring the closing of saloons on Sunday, where the evidence showed that two employees of the respondent were engaged in cleaning the saloon, one having been admitted by the other, after which the doors were locked and kept locked except to admit the sheriff who demanded admission as an officer, and that no person took a drink, it was not error for the court to instruct the jury "Now the court instructs you that if you believe the testimony that these two men were in there on that day, your verdict will be guilty, otherwise your verdict will be not guilty. The fact that no liquor was sold has nothing to do with this case at all. The law provides that these saloons shall be closed, and when the people are in there they are not closed. They have to open them to go in and open them to come out; therefore a saloon is open. * * * "—People v. Tolman, 148 Mich. 305.

¶ 496. Where, in a prosecution for sale of liquor on Sunday, it was shown that defendant occupied living rooms which were over the saloon, and connected therewith, an instruction that defendant had no right to open rooms upon Sunday in which it was customary or his practice to serve from the barroom is not open to the objection that if wine or beer had ever been served in defendant's living rooms, such rooms would be included.—People v. Boyd, 151 Mich. 577.

¶ 497. In a prosecution for a violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 5409, providing that during the time that places where liquors are sold are required to be closed, screens, curtains, etc., obstructing the rear of the bar or place where liquors are sold, shall be removed, a charge stating among other things that a person had a right to observe from the sidewalk or street what was going on and would not have to go into the doorway or crowd against the glass or stand on his tip toes, to ascertain whether persons were inside, or that business was being carried on, is not erroneous.—People v. Locy, 124 Mich. 180.

§ 72. Verdicts, judgments and punishments.

Sentence as ipso facto revoking license, see post § 73.

Requisites and sufficiency of verdicts and sentences, see generally Indictment, IX, G; XI.

Discretion as to fine or imprisonment for violation, see also Indictment § 484.

Review by writ of error, exceptions or otherwise, see Indictment, XIV-XVII.

¶ 498. Under Act No. 183, Pub. Acts 1899, providing a penalty for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, the court must impose a penalty of both fine and imprisonment, and can exercise his discretion only as to the maximum and minimum.—People v. Sharrar, 164 Mich. 267.

¶ 499. It is discretionary with a trial judge whether, in sentencing a person convicted of keeping his saloon open at unlawful times, he imposes either fine or imprisonment alone or both together (How. St., § 9603).—People v. Minter, 59 Mich. 557.

¶ 500. Laws 1887, Act No. 313, § 8, prohibits, among other things, the selling of liquor in any other place than that specified in the dealer's bond, without giving notice and filing another bond, and provides that any sale made in violation of said section shall be a misdemeanor punishable as provided in section 6 of said act. Said section 6 does not provide any penalty or punishment whatever, but section 7 of the same act provides that any person engaging in business without paying tax, executing bond, etc., shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the reference in section 8 to section 6 may be regarded as surplusage, and that for a violation of section 8 the offender may be punished under section 7.—People v. Brown, 85 Mich. 119.

¶ 501. The fact that the general liquor law (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 7) prescribes a penalty for the violation of any of the provisions of the act for which no specific penalty is provided, does not preclude inflicting the penalty so prescribed upon one guilty of keeping open his saloon on Sunday in violation of section 17 of the statute, after the penal clause of said section 17 has been held unconstitutional and void, it being provided by section 18 that a person convicted of violating any of the provisions of the five preceding sections shall be punished as provided in section 7.—People v. Rohrer, 111 Mich. 31.

C. FORFEITURE OF LICENSE AND ACTIONS FOR PENALTIES.

§ 73. Forfeiture or revocation of license.

Mandamus to compel revocation of unlawful license, see Mandamus, III.

¶ 502. On May 1, 1910, defendant received a retail liquor license and paid the fee for same. On January 26, 1910, and again on May 10, 1910, defendant was convicted in a court of record of violating act No. 291, Pub. Acts of 1909. Held, said convictions operated ipso facto to forfeit defendant's license under section 36 of said act so as to render defendant liable to conviction for selling liquor without a license on sales made after May 10, 1910.—People v. Schafran, 168 Mich. 324.

¶ 503. An ordinance regulating the licensing of saloons provided that a saloonkeeper's license should be revoked if he should be convicted within one year of a violation of the ordinance and of "the state law." Held, that "the state law" referred to was the one controlling the sale of liquors, and a violation of some other law did not come within the meaning of the ordinance.—Cox v. Jackson Common Council, 152 Mich. 630.

§ 74. Actions for penalties.

General law of penal actions, see Penalties and Forfeitures.
General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Mode of pleading statutes, see Pleading, I.

¶ 504. The action of debt provided for by the prohibitory liquor law of 1855, § 8 (Comp. L. 1871, § 2141), was to be treated as taking the character and incidents of a civil suit, not those of a criminal prosecution.—People ex rel. Strickland v. Bartow, 27 Mich. 68; In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472; In re Sorenson, 29 Mich. 475; and see also People v. Hoffman, 3 Mich. 248.

¶ 505. Prosecution for penalty under R. S. 1846, ch. 41, for selling spirituous liquor without license was properly brought in the name of the village.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495.

¶ 506. In the case of the village of Romeo, an action for a penalty under the liquor law should have been brought in the name of the village instead of in the name of the president and trustees of the village.—Village of Romeo v. Chapman, 2 Mich. 179.

¶ 507. A declaration that is not good at common law, nor sufficient either under the general statute for the recovery of penalties or under the specific provisions of the prohibitory liquor law, cannot be sustained in a suit to recover a penalty for the violation of the liquor law.—Benalleck v. People, 31 Mich. 200.

¶ 508. A declaration under Comp. L. 1871, § 2143, to recover a penalty for a violation of the prohibitory liquor law, is fatally defective if it lacks the signature of the prosecuting or any other attorney.—Benalleck v. People, 31 Mich. 200.

¶ 509. To recover the penalty given by R. S. 1846, ch. 41, § 1, it was not necessary to show that defendant assumed to act as tavernkeeper or common victualler.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495.

¶ 510. In an action to recover the penalty given by Rev. St., 1846, ch. 41, § 1, it was not necessary for the prosecution to prove that defendant had no license, or that the question of license or no license was submitted to the people in pursuance of said chapter.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495.

¶ 511. Where, in suing for such penalty, the plaintiff declared in the form given by the statute, it was held that he could not, on the trial, be compelled to elect the penalty or penalties he would seek to recover.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495.

¶ 512. Where two persons as partners were keeping a recess where liquors were sold without license, it was held that the sale by one was the act of both, and might be given in evidence against the other in an action against him alone for the penalty.—Smith v. Village of Adrian, 1 Mich. 495.

Release of one as releasing other wrongdoers, see Releases, III.

¶ 513. Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, known as the Civil Damage Act is in the nature of a police regulation, and is in part penal and in part remedial, and was designed to furnish absolute protection to the parents of minors.—Bailey v. Briggs, 143 Mich. 303.

¶ 514. Laws recognizing the liquor traffic by taxing it and imposing damages for selling to certain classes of persons are not inconsistent as legalizing it for one purpose and penalizing it for another.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 515. A recovery by any one of the persons entitled by the Civil Damage Law to sue for recovery of money paid out for liquor would bar an action by any other; but where injuries arising from the sale are several, there may be several actions for damages, and a recovery in one would not bar another.—Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25.

¶ 516. Claimant sued defendant saloonkeeper for damages for the death of her brothers due to intoxication induced by the sale of liquor to them by defendant. Held, claimant was not barred from recovery by the fact that the mother of these men had previously recovered damages for the same injury.—In re Miller's Estate, 160 Mich. 309; In re Claim of Bennett, Id.

¶ 517. The statute gives a separate right of action to the wife and to the children against saloonkeepers for unlawfully selling liquors to a drunken husband and father and the action of the wife must therefore proceed upon the theory that for only her own injuries can she be awarded damages.—Rauhala v. Maki, 172 Mich. 112.

§ 76. Wrongfulness of sale, injury, and proximate cause.

¶ 518. There can be no recovery under the statute for injuries caused by the sale or furnishing of liquor to another, unless such sale or furnishing is in violation of law.—Peacock v. Oaks, 85 Mich. 578; Bell v. Zelmer, 75 Mich. 66.

¶ 519. In a wife's suit for damages to her means of support occasioned by the killing of her husband by a person intoxicated with liquor obtained from the defendant, it is not for plaintiff to produce proof, or for the jury to speculate upon the probabilities as to whether the intoxication of the person who killed the husband was the natural cause of the killing; the act itself fixes defendant's liability if the sale of the liquor was wrongful.—Doty v. Postal, 87 Mich. 143.

¶ 520. It is not essential to the liability of a saloonkeeper for injuries sustained by a wife by reason of the sale of intoxicating liquors to her husband, whereby he became a habitual drunkard (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313), that such sales should have been made when the husband was intoxicated, or after he had formed the habit of getting intoxicated.—Wood v. Lentz, 116 Mich. 275.

¶ 521. Under the Civil Damage Act the wife's right of recovery against those who caused or contributed to her husband's intoxication does not depend upon knowledge on their part that he was in the habit of becoming intoxicated.—McMahon v. Dumas, 96 Mich. 467.

¶ 522. Where there has been a series of successive transfers of liquor by sale or gift before it reaches the one whose intoxication is caused thereby, the first one in that series is not liable for the consequences of the subsequent sales or gifts he was not a party to, of which he had no knowledge, and to a party he has never even seen.—West v. E. P. Leiphart & Co., 169 Mich. 354.

¶ 523. Defendant saloonkeeper illegally sold intoxicating liquors to two persons, one a minor and the other a habitual drunkard. Said persons took said liquor to the residence of plaintiff and together with plaintiff's minor son consumed same. Said son became intoxicated and while crossing the street in said condition attempted to board a moving freight train and was killed. Held, defendant saloonkeeper was not liable for damages to plaintiff under Comp. L. 1897, § 5398.—West v. E. P. Leiphart & Co., 169 Mich. 354.

¶ 524. A wife suing a saloonkeeper for selling liquor to her husband against her protest, knowing him to be a habitual drunkard, may recover damages for an assault committed upon her by her husband while drunken with such liquor.—Wilson v. Booth, 57 Mich. 249.

¶ 525. The right of action conferred by How. St., § 2283e3, is limited to cases where the injuries are the direct result of acts done while intoxicated, or where they indirectly result by reason of the intoxication and does not cover loss of support due to imprisonment for burglary while drunk.—Dennison v. Van Wormer, 107 Mich. 461.

¶ 526. A recovery under the statute may be had against a liquor seller although the death or hurt resulting in injury to plaintiff's means of support was not the natural or proximate result of the intoxication caused by his sales.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122; Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398; Doty v. Postal, 87 Mich. 143; Eddy v. Courtwright, 91 Mich. 264.

¶ 527. In an action under the Civil Damage Law, if the jury do not find that defendant's act in supplying liquor was so closely connected with the injury for which the action was brought as to have been effective in causing it, they cannot find for plaintiff.—Steele v. Thompson, 42 Mich. 594.

¶ 528. Under the Civil Damage Act giving a right of action against a liquor seller for injury occasioned by an intoxicated person, the fact that the person causing the injury was intoxicated at the time is sufficient.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 529. In an action for injuries received from an intoxicated person, it need not be shown that the intoxication was the proximate cause of the injury. The fact of intoxication and the unlawful sale is sufficient upon which to base the action.—Heikkala v. Isaacson, 178 Mich. 176.

¶ 530. Under Laws 1887, No. 313, § 20, it is not necessary to show, in order to recover damages for injury to one's means of support by the death of an intoxicated person, that the death was a probable consequence of the intoxication; so held where a drunken man was drowned while attempting to cross a lake.—Eddy v. Courtright, 91 Mich. 264.

¶ 531. A wife has a right of action where her husband and a third person become intoxicated, and the husband's leg was broken in a scuffle between them, causing an injury to the wife's means of support; and the question whether the sale of liquor was a remote or indirect cause of the loss is not involved.—Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398.

¶ 532. The intoxication of a person who is incarcerated in a jail and meets his death two hours after confinement as a result of a fire started by him while intoxicated, and not the failure to take him forthwith to a justice of the peace, is the proximate cause of his death.—Taylor v. Davarn, 191 Mich. 243.

¶ 533. Where a husband has no means of providing for his family except his wages, an injury which cuts these off is an injury to the wife's means of support within the meaning of the Civil Damage Act of 1883.—Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398.

§ 77. Defenses.

¶ 534. A saloonkeeper is not authorized to sell liquor for medicinal use any more than for other purposes, and he cannot excuse a sale made to a man known by him to be in the habit of becoming intoxicated by the plea that he relied upon the statement of the purchaser that he wanted the liquor for medicine.—McDonald v. Casey, 84 Mich. 505.

¶ 535. A wife is not precluded from recovering against a saloonkeeper for furnishing liquors to her husband, thereby enabling the latter to continue the habit of drunkenness, which he has already formed, by reason of the addiction of the husband to drink at a time prior to the period involved in the suit.—Johnson v. Grondin, 170 Mich. 447.

¶ 536. A sale to a minor in violation of Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, cannot be excused in a prosecution under the strictly penal provision of the act by showing a good faith belief that the minor was of age. The fact that the minor stated to the druggist that he was more than 21 years of age affords no defense.—Bailey v. Briggs, 143 Mich. 303.

¶ 537. The question whether the saloonkeeper received pay for the liquor shown to have been furnished in his saloon is immaterial, in an action under the Civil Damage Law (Comp. L. 1897, § 5398), against a saloonkeeper and his bondsmen, and such saloonkeeper would be liable.—Hilliker v. Farr, 149 Mich. 444.

¶ 538. A wife who has encouraged or requested sales of liquor to her husband cannot claim for herself damages for injuries sustained by defendant's furnishing liquor to him.—Rosecrants v. Shoemaker, 60 Mich. 4.

¶ 539. A written order to let her husband have liquor, given by a woman to a liquor seller will not prevent her recovering under the Civil Damage Act of 1883, where such order was procured from her by the husband by threatening to leave her and by refusing to let her have money, which facts were known to the defendant.—Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398.

¶ 540. The fact that a wife has authorized the sale of liquor to her husband will not prevent her recovering damages resulting from injuries received by the husband at the hands of an intoxicated person to whom the dealer receiving such permission has furnished liquors.—Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398.

¶ 541. In an action to recover damages for the sale of liquor to her husband evidence that plaintiff on one occasion drank beer at home with her husband does not deprive her of the right to recover, though there are doubtless cases where the wife's consent or participation in the purchase and use of liquor may preclude recovery or lessen damages.—Radley v. Seider, 99 Mich. 431.

¶ 542. A wife suing solely in her own behalf cannot recover damages for injuries sustained by defendant's having furnished her husband liquor if she herself encouraged or requested sales to her husband.—Rosecrants v. Shoemaker, 60 Mich. 4.

¶ 543. In an action under the Civil Damage Act (Comp. L. 1897, § 5398) against a druggist for selling intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's son, a minor, it is no defense that the sale was made on an order purporting to be signed by the plaintiff, but which was in fact a forgery; the false order is but a false statement of the boy reduced to writing.—Bailey v. Briggs, 143 Mich. 303.

¶ 544. One who sells liquor to an emancipated minor, or who sells to a minor with consent of the latter's father, is nevertheless liable under Laws 1883, Act No. 191, § 16, giving to any one injured by an intoxicated person a right of action against the person who sold the liquor to such person.—Flower v. Witkovsky, 69 Mich. 371.

¶ 545. A husband's contributory negligence does not affect his wife's right to recover under the statute (Laws 1887, Act No. 313) damages for being thrown,—by reason of negligence of intoxicated persons to whom defendant sold liquor,—from a carriage in which she was riding with her husband.—Wright v. Treat, 83 Mich. 110.

¶ 546. In an action under Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, How. 2nd Ed., § 5074, against a saloonkeeper for injuries caused by intoxication, where the plaintiff's eye was put out by a blow from an intoxicated man, it was held no defense that plaintiff himself was intoxicated.—Heikkala v. Isaacson, 178 Mich. 176.

¶ 547. In a suit for damages, under section 5398, Comp. L. 1897, for the death of plaintiff's husband from drowning, caused by intoxication induced by the sale of liquors to him by defendant saloonkeeper, the plaintiff is not deprived of her remedy by the fact that the husband at the time he met his death was fishing in a river in violation of law.—Weatherbee v. Byam, 160 Mich. 600.

§ 78. Who may sue.

Separateness of wife's and children's causes of action, see also ante § 75.

¶ 548. Laws 1881, Act No. 259, § 2 (How. St., § 2271) as amended by Laws 1883, Act No. 191, § 16, providing that "every wife, child, parent, guardian, husband or other person" who may be injured thereby shall have a right of action against persons selling intoxicating liquor, does not limit the right of action to persons holding the special relationship mentioned, but covers all persons injured by the intoxication.—Flower v. Witkovsky, 69 Mich. 371.

¶ 549. The daughter of one who dies from the excessive use of liquor has no cause of action under Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, providing that plaintiff has a cause of action when she has been "injured in person or property or means of support, or otherwise," against a saloonkeeper, who furnished liquors to decedent which did not contribute to the intoxication which caused his death, nor to any damage sustained by her.—Johnson v. Johnson, 145 Mich. 586.

¶ 550. Where an adult, in company with a minor, frequents saloons, and they each buy liquor for themselves and for each other and become drunk, and they take an automobile belonging to a third person, and the adult is injured while the car is being driven by the minor, he cannot recover in an action under the civil damage statute, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 5074, against the saloonkeeper furnishing the liquor, as he is not an "other person" such as is contemplated by the statute, he being guilty himself of furnishing liquor to an intoxicated minor.—Morton v. Roth, 189 Mich. 198.

¶ 551. Laws 1877, Act No. 193, giving "every wife, child, parent, guardian, husband or other person" a right of action against a liquor seller for injury done the plaintiff by reason of the intoxication of any person, does not give the intoxicated person himself a right of action against the dealer for money stolen from him while drunk.—Brooks v. Cook, 44 Mich. 617.

¶ 552. Under Laws 1851, Act No. 178, a married woman could sue in her own name for breach of the bond provided for in the statute, conditioned to pay all damages sustained by reason of the obligor's traffic in intoxicating liquors.—Langley v. Ergensinger, 3 Mich. 314.

§ 79. Persons liable or responsible.

¶ 553. A liquor dealer is liable under the Civil Damage Law for sales made by his employees within the scope of their authority. —Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 553a. A dealer in intoxicating drinks is responsible, under Laws 1871, Act No. 196, for the acts of his servants in that business, even though in a particular transaction they disobey his instructions.—Kreiter v. Nichols, 28 Mich. 496.

¶ 554. Where injuries were sustained in consequence of the sale of liquor by defendant's bartender to plaintiff's intoxicated husband in defendant's saloon on Sunday, it was no defense that defendant had instructed his bartender not to open the saloon on the day in question.—Gullickson v. Gjorud, 82 Mich. 503.

¶ 555. In an action by a widow under Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, against a saloonkeeper for injury due to the intoxication of her husband, the defendant is liable for drinks sold by an agent not a regular attendant at the bar, although defendant had instructed his regular barkeeper not to sell to the husband.—Dice v. Sherberneau, 152 Mich. 601.

¶ 556. Laws of 1887, Act No. 313, § 24 (How. St. § 2283e7), making persons engaged in liquor selling, whether as owner or as clerk, agent, servant, or employee, equally liable as principal for any violation of the provisions of the Act, and making any principal liable for the acts of his clerks, agents, servants, or employees amounting to such violation, was intended to enlarge the liability of proprietors of saloons so as to extend to it the acts of those mentioned in civil but not in criminal actions.—People v. Hughes, 86 Mich. 180.

¶ 557. Any one who justifiably possesses intoxicating drink which another appropriates without his consent may demand payment for it without being either legally or morally responsible for the injuries resulting from its use by the trespasser. The trespass being against his will, the wrong to him cannot be converted into a public wrong and a breach of the Civil Damage Law by his compelling the trespasser to make such redress as the law may compel if appealed to.—Kreiter v. Nichols, 128 Mich. 496.

§ 80. Liabilities of sureties.

Construction and obligation of bond and time when same takes effect, see ante § 15.
Necessity and purpose and sufficiency of bonds, see ante §§ 10, 11.
Joinder with principal in one action, see post § 82.

¶ 558. In an action under the Civil Damage Act (section 5398, Comp. L. 1897), against the surety on a liquor dealer's bond, recovery may be had for damages sustained by wrongful sales of intoxicating liquors during the period covered by defendant's bond, although the injury to which such sales contributed occurred after the termination of the suretyship.—Scahill v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 157 Mich. 310.

¶ 559. Under section 5398, Comp. L. 1897, making the principal and surety on a liquor dealer's bond jointly and severally liable for wrongful sale of intoxicating liquors, such liability is enforceable against the surety alone.—Scahill v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 157 Mich. 310.

¶ 560. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, giving a right of action to a wife injured in person, property, or means of support by reason of the sale of intoxicants to any person, a local dealer and the sureties on his bonds for successive years, are responsible in damages to a wife for the total disability of her husband brought about by unlawful sales by such dealer during those years, and the liability of such sureties is not restricted to the damages occurring during the periods of their respective suretyships.—Merrinane v. Miller, 157 Mich. 279.

¶ 561. A saloonkeeper's bondsmen are liable for an unlawful sale of liquor in a saloon by a person ostensibly the purchaser of such saloon, but in reality the bona fide agent of the owner thereof, where the sale of such business to the agent was a mere pretense to relieve the owner's bondsmen from responsibility.—Hilliker v. Farr, 149 Mich. 444.

¶ 562. A saloonkeeper's bondsmen are not liable under the Civil Damage Act for unlawful sales made by a person to whom such saloonkeeper sold his saloon and to whom he gave a power of attorney authorizing him to conduct the saloon business as the seller's agent, where such authority is a mere pretense to enable the buyer to carry on the business unlawfully under the seller's license.—Hilliker v. Farr, 149 Mich. 444.

¶ 563. Upon a liquor bond executed under How. St. § 2278, a wife injured by a sale contrary to its conditions has an immediate right of action against the principal and his sureties jointly without first obtaining judgment against the principal; since the condition of the bond is not only to pay any judgment but also to keep all the covenants of the bond.—Anthony v. Krey, 70 Mich. 629.

¶ 564. The right to recover damages for breach of a liquor dealer's bond is not made dependent upon the fact that the dealer is legally engaged in the business.—Brockway v. Petted, 79 Mich. 620.

¶ 565. The sureties on a liquor dealer's bond are estopped to deny its recital that their principal was carrying on the business at the time it was executed.—Brockway v. Petted, 79 Mich. 620.

¶ 566. Where a liquor dealer gives a bond differing from that prescribed by Comp. L. 1897, § 5386, but intended by him to be the bond required by statute, and by reason of the bond is permitted to carry on his saloon business, he and the sureties are estopped to question the bond in a suit by a wife for an injury under the Civil Damage Act.—Kirkpatrick v. Phillips, 162 Mich. 251.

¶ 567. In a suit against the sureties upon a liquor dealer's bond to recover the amount of a judgment for damages recovered against the principal, the sureties cannot retry the original suit upon the merits.—People for use of Clinton v. Laning, 73 Mich. 284.

Pleadings, see post § 83.
Impropriety of joinder of action in assumpsit for recovery of money paid with action for damages, see Pleading, II.
General trial practice, see Trial.

¶ 568. As the statute prohibiting sales of liquor to husbands, children, etc., in certain cases provides no form of remedy, a common-law declaration by the person injured is good.—Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25; Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 569. Case is the proper action for damages from unlawful sales of liquor to plaintiff's husband, etc.—Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25; Friend v. Dunks, 39 Mich. 733.

¶ 570. Assumpsit, not case, is the proper form of action under the statute to recover back moneys paid to defendant for intoxicating liquors; while case is the proper action for recovery of damages resulting from the sale of such liquors by defendant.—Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25; Friend v. Dunks, 39 Mich. 733; and see Schafer v. Boyce, 41 Mich. 256.

§ 82. Joining sureties and principal in single action.

Action against surety alone, see also ante § 80.
Right of principal to intervene in action against sureties alone, see Parties.

¶ 571. Under How. St. § 2283e3, giving to one injured by reason of the intoxication of another a right of action against any person or persons who by furnishing any liquors shall have contributed to the injury, and further providing that the principal and sureties to the bond mentioned in the act shall be liable severally and jointly with the person or persons so furnishing any such liquors, the principals and sureties upon the bonds of several liquor dealers may be joined in a single action.—Franklin v. Frey, 106 Mich. 76.

General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Pleading damages, see Damages § 272.
Sufficiency of allegation that selling was cause of death, see Death by Wrongful Act § 14.

¶ 572. A common-law declaration is good under the Civil Damage Law.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 573. A declaration by a wife for injuries sustained by defendant's selling liquor to her husband whereby he became a habitual drunkard (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313), may allege the cause of action as continuing.—Wood v. Lentz, 116 Mich. 275.

¶ 574. A declaration in an action under the liquor law (Laws 1887, Act No. 313), should allege that the person to whom the liquor was sold was intoxicated at the time or was known to be in the habit of getting intoxicated, and may be demurred to for failure to so allege, but where no demurrer was interposed and the objection was not raised until all the evidence had been submitted, the declaration may be treated as having been amended and in support of the verdict and judgment, where there was in fact evidence to sustain such facts as were omitted from the declaration.—Wright v. Treat, 83 Mich. 110.

¶ 575. In an action by a wife under Laws 1887, Act No. 313, where sale to a person intoxicated is counted on, vendor's knowledge of the intoxication is presumed from the circumstances of the case, and need not be alleged.—Fletcher v. Forler, 83 Mich. 52.

¶ 576. Declaration in an action against a liquor dealer and his bondsmen for illegal sales to a married man, held sufficient.—Schnell v. Michigan Bonding & Surety Co., 183 Mich. 340.

¶ 577. Allegations that illegal sales of liquor from and after a certain day, to and after the time the plaintiff's husband had become a habitual drunkard, are too indefinite and uncertain to sustain an action under the Civil Damage Act.—Schnell v. Michigan Bonding & Surety Co., 183 Mich. 340.

¶ 578. Where, in a suit against a saloonkeeper for unlawfully selling liquor to plaintiff's husband, it is alleged that defendant duly executed the statutory bonds in compliance with the law, that the surety company became surety, and that the same were duly approved by the township board and filed with the county treasurer, the declaration is sufficient, in the absence of a demurrer, although it does not allege that defendant paid the tax and received the receipt from the county treasurer and posted up the notice required by the statute.—Johnson v. Grondin, 170 Mich. 447.

¶ 579. Where a declaration, in a suit against a saloonkeeper for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's husband, alleges that the husband was in the habit of becoming intoxicated, that defendant was advised thereof and notified to cease from furnishing liquor to him, and defendant continued to sell him liquor in large quantities, that he spent a large portion of his salary in defendant's saloon for liquors, thereby depriving plaintiff of her usual means of support, and that the husband became drunk and intoxicated therefrom and mistreated plaintiff, and where it appears that the bonds given by defendant were in statutory form, the declaration sufficiently alleges a breach of the bonds.—Johnson v. Grondin, 170 Mich. 447.

¶ 580. Claimant sued defendant saloonkeeper for the death of her brothers, alleged to be due to intoxication induced by liquor sold to them by defendant. Claimant alleged in her declaration that her brothers had agreed to support her during her natural life. Defendant filed no demurrer, and examined the claimant extensively on this point at the trial. Held, the contract counted on was not bad for uncertainty.—In re Miller's Estate, 160 Mich. 309; In re Claim of Bennett, Id.

¶ 581. Allegations in a declaration in an action for unlawful sales of liquor to the plaintiff's husband, of sales to a person while intoxicated, to a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and sales making that person a habitual drunkard, when referring to the same person, do not render the declaration double, where such sales are alleged to have contributed to making that individual a common drunkard.—Schnell v. Michigan Bonding & Surety Co., 183 Mich. 340.

§ 84. Issues, proof and variance.

General rules as to issues and variance, see Pleading, IX, X.

¶ 582. Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, allows damages in favor of any person injured in means of support by an intoxicated person, against any one selling liquor so as to contribute to such intoxication. In an action by a widow against a saloonkeeper, where the intoxicated husband committed suicide, it is not necessary to show that the intoxication was the cause of the suicide.—Dice v. Sherberneau, 152 Mich. 601.

¶ 583. In an action under the Civil Damage Act to recover for the death of plaintiff's husband by reason of intoxication to which defendant contributed, it is not material and need not be shown that defendant knew that deceased was in the habit of becoming intoxicated.—McMahon v. Dumas, 96 Mich. 467.

¶ 584. Where the evidence shows that the husband is, and was during the period in which such sales were made, a habitual drunkard, it is unnecessary to show that defendant had knowledge of that fact.—Radley v. Selder, 99 Mich. 431.

¶ 585. Claimant sued defendant saloonkeeper for damages under the Civil Damage Statute for the death of her brothers, due to intoxication induced by the sale of liquor to them by defendant. Held, that under this statute it was not necessary to prove that the defendant knew that the brothers were in the habit of getting intoxicated.—In re Miller's Estate, 160 Mich. 309; In re Claim of Bennett, Id.

¶ 586. In a suit for damages under the Civil Damage Act for the sale of intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's son, it is not necessary to prove that defendant sold the liquor to the son, but only that he furnished it to him. —Liebler v. Carrel, 155 Mich. 196.

¶ 587. In an action for injuries caused by one intoxicated by liquor sold to him by defendant, the averment in the declaration that a particular kind of liquor was sold does not confine the proof to that kind of intoxicant. —Flower v. Witkovski, 69 Mich. 371.

¶ 588. Where, in a suit against a saloonkeeper for unlawfully selling liquor to plaintiff's husband, the declaration charges not only the sale of liquor after the serving of the notice, but also at days and hours prohibited by law, it is proper to admit testimony showing the sale of liquors by defendant after the hours of closing prescribed by law. —Johnson v. Grondin, 170 Mich. 447.

¶ 589. Sale of intoxicating liquors in a tavern will not be presumed where by law there might be a license to keep tavern without authority to sell such liquors.—Savier v. Chipman, 1 Mich. 116.

¶ 590. In an action under the Civil Damage Act to recover damages for selling liquor to plaintiff's minor son, testimony that plaintiff's husband rented a building for saloon purposes, and was surety upon a liquor dealer's bond, is immaterial, especially in the absence of proof that plaintiff assented to these dealings or was in sympathy with the business of selling intoxicating liquors; and it will not be presumed that plaintiff is insensible to the effects of liquor upon her children because her husband supports the business of selling liquors.—Liebler v. Carrel, 155 Mich. 196.

§ 86. Admissibility of evidence.

Habits of person made drunk as evidence, see post § 87.
Other sales or intoxications as evidence, see post § 88.

Offers and introduction of proofs and order of proofs, see Trial, V.

¶ 591. Where, in a suit by a wife to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of the sale of liquor to her husband, it appears that defendant sold out his saloon business at a certain date, and that the saloon was thereafter occupied by the vendee, it is error to permit the plaintiff to show the intoxication of her husband after that date, and that he frequented said saloon, unless it is further shown that defendant contributed to such intoxication by selling or furnishing him liquor.—Peacock v. Oaks, 85 Mich. 578.

¶ 592. In an action under the Civil Damage Act, where the ostensible saloonkeeper was claimed to have been a purchaser of the saloon from a former keeper, whose bondsmen were also made defendants, and where it is claimed on the other side that he was a mere agent holding a power of attorney from the former one, which would have made the bondsmen liable, it is admissible to show whether the transaction was in fact a sale or an agency.—Hilliker v. Farr, 149 Mich. 444.

¶ 593. In a suit for civil damages under Act No. 313, Pub. Acts 1887, for the death of plaintiff's deceased from intoxication induced by liquors sold by defendant saloonkeepers, evidence is admissible to show the deceased was intoxicated on the day of his death.—Sisson v. Lampert, 159 Mich. 509.

¶ 594. Claimant sued defendant saloonkeeper for damages arising from the death of claimant's brothers, who were killed by a railroad train shortly after an alleged intoxication induced by the alleged sale of liquor to them by defendant. Defendant admitted the death, but denied the intoxication. Held, claimant might introduce evidence of the mutilated condition of the bodies after the accident, the presence of whisky bottles, and the odor of liquor, and other circumstances tending to show intoxication. —In re Miller's Estate, 160 Mich. 309; In re Claim of Bennett, Id.

¶ 595. In an action against a saloonkeeper and his surety for an assault on a minor daughter by her father while intoxicated, the defendant may show that on the morning of the alleged assault the father did not have money with which to purchase liquor.—Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

¶ 596. The notice served by a wife upon a dealer forbidding him to sell liquors to her husband need not be in writing, and, even if written, may be proved by parol.—Loranger v. Jardine, 56 Mich. 518.

¶ 597. As bearing upon defendant's wilful disregard of plaintiff's rights, and as justifying exemplary damages, evidence that plaintiff had requested defendant not to sell liquor to her husband is admissible, although at the time of the request defendant had no license to sell.—Larzelere v. Kirchgessner, 73 Mich. 276.

¶ 598. In an action under the Civil Damage Act to recover damages against saloonkeeper and his bondsmen brought by a wife for illegal sales of liquor to her husband the fact that the sales were made on prohibited days or during prohibited hours could be considered by the jury only to enable them to understand the way the defendant was dealing with plaintiff's husband, that is to determine if there was wantonness, recklessness, or carelessness and for no other purpose.—Merrinane v. Miller, 148 Mich. 412.

¶ 599. In an action under the Civil Damage Act against a druggist for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's husband, where the defense relied on is that the sales were made in good faith, and for medicinal purposes, it is competent to show as rebutting this defense that defendant kept a refrigerator in the store in which beer was kept, and that he sold beer.—Lockard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507.

¶ 600. In a suit for selling liquor to her husband, plaintiff may show the reason for her permission to another saloonkeeper to sell her husband liquor on Saturday nights.—Montross v. Alexander, 152 Mich. 513.

¶ 601. Circumstances which would justify the jury in finding that the conviction of plainfiff's husband for drunkenness was collusive, and that she should not be permitted to recover under the Civil Damage Act against the saloonist for mental suffering incident thereto, do not render evidence of the conviction inadmissible.—Lucker v. Liske, 111 Mich. 683.

¶ 602. If, in an action under the Civil Damage Act against a saloonkeeper for damages for furnishing intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's son, defendant wishes to rely on the defense that the whole animus of the plaintiff's case is to injure defendant's business, and thereby benefit that of plaintiff's husband, who owned a saloon near by, he should in some way connect plaintiff with the matter, and testimony to the effect that there had been trouble about granting a license to the saloon owned by plaintiff's husband is not relevant, especially where no evidence is offered to show that defendant was in any way responsible for the trouble over obtaining the license.—Liebler v. Carrel, 155 Mich. 196.

¶ 603. In an action against a druggist and his bondsmen for the unlawful sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband as a result of which he was killed it was prejudicial as against the bondsmen to permit a witness to testify that there was great excitement over the shooting in which the husband had been killed, and that the druggist who had sold the liquor was greatly condemned by the whole community, and he was criticized for selling liquor illegally.—Martin v. Fisher, 143 Mich. 462.

¶ 604. In a suit by a wife to recover damages to her means of support by the sale of intoxicating liquors to her husband, testimony as to the number of his or her children is inadmissible.—Larzelere v. Kirchgessner, 73 Mich. 276; Johnson v. Schultz, 74 Mich. 75; Montross v. Alexander, 152 Mich. 513.

¶ 605. In a suit against a saloonkeeper for unlawfully selling liquor to plaintiff's husband, it is not error to permit reference in the testimony to a twelve-year-old child of plaintiff for the purpose of showing what the child had to do in conjunction with the plaintiff in serving notice upon defendant to desist from selling liquors to the husband, the purpose of the evidence being solely to prove the facts of the service by showing that the boy was present and witnessed the same.—Johnson v. Grondin, 170 Mich. 447.

¶ 606. In an action for damages from the sale of liquor, it is inadmissible to show the amount of money spent at defendant's saloon.—Friend v. Dunks, 39 Mich. 733.

¶ 607. Plaintiff in an action for selling intoxicating liquor to her son may show her situation and condition, her dependence on him, the amount earned and possessed by him before he became addicted to the use of liquor, his failure to obtain employment afterwards, if traceable to his drinking habit, and that he has been seen upon the street in a state of intoxication during the time defendant is claimed to have sold him liquor.—Weiser v. Welch, 112 Mich. 134.

¶ 609. In a suit by a wife against a liquor dealer for selling liquor to her husband, evidence that plaintiff had recently sold a lot formerly purchased to build a home on, is of doubtful materiality.—Montross v. Alexander, 152 Mich. 513.

¶ 610. Where action is brought for damages for alleged illegal sales of intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's husband, it is error to admit testimony as to sales of property by the husband to support his family after he was injured while intoxicated.—Spencer v. Johnson, 176 Mich. 278.

¶ 611. In a suit against a saloonkeeper for unlawfully selling liquors to plaintiff's husband, plaintiff's twelve-year-old boy was permitted to testify as to the preparation and service of the notice to the saloonkeeper; was allowed to state he was the son of the plaintiff and to recite the circumstances surrounding the serving of the notice; and to testify to acts which he witnessed on the part of his father in pursuing his mother when the father was intoxicated. The trial court in his charge referred to the fact that, in the presence of the boy, the husband, when intoxicated, had called her vile names.

Held, no error was committed in showing the relationship of the boy to the plaintiff.—Johnson v. Grondin, 170 Mich. 447.

¶ 612. The husband's previous pecuniary condition may be proved only as tending to show damage.—Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25.

¶ 613. In an action by a wife to recover moneys paid by her husband to defendant for intoxicating liquors, it is held not error for the plaintiff to ask the husband, who, as a witness for her, has testified to having spent money in the defendant's saloon and in other saloons, "what was your practice in visiting defendant's saloon and other saloons, —what proportion?" the object being to find what proportion of the money he had sworn to having expended for liquor had been paid to the defendant.—Hemmens v. Bentley, 32 Mich. 89.

¶ 614. In a suit against a liquor dealer for selling liquor to her husband, it is proper to show that the plaintiff suffered a stroke of paralysis, and to admit the testimony of experts as to its connection with her troubles.—Montross v. Alexander, 152 Mich. 513.

§ 87. ——Habits of person made drunk or of his family.

¶ 615. In a wife's suit for damages to her means of support, occasioned by the killing of her husband by a person intoxicated with liquor obtained from defendant, evidence that such person was in the habit of getting intoxicated is admissible for the purpose of showing that the sale of the liquor was unlawful.—Doty v. Postal, 87 Mich. 143.

¶ 616. Evidence is admissible in an action under the Civil Damage Law that before the origin of the suit the drunkard had promised to let liquor alone, as it would tend to show his habits at the time.—Friend v. Dunks, 39 Mich. 733.

¶ 617. In a wife's action for injuries to herself from sales to her husband, no facts antecedent to the unlawful acts complained of should, as a rule, be allowed, except to show the husband's habits and circumstances. —Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25.

¶ 618. In an action against a saloonkeeper and the sureties on his bond for damages by the sale of intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's husband, whereby he became a habitual drunkard, it was not error to permit plaintiff to prove frequent intoxications of her husband, without proving that they were occasioned by liquor sold by defendant.—Bowden v. Voorheis, 135 Mich. 648.

¶ 619. In an action by a widow against a liquor seller for damages resulting from the death of her husband caused by an intoxicated person, evidence of the husband's habits as a drinking man is admissible as bearing on the question of damages; and evidence that the husband was quiet when sober and quarrelsome when drunk is admissible as bearing on the question of his intoxication at the time of the injury, and whether his intoxication contributed to the injury; but the husband's statements on the night of the injury as to how it was received are inadmissible.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 620. In a suit against a saloonkeeper by a wife for unlawfully selling liquors to her husband, it is error to exclude the testimony of the wife as to the conduct of her husband when intoxicated from the effects of liquor unlawfully sold to him by defendant.—Fleming v. Gemein, 168 Mich. 541.

¶ 621. In an action to recover damages under the Civil Damage Act, for furnishing intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's minor son, it is competent for defendant to show that the minor was in the habit of becoming intoxicated prior to the time when it is claimed he furnished him liquor, and under the circumstances such evidence would tend to mitigate damages.—Liebler v. Carrel, 155 Mich. 196.

¶ 622. In an action under the Civil Damage Act, against a druggist for furnishing liquor to plaintiff's husband, the testimony of his employer to the effect that he (plaintiff's husband) drew money almost every day, and immediately went to defendant's drug store and returned with whisky, which he drank in the shop, and became intoxicated, is admissible as bearing upon the habits of plaintiff's husband, and upon the question whether or not defendant furnished liquor to him, and as rebutting the idea that defendant was selling liquor for medicinal purposes.—Lockard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507.

¶ 623. In a suit against defendant saloonkeeper for the death of plaintiff's husband from intoxication due to the sale of liquors to him, it is proper to permit witnesses to testify in detail of previous intoxications of the deceased in order to prove a habit in that respect.—Merrill v. Tinkler, 160 Mich. 575.

¶ 624. In a suit for damages under Act No. 313, Pub. Acts 1887, for the death of plaintiff's husband from intoxication induced by liquor sold by defendant saloonkeepers, evidence is admissible as to the drinking habits of the deceased during the year prior to his death, for the purpose of showing he was in the habit of getting intoxicated, and that the sale was therefor illegal, and for the purpose of proving exemplary damages. —Sisson v. Lampert, 159 Mich. 509.

§ 88. ——Other sales or intoxications.

Habits of sobriety or drunkenness, see also ante § 87.

General rule as to admissibility of other distinct matters, see Evidence, III.

¶ 625. In an action for selling liquor to a minor, testimony that the minor had drunk at other places than at defendant's is incompetent, even though plaintiff has already testified, without objection, that the minor had not drunk elsewhere. It is immaterial whether others than defendant made sales to the minor or not.—Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285.

¶ 626. It was prejudicial error to allow proof by plaintiff in an action against a saloonkeeper and his bondsmen under the Civil Damage Law for an unlawful sale of liquors, of other unlawful sales to other persons on the day in question.—Hilliker v. Farr, 149 Mich. 444.

¶ 627. Although the general rule is that proof of one offense cannot be admitted for the purpose of proving another, there is an exception in cases where it is necessary to prove a scienter or particular intent; therefore in a suit against a druggist under the Civil Damage Act for unlawfully selling whisky as a beverage to plaintiff's husband, it is competent to prove that defendant made sales of whisky as a beverage to third persons, especially where the theory of the defense is that the sales made to plaintiff's husband were lawful ones for medicinal purposes.—Lockard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507.

¶ 628. In an action by a mother against a druggist for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to her minor son, under Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, the habits of the father are immaterial.—Bailey v. Briggs, 143 Mich. 303.

¶ 629. In an action against a saloonkeeper under the Civil Damage Act to recover damages for furnishing intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's minor son, testimony to the effect that plaintiff's husband is a drinking man is irrelevant.—Liebler v. Carrel, 155 Mich. 196.

¶ 630. Evidence that a room in which beer was served was a sitting room, connected with a barroom, and that on other occasions beer had been served there, is competent in an action under the Civil Damage Act to show that the room was a part of the saloon.—Moreland v. Durocher, 121 Mich. 398.

¶ 631. That a minor daughter had been previously assaulted by her father while sober may be shown by the defendant in an action by the daughter against a saloonkeeper and his surety for an assault made on her by her father when intoxicated.—Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

¶ 637. In an action for damages under the Civil Damage Act for furnishing intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's minor son, where plaintiff proves specific acts of intoxication, and defendant denies having made any sales, it is competent to prove that the intoxication was caused by liquor furnished by another; but neither as a defense to the action, nor for the purpose of dividing with another the liability imposed by the statute, may prior or contemporaneous sales by another be considered.—Liebler v. Carrel, 155 Mich. 196.

¶ 633. In a suit by a wife to recover against the defendant, a saloonkeeper, for unlawfully selling liquor to her husband, the court properly refused to admit evidence to show that the husband attempted through others to get liquor from defendant, and also to admit evidence of statements made to aid such attempts, out of the husband's hearing.—McNetton v. Herb, 158 Mich. 525.

§ 89. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

Issues necessary to be proved, see also ante § 84.

Sufficiency to make jury question, see post § 90.

¶ 634. A court or jury would not be justified in finding a defendant liable for damages for the consequences of a sale of liquor upon a given day solely, on testimony to the effect that the witness thinks he and the decedent did not go into the defendant's saloon on the day named, or get any liquor there, and that he was mistaken in his contrary statement made before the trial, or on a previous trial.—Bell v. Zelmer, 75 Mich. 66.

¶ 635. Testimony that a man at the bar of a saloon was furnished with a glass containing liquor that to the witness looked like beer, and that he paid for it, and was presently thereafter very drunk, tends to show that intoxicating liquor was sold to him.—Wilson v. Booth, 57 Mich. 249.

¶ 636. Testimony of plaintiff and her daughter to conversations had with defendant in relation to the subject of the sales complained of, from which the jury might justly infer that they were made, and of one of plaintiff's attorneys to a conversation with the defendant, in which he tacitly admitted that he was in the habit of selling liquor to plaintiff's husband, and promised to come in again, with a view to a settlement of the case, coupled with the fact that defendant did not choose to deny the charge by being sworn in his own behalf, is proof of the fact of the sales.—Radley v. Selder, 99 Mich. 431.

¶ 637. Where it appeared that the husband of plaintiff, suing under the Civil Damage Act, was addicted to drink, and was in the habit of getting drunk, that he had to go two miles from where he lived to where defendant's saloon was, that on the evening when he was killed he was in that saloon, part of the time when it was open in violation of law, and had spent the evening and part of the night in saloons, and that between 11 and 12 o'clock he had a glass of beer and one of cider in defendant's saloon, there was evidence that decedent was intoxicated at the time he drank in defendant's saloon.—McMahon v. Dumas, 96 Mich. 467.

¶ 638. In an action on a liquor bond under the Civil Damage Act, Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, How. 2nd Ed., § 5074, evidence held sufficient to show that deceased was intoxicated at the time he set fire to the jail in which he was incarcerated.—Taylor v. Davarn, 191 Mich. 243.

¶ 639. In an action by a wife under the Civil Damage Act, Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, How. 2nd Ed., § 5074, against a saloonkeeper and his sureties to recover damages for injury to her person, property, and means of support evidence held sufficient to sustain the verdict.—Baker v. Mohl, 191 Mich. 516.

§ 90. Questions for jury and instructions.

General law of instructions and requests, see Instructions.

Effect of instructions to cure error in admission of evidence, see Harmless Error, III, B.

¶ 640. In an action by a wife for damages to her means of support occasioned by the killing of her husband by a person intoxicated, where the evidence was conflicting as to which party was the aggressor in the affray the question must be submitted to the jury.—Doty v. Postal, 87 Mich. 143.

¶ 641. Where in an action to recover for the death of plaintiff's husband resulting from intoxication to which defendant contributed, it appeared that decedent, the next morning after drinking in defendant's saloon, was found dead near the railroad track between the town in which he lived and that in which defendant's saloon was, that he was a habitual drunkard and had to go to defendant's town for liquor customarily walking there and back on the railroad track, and where it was evident that he had been struck by a train, it was for the jury to say whether he was intoxicated when he drank in said saloon, and whether his intoxication caused his death.—McMahon v. Dumas, 96 Mich. 467.

¶ 642. In an action against a druggist and his bondsmen for the lawful sale of liquor to the plaintiff's husband, where the question of the ownership of the drug store is one of the material facts in dispute the question is properly submitted to the jury.—Martin v. Fisher, 143 Mich. 462.

¶ 643. In an action against a saloonkeeper and the sureties on his bond to recover damages caused by the sale of intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's husband, the refusal to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground that the testimony relating to damages was too indefinite and uncertain to justify a verdict for plaintiff, was proper, where it was inferable from plaintiff's testimony that the sale of liquor by defendant contributed to make her husband, who occasionally drank, a drunkard, from which it was inferable that plaintiff suffered shame and social disgrace.—Bowden v. Voorheis, 135 Mich. 648.

¶ 644. Plaintiff was assaulted in defendant's saloon and seriously injured by one Kirk. The evidence showed that Kirk was not acquainted with plaintiff, but walked up behind him stealthily and assaulted him while plaintiff was quarreling with Kirk's brother; and also that Kirk drank whisky in the saloon a short time before the assault. In a suit on defendant's bond for selling to a habitual drunkard, held, the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury.—Shepard v. Platt, 158 Mich. 181.

¶ 645. Defendant's saloon ran north and south and was located on the south side of the street. The bar was on the east side of the room. South of the bar a partition separated off a card room, on the west side of which partition there was an opening some six or eight feet wide. One Whiteman bought two glasses of beer, took them to the card room and gave one to Baessler, the plaintiff's husband. There was evidence that the defendant knew that Baessler was drinking with Whiteman in the card room, and that customers standing in front at the north end of the bar could see Baessler and Whiteman sitting at the table. In a suit for damages for the death of plaintiff's husband from intoxication induced by liquor sold to him by defendant, held, the court did not err in submitting to the jury the question whether defendant could see Baessler in the card room and knew he was supplying him with liquor.—Baessler v. Foster, 159 Mich. 513.

¶ 646. In a suit against a saloonkeeper under the Civil Damage Act for unlawfully selling liquor to plaintiff's husband, there was evidence that the husband sent plaintiff's minor son to defendant's saloon to get a bottle of whisky for him and that the son procured and delivered the whisky to the husband at 11 a. m. The son testified that he thought that the husband at that time took a drink from the bottle. There was evidence that the husband was a habitual drunkard and had been drinking for days. Held, the court properly refused to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground that there was no evidence that the husband drank the liquor furnished by defendant.—Ryerson v. Phelps, 163 Mich. 237.

¶ 647. A plaintiff in three counts of her declaration sought to recover damages for the death of her husband from drowning, caused by intoxication induced by the sale of liquors to him by defendant saloonkeepers. A fourth count did not rely on the death, but simply asked damages for selling liquor to her husband during a period of time when he was in the habit of becoming intoxicated. The fourth count was supported by sufficient evidence. Held, the court ruled properly in letting the fourth count stand and go to the jury along with the other three counts.—Weatherbee v. Byam, 160 Mich. 600.

¶ 648. In an action by a wife against a liquor seller for injury to her means of support, arising from the imprisonment of her husband upon his conviction of burglary committed while intoxicated, an instruction authorizing a recovery if the jury should find that the husband formed the intent to commit the offense by reason of the intoxication, or that he was so intoxicated at the time as to be incapable of forming any intelligent intent, is sufficiently favorable to plaintiff.—Dennison v. Van Wormer, 107 Mich. 461.

¶ 649. An instruction defining an intoxicated person as one whose manner is unusual or abnormal, whose condition is reflected in his walk or conversation, and whose judgment and common sense are disturbed, or whose will power is temporarily suspended, held unobjectionable.—Lafler v. Fisher, 121 Mich. 60.

¶ 650. In a suit against defendant saloonkeeper for the death of plaintiff's husband from intoxication induced by the sale by defendant of liquors to him, the court instructed that defendant was not liable unless the liquor sold contributed to the intoxication of the deceased. Held, the charge was correct, and no error was committed in refusing a requested instruction implying the same thing.—Merrill v. Tinkler, 160 Mich. 575.

¶ 651. Where plaintiff's husband, while at least partially intoxicated, has been furnished liquor in defendant's saloon and was soon after drowned, an instruction that "if deceased became intoxicated by the liquor sold to his companion in the bottle defendant was not liable" was properly refused.—Gullickson v. Gjorud, 82 Mich. 503.

¶ 652. An instruction, in an action under the Civil Damage Act, brought for the death of a husband against two proprietors of saloons, and their bondsmen, stating that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict if either of the defendants furnished liquor which caused or contributed to the death of the plaintiff's husband, is not erroneous as authorizing a recovery against all the defendants upon proof of sale by one only, where another portion of the instruction states that the action was brought against two separate dealers and their bondsmen, and that a judgment could not be recovered against all of the defendants, unless both dealers served liquor to the plaintiff's husband which contributed to the intoxication that he labored under when he received his injury.—Moreland v. Durocher, 121 Mich. 398.

¶ 653. In a suit under Comp. L. 1897, § 5398, to recover damages for the illegal sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband, it is error for the trial court to instruct the jury that plaintiff had the right to a sober, industrious husband, to his support, and to the comfort of her home, to the ability and extent of that husband to give her same, where there is no evidence that prior to the illegal sales complained of her husband was sober and industrious and supporting her to the best of his ability.—Pearson v. Schoenburg, 167 Mich. 255.

¶ 654. In an action under the Civil Damage Act, against a druggist for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's husband, an instruction which sets out the different purposes for which a druggist may lawfully sell liquor, and then charges that if he sells for any other purpose he does so at his peril, is proper.—Lockard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507.

¶ 655. On the trial of a suit brought by a wife against a saloonkeeper to recover damages occasioned by reason of the sale of liquor to her husband, the plaintiff denied that she ever consented to such sales during the time covered by her declaration, and defendant denied that plaintiff ever forbade his selling liquor to her husband, as testified by her, and further testified that plaintiff told defendant several times to let her husband have liquor after defendant had refused so to do. Held, that the court was warranted in instructing the jury that the consent of the wife which would justify unlawful sales must cover the sales for which the action was brought.—McDonald v. Casey, 84 Mich. 505.

¶ 656. In an action by a wife against saloonkeepers under the Civil Damage Act, Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 20, How. 2nd Ed., § 5074, to recover for the death of her husband alleged to be due to his falling in a hot pond while intoxicated by liquor purchased from defendants, held that the charge, when considered as a whole, was not misleading as permitting a recovery although deceased was not intoxicated when he fell into the hot pond.—Holtquist v. O'Connell, 196 Mich. 484.

¶ 657. The method of the court in dividing its instruction, held not erroneous in an action against a saloonkeeper and his surety by a child to recover for an assault committed on her by her father while intoxicated.—Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

¶ 658. A person may be convicted of being drunk on the public street under Comp. L. 1897, § 11736, where the evidence showed that he was arrested before complaint was made upon private property, and that previous thereto he had become drunk at a saloon on a named street and had passed that street in going to the place where he was arrested.—People v. Camp, 142 Mich. 219.

¶ 660. In a prosecution for being drunk on the public street under Comp. L. 1897, § 11736, the defense being that he was on private property, where the testimony justified the jury in finding defendant guilty of being drunk upon the street named, the fact that he was also drunk on adjacent private property where he was afterward arrested is not inconsistent with their conclusion.—People v. Camp, 142 Mich. 219.

¶ 661. In a prosecution for being a disorderly person in that he was a drunkard, it is proper to instruct that the respondent is guilty if intoxication became a habit.—People v. Radley, 127 Mich. 627.

¶ 662. In a prosecution for being a disorderly person in that he was a drunkard, it is not error to refuse to instruct that to constitute a drunkard the habit must be so firmly fixed that the person becomes intoxicated as often as the temptation arises.—People v. Radley, 127 Mich. 627.

¶ 663. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5923, punishing disorderly conduct, a complaint charging that the respondent was a drunkard without defining the word drunkard, follows the statute and is sufficient; the word drunkard being sufficient to apprise the respondent of his offense.—People v. Radley, 127 Mich. 627.

¶ 664. In a prosecution for being drunk on a public street, the court instructed the jury that drunkenness indicates such condition of a person as is induced from the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and that the jury should use their common knowledge in determining the fact of drunkenness. Respondent did not ask for a more specific instruction on the point. Held, the charge was sufficient.—People v. Lowerie, 163 Mich. 514.

¶ 1. An agreement whereby one party is to enter lands in another's name who is to advance money to pay his expenses and to deed him part of the land on repayment thereof, is a joint adventure, and does not establish a relation exclusively of agency, master and servant, or vendor and purchaser. —McCreery v. Green, 38 Mich. 172.

¶ 2. Where a contract entered into by plaintiff and defendant makes them jointly interested, though it does not create a partnership, the business may properly be described as a "joint enterprise."—Alderton v. Williams, 139 Mich. 296.

¶ 3. Two firms orally agreed to buy and lumber certain lands, one to furnish cash and the other labor. The former, without the latter's knowledge, took the land contract in their own name, while the latter acted under their oral agreement in the belief that they were parties to the contract. Held, that in a settlement of mutual claims they should be treated as if they were such parties, and that their rights as such would be enforceable in equity.—Edson v. Gates, 44 Mich. 253.

¶ 4. Only to the extent of the interest so to be paid did the relation of debtor and creditor exist between D., who was to erect and conduct a hotel paying interest for the use of money contributed for the erection, and the subscribers; where the terms of the subscriptions were that the amounts contributed were to be "as and for stock" in the building, and that they were to "take in pay" corresponding interests in the building, and that D. was to have the use of the building as long as he should conduct the hotel and was to pay interest on the amounts of the several subscriptions; and where no stock was ever issued and the business of the hotel was discontinued; and accordingly D. could maintain a bill to determine the interests and wind up the concern. —Murray v. Near, 106 Mich. 59.

¶ 5. When one who has handled and shipped lumber in this state claims that he has acted on the joint account of himself and a person resident in another state and sues such person's son for an accounting, the defendant, if he denies the claim alleged and asserts the arrangement to have been one of service on the plaintiff's part for which his compensation was to be a share of the profits, and that in determining the same the defendant was to receive interest at a named per cent on advances and a specified commission on sales, the interest charge and commissions claimed must depend upon the agreement of the parties at the time the business was begun or during its continuance, and the burden of proof is on the defendant. —Clark v. Pierce, 74 Mich. 638.

¶ 6. Where one of several joint parties to a contract has received the profits of it, he cannot deny his liability to his associates on the ground that the contract was voidable as against the other party to it.—Richardson v. Welch, 47 Mich. 309.

¶ 7. Evidence examined and held insufficient to show that timber land was purchased under an agreement to divide profits with plaintiff, a go-between, where it appeared that as a result of his efforts no unconditional bargain for the land was negotiated, where the land was afterwards purchased by another who took title in his name for himself and defendant, and where the testimony of plaintiff and his witnesses was somewhat open to doubt and the alleged contract with plaintiff was so disadvantageous to defendant as to cast doubt on plaintiff's claims.—Seymour v. Canfield, 122 Mich. 212.

¶ 8. On a bill to obtain specific performance of an alleged contract to share in the profits of a mine if complainant was successful in procuring one for defendants evidence held insufficient to establish a contract for sharing in profits, but to establish a contract to reasonably compensate complainant for his services.—Schook v. Zimmerman, 188 Mich. 617.

¶ 9. It is immaterial to the question whether plaintiff had an agreement that defendant should share profits realized from a sale of lands, which lands plaintiff under an agreement therefor had looked up for defendant, that another agent of defendant, who actually procured a profitable sale of the land, was to work up the timber for the new purchaser and have an interest in it for such work.—Davis v. Gerber, 69 Mich. 246.

§ 2. Formation and abandonment or breach of adventure.

False statements as to prospects as fraud, see Fraud §§ 14-17.

Formation and termination of partnerships, see Partnership.

¶ 10. An agreement to form a joint adventure for buying timber land which was to have 112,000,000 or more feet according to an estimate is not binding if the estimate proves to be of less than that.—Seymour v. Canfield, 122 Mich. 212.

¶ 11. An agreement for a joint adventure in lands to be purchased for $410,000 at which price plaintiff had an option, followed by a failure to close that bargain, and a purchase by a third person at a less sum in which defendant had a half interest, does not leave defendant accountable to plaintiff; since defendant had a legal right to buy it from the owner at a less price than plaintiff insisted on; and the concealment of defendant's relations with the third person was not material.—Seymour v. Canfield, 122 Mich. 212.

¶ 12. In an action by one joint adventurer in a land speculation for recovery of half of advances made and expenses incurred, there being an issue as to whether the venture was abandoned by plaintiff, it was proper to allow defendant to show that thereafter he went to the vendor of the land and sought to have their contract canceled, since it tended to show efforts by defendant to dispose of the property.—Hart v. Firzlaff, 67 Mich. 514.

§ 3. Services and compensation for services.

Services by partners to firm, see Partnership, V.

Rules for implying contracts to pay for services, see Implied Contracts.

Validity of parol promise by one joint adventurer to pay for services, see Frauds, Statute of § 17.

¶ 13. In an accounting between the parties to a joint enterprise, a claim by one against the other for commissions for making collections in the joint business is properly disallowed if there was no express agreement therefor.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Ruggles, 51 Mich. 474.

¶ 14. A., holding an option on timbered land, entered into an agreement with B. that the latter should furnish the capital and buy and sell the land, A. to receive for his expenses incurred prior to the purchase and for his services one-third of the profits, while B. for the use of his capital and for his services was to receive two-thirds, B.'s advances and the expenses of retaining the property and of sale to be first realized and paid. Held, that B. could not claim compensation for expenses incurred in examining the land prior to the purchase, or for services in connection with the sale of the land, or for interest on advances and balances, or a bonus paid by him to raise the money used in the purchase; nor was he entitled to a rebate upon the purchase price allowed him by reason of the cash payment of a part of such price.—Petrie v. Torrent, 100 Mich. 117.

¶ 15. In an accounting pursuant to an implied promise by defendant to pay part of the cost of litigation with reference to a vessel which plaintiff had contracted to raise for a share of the salvage, defendant is not entitled to charge for his own services unless the testimony justifies an inference of an understanding that he should be so paid.—Murphy v. Northern Steamship Co., 131 Mich. 120.

§ 4. Contributory rights and liabilities.

Duty to serve and right to compensation, see ante § 3.
Rights on accounting, see post § 8.
Contributory rights and liabilities of partners, see Partnership, V.
Measure of damages for failure to furnish money for adventure, see Damages § 51.
Loss and expense as damages for breach of agreement to furnish money for enterprise, see Damages ¶ 168.

¶ 16. One who has contracted to carry on a lumbering operation upon joint account and has agreed to furnish money as needed, the other party to do the work, cannot, without cause of complaint against the latter, refuse to make further advances, and by taking possession and control establish the right as against him to compel him to account on the basis of subsequent operations conducted by someone else in his stead.—McGraw v. Dole, 63 Mich. 1.

¶ 17. In an action for the defendant's contributory portion of advances made and expenses incurred in a land speculation, where there had been an attempt by plaintiff to abandon it because of defendant s failure to pay an award for a claim of expenses, it was error for the court to instruct that a refusal to pay towards the expenses would be a breach of the contract justifying an abandonment, then to qualify it by saying that it would be justified if done "on that account," and then to charge that if notwithstanding the award plaintiff refused to carry out the contract he could not recover, and then to qualify that by saying that he could abandon the award as well as the contract.—Hart v. Firzlaff, 67 Mich. 514.

¶ 18. Where the claim of plaintiff for reimbursement of advances and expenses by defendant, his coadventurer in a land speculation, was that plaintiff was to advance a half on condition that defendant would reimburse one-half of the expenses, it was error for the court in stating to the jury what was plaintiff's version of the agreement to omit to state that condition and simply to state how the contributions to the purchase price were to be made.—Hart v. Firzlaff, 67 Mich. 514.

¶ 19. Under an agreement between an attorney and client for the purchase and sale of tax titles, whereby the attorney was to furnish the necessary services and the client was to advance the necessary money and take title, the proceeds of sales to be divided equally after deducting money advanced and expenses, and lands not sold within a year to be equally held, the attorney was only entitled to his interest upon paying one-half of the purchase price and expenses paid by the client, in a bill for accounting filed by the attorney before the expiration of the year.—Clink v. Carpenter, 122 Mich. 681.

¶ 19a. An agreement between parties to cut and sell timber and to share the expenses equally covers necessary payments of interest on cost of property purchased for camp purposes.—Hopkins Mfg. Co. v. Ruggles, 51 Mich. 474.

§ 5. Property rights and interests and liens.

Interests in capital and property of firm, see Partnership, III, V, VII.
Agreements within statute of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of, II, B.

¶ 20. Where subscriptions in a building enterprise had been paid up, although no stock was actually issued, an equitable lien for interest thereon was allowed upon the completed building; the venture having been terminated and that having been accordant with the nature of the interests.—Near v. Donelly, 80 Mich. 130.

¶ 21. An agreement to take stock in a hotel building to be erected by defendant, to whom the money was to be paid, the subscribers taking in return an interest in the building, according to the amount paid, defendant to have the use of the building so long as he should keep it as a hotel, and he to pay interest to those taking stock so long as they should continue to hold the same, was construed in an action for an accounting as giving such subscribers a lien on the completed building according to the amounts paid, even though the stock was never issued.—Near v. Donelly, 80 Mich. 130.

¶ 22. On a bill to determine the interests of the respective subscribers and of the complainant manager of a hotel built by subscriptions and operated as a commonly owned property until disused for that purpose, where the interests were regarded as "stock" in the building without any issuance of stock, it was proper to order a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds to them ratably.—Murray v. Near, 106 Mich. 59.

¶ 23. A lumberman made contracts with a logger, whereby the two were to undertake a lumbering operation on joint account, but the logger was to do the job. The lumberman was to advance money as needed for outfit or operations, and, as security for his advances, the outfit was to remain his property until the logger should have paid for his share with interest. Held, that this vested in the logger the legal title to his share; but it gave the lumberman no authority in law to take possession of the outfit and sell it to enforce the security; the agreement was one that could only be enforced in equity as an equitable lien.—McGraw v. Dole, 63 Mich. 1.

¶ 24. A bill for an accounting declaring on an oral agreement to buy lands under an option held by complainant, to lumber them, and divide the profits, cannot be construed as founded on a mere profit sharing agreement, and thus avoid the statute of frauds; where it alleged that the lands were taken in the name of a third person who advanced money, that the parties were to become equitable owners of the said lands and timber, and that after payment of the costs and expenses of lumbering they should equally share the profits that arose from the business as well as the money to be received in any way "from the sale of the lands so to be owned by them."—Tuttle v. Bristol, 142 Mich. 148.

¶ 25. One Ruggles made a contract with one Bradley, by which the former was to locate certain lands and the latter was to take the title to the lands and make the necessary payment therefor. By the agreement the lands were to be sold and Ruggles was to have one-half the profits from the sale after Bradley had deducted the money paid by him for the land, plus legal interest. Held, Ruggles had only a personal contract right to receive one-half the profits of sales of the land and had no property interest in the land which he could enforce against the grantees of Bradley taking the lands with knowledge of the agreement.—Ruggles v. Merritt, 166 Mich. 457.

§ 6. Interests and rights in profits.

Profit-sharing rights of partnerships, see Partnership, V et seq.
Common assumpsit for shares, see Assumpsit §§ 30, 31.
Action between brokers for the sharing of commissions, see Brokers § 51.
Evidence of common interest of brokers in profits, see Brokers ¶ 171.

¶ 26. The term "net profits" is what remains as a clear gain in any business venture after deducting the capital invested in the business, the expenses incurred in its conduct, and the losses sustained in its prosecution.—Crawford v. Calkins, 170 Mich. 587.

¶ 27. The losses to be deducted in the process of ascertaining the net profits of the business include bad and uncollectible accounts.—Crawford v. Calkins, 170 Mich. 587.

§ 7. Sale or transfer of shares.

Transfers of shares and interests by partners, see Partnership, IV.

¶ 28. Parties jointly interested with others in the purchase and lumbering of lands sold to the others their joint interest before the undertaking was completed, and the latter agreed to pay them certain sums at fixed times, provided these sums did not exceed the investment made by the vendors in the first purchase, the amount of which was unknown at the time of the sale. Held, in an action by the vendors against the purchasers, that the latter were entitled to retain what they had paid beyond their own proportion, and also what the vendors would have been liable for in the joint dealings of the two with third parties, and the purchasers continued liable for after the dissolution of their relations.—Edson v. Gates, 44 Mich. 253.

§ 8. Accounting.

¶ 29. When a capitalist has at request of a road contractor financed the work and participated in the compensation, it is the duty of the person agreed upon by the parties as their financial agent, and who represents the capitalist's interests, to keep just and accurate accounts of all moneys and supplies furnished for the job and to be able to produce vouchers for moneys or supplies advanced.—Young v. Barras, 74 Mich. 343.

¶ 30. A bill for an accounting will lie wherever there are fiduciary relations between the parties under which the duty to keep and render accounts exists; and one who files such a bill for an accounting for his share of the proceeds of a business carried on upon joint account is not confined to his remedy at law, whether a partner or not.—Cochrane v. Adams, 50 Mich. 16; Clarke v. Pierce, 52 Mich. 157; Darrah v. Boyce, 62 Mich. 480.

¶ 31. An accounting lies where P., the holder of an option on pine lands, agrees orally with T. to give him the right to purchase, each to pay half the expense incurred in examining the timber, T., if he purchases, to give P. one-third of the profits arising from such purchase, and where T., having purchased and having made large sales of land and timber, refuses to account for the profits.—Petrie v. Torrent, 88 Mich. 43.

¶ 32. In an accounting suit where the defendant denies that the plaintiff was jointly interested in the business with him, and alleges the plaintiff to have been merely his agent under an agreement whereby the compensation for his services was to be a share of the profits, it is inconsistent for the defendant further to allege that he, defendant, was, under the arrangement, to be allowed interest on his capital invested and a commission on sales.—Clarke v. Pierce, 74 Mich. 638.

¶ 33. Complainant and defendant agreed to lumber jointly for a year their separate lands, the timber contributed by each to be taken and sold by a trustee, who was to apply the proceeds to satisfy advances made to complainant, and to pay expenses, the residue to be divided according to the timber contributed by each. The parties operated more than a year under the agreement, departing from it in some particulars related to the keeping of accounts. Disputes then arose and a settlement was refused. Held, that complainant was entitled to an account. —Turnbull v. Monaghan, 94 Mich. 87.

¶ 34. Complainant's intestate contracted with defendants' testator to plat and sell a tract of land owned by the latter, who was to furnish all of the money necessary to the performance of the contract, for which he was to be reimbursed, as also for the purchase price of the land, from the moneys received from the first sales of lots, and the remainder of the moneys realized under said contract were to be equally divided between the parties. Complainant's intestate platted the land, and sold nearly enough lots to reimburse defendants' testator, which money he received, and then revoked the power of attorney he had given complainant's intestate, and sold a portion of the remaining lots, and received the money therefor; and at the time of the death of the respective parties a number of the lots were unsold, and no accounting had been had between them. Complainant thereupon filed a bill for an accounting by defendants for the moneys received by their testator, and for a sale of the remainder of the lots, and an equal division of the net proceeds arising from such sale. Held, that the trust was a continuing one, and that the rights of the parties could not properly be adjusted except in a court of equity.—Fowle v. Barnes, 99 Mich. 8.

¶ 35. Plaintiff contracted to raise a vessel and cargo belonging to defendant for 70 per cent of the salvage. Litigation against a third party claiming certain interest and lien on the vessel was necessary. The jury found an implied agreement by defendant to pay its proportionate cost of the litigation. Held that defendant was entitled to an accounting in which amounts already paid by him on account of such litigation should be considered.—Murphy v. Northern Steamship Co., 131 Mich. 120.

¶ 36. Under a bill for an accounting as to profits of land sold the lower court was directed to make an order allowing complainant full opportunity to examine defendant's books of account.—Petrie v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 265.

¶ 37. In an accounting suit where, after the right to an accounting had been determined, defendant harassed complainant by various other suits for the purpose of depriving him of his just share of the fund, and thereby necessitated large expenditures that otherwise were unnecessary, the sum of $3,000.00 was allowed.—Petrie v. Torrent, 107 Mich. 648.

¶ 38. Several persons entered into a contract with D. by which they agreed to contribute certain sums "as and for stock" in a hotel building to be erected by him, and to "take in pay" a corresponding interest in the property. D. was to have the use of the building so long as he should conduct a hotel therein, by paying interest to the others upon the amounts of their several subscriptions. D. constructed the building, and used it for hotel purposes for several years, paying interest as provided by the contract, but no stock was ever issued. Upon discontinuing the business as unprofitable, D. filed a bill to determine the interests of the respective parties, and to wind up the affairs of the concern. Held, that equity had jurisdiction; since there was a property interest and the relation of debtor and creditor existed between the parties only as to the interest which D. was to pay while running the hotel; and a decree was properly entered for a sale of the property, and a division of the proceeds among all of the parties in proportion to the amount furnished by each.—Murray v. Near, 106 Mich. 59.

¶ 39. Defendants represented to complainant that a certain oil lease was for sale for $12,500 and induced the latter and others by such representations to subscribe that sum to purchase it. Defendants themselves subscribed, and defendant Purchase was paid the money as trustee to secure the lease.

He in fact paid only $3,500 for the lease. Held, a bill for an accounting for the balance would lie against defendants, and in such accounting their subscriptions should be charged against them.—Mast v. Purchase, 163 Mich. 35.

¶ 40. One who purchased a half-interest in a mine from another in 1887, with an agreement that the vendor should work the mine and divide the profits with the purchaser, is guilty of laches to such an extent that equity will not aid him in a suit for an accounting where it appears that he never saw the mine, that he wrote defendant concerning it from time to time until 1899, that he continued to write more or less frequently up to the year 1901, but that he never used any diligence to locate defendant until 1904, and that when he did he found him without difficulty.—Dowse v. Gaynor, 155 Mich. 38.

¶ 41. One of the parties to a logging operation that was conducted by the other on joint account stopped the work, took possession of the outfit, and sued the operating party for an accounting. The latter brought trover for the outfit. It was stipulated that both cases should be decided on the chancery record. Held, however, that the question of damages in trover ought rather to be determined by a trial of the case at law; and that after final judgment therein, a further accounting might be had in which such damages, if any, might be allowed as a credit.—McGraw v. Dole, 63 Mich. 1. See also Dole v. McGraw, 71 Mich. 106.

¶ 42. Where complainants and defendant entered into an agreement whereby the former were to advance money to defray the expenses of building a machine, and the latter was to do the work, secure patents, and organize a corporation for the manufacture thereof, and later it was agreed that defendant should dispose of the machine and patents so that complainants could get their money back, and where defendant effected such sale without protecting complainants, receiving for himself a sum far in excess of the amount invested by complainants, upon which the latter filed a bill for an accounting, defendant could not complain of a decree in favor of complainants for the amount invested by them.—Caulkins v. Lavigne, 156 Mich. 89.

¶ 43. In an accounting pursuant to an implied promise by defendant to pay part of the cost of litigation with reference to a vessel which plaintiff had contracted to raise for a share of the salvage, defendant is not entitled to charge against plaintiff any share of loss resulting from a levy upon defendant's boat to collect a judgment rendered in the litigation.—Murphy v. Northern Steamship Co., 131 Mich. 120.

¶ 44. On an accounting between joint adventurers where the business of selling posts and ties was loosely conducted, the court had recourse to the best available data for computing interest on balances, and made its rests somewhat arbitrarily so as to reach a substantially accurate result.—Turnbull v. Monaghan, 94 Mich. 87.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

TREATS of partnership associations, so called, formed under the statutes and having shares transferable without destroying the association, yet not having all of the attributes of corporations. It excludes Partnership and Joint Adventures, both which see.

¶ 1. There is an essential difference between a joint stock company as it existed at the common law, and a joint stock company having extensive statutory powers conferred upon it by the state within which it is organized.—Lyon v. Denison, 80 Mich. 371.

¶ 2. Partnership associations, limited, organized under How. St., chap. 79, are governed by the law of corporations rather than by the law of limited partnership with respect to paying for stock with notes.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Detroit Cycle Co., 111 Mich. 251; Goodspeed v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 199 Mich. 273.

¶ 3. An implement company was organized under chapter 160, Comp. L. of 1897. Held, the law governing corporations, rather than the law governing copartnerships, was applicable to such a company.—Armstrong v. Stearns, 156 Mich. 597.

¶ 4. Partnership associations organized under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 6079-6089, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 5425-5435, are legal entities, and are quasi corporations, controlled by the law applicable to corporations rather than partnerships.—Derk P. Yonkerman Co. v. Charles H. Fuller's Advertising Agency, 135 Fed. 613.

¶ 5. The fact that Const., art. XV, § 11, is expressly made applicable to associations and joint stock companies having "any of the privileges of corporations," does not imply that the word corporation whenever used in legislation shall include such organizations.—Attorney General ex rel. Potter v. McVichie, 138 Mich. 387.

¶ 5a. A limited partnership association which accepts the provisions of a statute in its incorporation is bound by the provisions of such statute.—Goodspeed v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 199 Mich. 273.

¶ 6. In the statement preliminary to the organization of a limited partnership association, under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 160, the description of property contributed to the capital stock in lieu of cash must be definite enough to allow an inquiring creditor to form an intelligent estimate of the value of the property contributed.—Wood v. Sloman, 150 Mich. 177.

¶ 7. Articles of organization of an association required to be filed with the register of deeds under Comp. L. 1897, § 6079, were properly filed in the office of the person who held the office of both county clerk and register; and the mistake of the county clerk in taking the record of the articles when the offices were separated did not affect the legality of the organization.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 8. The written schedule of property contributed to a limited partnership required to be filed in the office of the register of deeds cannot be varied by a secret parol agreement between the original associates.—Macomber v. Endion Grape Juice Co., 160 Mich. 54.

¶ 9. In describing in the schedule the property contributed by parties as a part of the capital, it is insufficient, under section 6079, chap. 160, Comp. L. 1897, to describe the property in general terms without making the description as specific as the nature of the property will admit of.—Macomber v. Endion Grape Juice Co., 160 Mich. 54.

¶ 10. Where a partnership fails to acquire a valid title to all the property specified in its articles, and the amount of its cash capital is overstated, these irregularities do not affect the validity of its organization.—Andrews v. Brace, 154 Mich. 126.

§ 2. Subscriptions, calls and assessments, and payments.

Withdrawal or cancellation of subscriptions, see post § 3.
Liability of promoters putting out full-paid stock fictitiously paid up, see post § 16.
Difference between real and appraised value of property as an asset in dissolution, see post ¶ 90.

General law of subscriptions to stocks of corporations, see Corporations, VII.
Statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7950 et seq.

¶ 11. The implied promise of one holding moneys for a joint stock association, in which the interests of the members are represented by certificates transferable at will, is to make payment to those who are associates when suit is brought; and where one of the plaintiffs, who is a member at the time of bringing suit holds by assignment from one of the original associates, the declaration need not mention the assignment, but may count as upon an original promise to all the plaintiffs.—Willson v. Owen, 30 Mich. 474.

¶ 12. In an action brought by parties who had united in getting up a horse-fair association, against one who had acted as treasurer, to recover the funds received by him, it was objected that, the defendant being one of the associates, an action at law would not lie against him, but an accounting in equity as between partners was the only appropriate remedy. Held that, the evidence being conflicting upon the question whether defendant was associated with the plaintiffs as a partner in the venture, the verdict of the jury, to whom it was fairly submitted as a question of fact, finding in legal effect that he was not, was a conclusive answer to the objection.—Willson v. Owen, 130 Mich. 474.

¶ 13. Where the articles of a joint stock association made it a condition to an assessment upon shares of stock that the proceeds of the sale of a certain number of shares should first be expended, it was held that a notice given while some of this stock remained unsold of a meeting to be thereafter held for making an assessment was premature, and that no valid meeting for that purpose could be held in pursuance of it, even though in the interval the remaining stock was sold, and the proceeds expended.—Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co., 23 Mich. 145.

¶ 14. A subscriber to the capital stock of such an association formed as a limited partnership under How. St., chap. 79, may, with the consent of the other subscribers, pay for the stock subscribed for by him by giving his promissory notes therefor, and such payment renders his stock paid up as against creditors of the association; particularly where the notes are at once converted into money, which is applied for the benefit of the association.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Detroit Cycle Co., 111 Mich. 251.

¶ 15. In changing a company from a corporation to a limited partnership, the property was conveyed by the corporation to defendants Thresher and Johnston, who instantly conveyed the same to the limited partnership. To each of them 2,998 shares of stock in the partnership were issued as fully paid up. These shares they then immediately turned back into the partnership treasury to be sold. No statement of this transaction was filed, as required by statute, with the register of deeds. Plaintiff bought shares of this treasury stock. Held, the treasury stock could not be considered as paid up.—Macomber v. Endion Grape Juice Co., 160 Mich. 54.

¶ 16. Certified checks constitute a contribution in cash in good faith by a special partner as a member of a limited partnership, even if not presented until after the filing of the certificate required by How. St. § 2344 et seq.—Chick v. Robinson, 95 Fed. 619.

¶ 17. Evidence held insufficient to present a question for the jury whether certain of certified checks, which were given by a special partner of a limited partnership in payment for stock, were held and not deposited, under an agreement among the partners, until after the filing of the affidavit of a general partner, under How. St. § 2348 as to the amount in cash contributed by the special partner.—Chick v. Robinson, 95 Fed. 619.

¶ 18. Where payments were made by an individual to a limited partnership association, the absence of proof that such payments were made for the purchase of stock, the only proof being a resolution and entries upon the books, an instruction that the payments made the payor a creditor of the company is justified.—Jacobs v. Morgenthaler, 149 Mich. 1.

§ 3. ——Cancellation and withdrawal or forfeiture.

Liability of other members for amount repayable to defrauded one, see post § 16, ¶ 77.
Rescission and cancellation of agreements in general and grounds for rescission, see Rescission; Fraud; Mistake.
Withdrawal or cancellation of corporate stock subscriptions, see Corporations, VII.

¶ 19. Complainant, on becoming manager of a partnership association, bought shares of stock and made part payment thereon. After acting as manager for several months, he expressed dissatisfaction with his purchase, and a new arrangement was made by which he was given more shares. He now seeks by bill to set aside the sale of stock to him under the new arrangement on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud. Held, the bill could not be sustained, since complainant was familiar with the entire enterprise, and did not rely on the misrepresentations.—Andrews v. Brace, 154 Mich. 126.

¶ 20. In a suit for the cancellation of a certificate of stock it appeared that defendants had attempted to form a limited partnership association, but failed to record the articles of association. Plaintiff's subscription was procured by fraud. Held, that plaintiff was not estopped to deny the existence of defendants as a limited partnership association.—Nichols v. Buell, 157 Mich. 609.

¶ 21. One induced by fraudulent representations to subscribe for stock in a partnership association is entitled in equity to have the certificate of stock canceled, and to be repaid its purchase price.—Nichols v. Buell, 157 Mich. 609.

¶ 22. The law court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit of one who bought treasury stock in a limited partnership, rescinded the purchase on the ground of fraud and tendered back the stock, and who sues the original stockholders to recover the purchase money.—Macomber v. Endion Grape Juice Co., 160 Mich. 54.

¶ 23. Stock was put in the treasury of a limited copartnership as being fully paid when it was not. Defendant Spencer bought the same in good faith as fully paid up. In a suit by another innocent purchaser against the stockholders to recover back money paid for treasury stock, held, that defendant Spencer was not liable.—Macomber v. Endion Grape Juice Co., 160 Mich. 54.

¶ 24. The right to forfeit shares in any joint stock undertaking must come from the law, and can only be exercised as therein described. Where the articles of association govern the right of forfeiture, all conditions precedent made by them must be strictly complied with, or the proceeding is void.—Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co., 23 Mich. 145.

§ 4. Meetings and elections.

Meeting to call assessments, stage when permissible, see ante ¶ 13.

Execution of contracts and authorizing resolutions, see post § 8.

General law as to corporate meetings and voting, see Corporations, IX.

Statutory provisions as to meetings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7954.

Provisions as to cumulative voting to obtain minority representation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7966.

¶ 25. Where articles provide that notice of regular meetings shall be given by mail, an oral notice of a meeting to assess stock is not sufficient as to persons who did not appear at said meeting in response thereto.—Westcott v. Minnesota Min. Co., 23 Mich. 145.

¶ 26. The minority representation law, Comp. L. 1897, § 8553, providing for cumulative voting in the election of directors in any corporation, does not apply to the election of managers of limited partnerships where any manager may bind the firm.—Attorney General ex rel. Potter v. McVichie, 138 Mich. 387.

¶ 27. A partnership association, limited, had authority to provide in its by-laws for the service of notice of meetings by mail instead of personally.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 28. Special meetings of managers of a partnership, limited, at which all were not present, were not presumed irregular, and the burden of showing irregularity was upon the complaining member.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 29. A member of an association who was represented by a duly authorized proxy, at meetings held outside the state, was estopped from attacking the validity of mortgages upon the ground that the authority for the execution of such mortgages was given at meetings illegally held outside the state.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 30. A member of an association who was represented at meetings outside the state, by authorized proxy, was estopped from urging the invalidity of the by-laws which authorized him to act by proxy.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 31. A member of a partnership association, limited, was estopped to deny the validity of mortgages and deeds authorized at a meeting of the board of managers outside the state, where he himself at such place signed the articles of association which appointed the managers who all lived at such place, it being presumed that he knew they intended holding the meetings there; and where such member presented a claim at one of such meetings and acted upon authority given to him at another.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

§ 5. Resolutions and records.

Provisions as to dividends and impairment or reduction of capital, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7955.

Provisions as to loans of credit, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7956.

¶ 32. At the stockholders' meeting of a limited copartnership a resolution was passed directing a committee to sell certain personal property, and apply the proceeds to reducing the general indebtedness of the company. In a suit by one surety of the company who was a member of the committee, against another surety to recover contribution for certain particular debts paid by the former, held, it was inadmissible for the defendant to introduce parol evidence to show that the resolution passed at the meeting was introduced to direct the committee to apply the proceeds to said particular debts.—Lipsett v. Hassard, 158 Mich. 509.

¶ 33. Title to the property owned by a partnership association organized under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 160, is in the company and not in the shareholders, even though such an association is not in the strict sense a corporation.—Starr v. Shepard, 145 Mich. 302.

¶ 34. Application of the proceeds of stock sales to the construction of a water power canal was not a fraudulent misappropriation of the funds of a partnership association formed to deal in lands to which project the power canal was a necessary adjunct.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 35. A resolution at a meeting of a limited copartnership directed a committee to sell certain personal property, and apply the proceeds to reducing the indebtedness of the company. Held, in a suit for contribution, that a surety for certain particular debts of the company was entitled to have the proceeds applied pro rata to these debts.—Lipsett v. Hassard, 158 Mich. 509.

§ 7. Recovery of assets.

¶ 36. In an action of trover by the receiver of a limited partnership association against a stockholder to recover certain notes given in part payment for property of the association and distributed to the stockholders the defendant may show the facts concerning the claim of the secretary, who is the principal claimant, and the condition upon which and the funds from which the claim was to be paid.—Jacobs v. Morgenthaler, 149 Mich. 1.

¶ 37. In an action of trover by the receiver of a limited partnership association against a stockholder to recover certain notes given in part payment for property of the association and distributed to the stockholders in payment of their claims, the defendant may show by cross-examination of the receiver and secretary, who is the principal creditor, that no action has been brought against other stockholders who had received notes under similar circumstances. Jacobs v. Morgenthaler, 149 Mich. 1.

Provisions as to making debts and contracts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7954.

¶ 38. A contract for the purchase of land was signed in the name of a partnership association dealing in lands, by its chairman, and also signed by the complainant vendor. The chairman then left the city, and some days later the contract was ordered closed and approved at a full meeting of the board of directors, at which time blanks in the contract were filled up. This action of the board was duly spread upon the minutes. One of the material clauses of the contract as prepared by the chairman was ordered stricken out by the board. Held, the act of the chairman in executing the contract in advance of a meeting of the board did not render the contract void under Act 191, Pub. Acts 1877, art. 3.—Howard v. Factory Land Co., 167 Mich. 251.

¶ 39. The secretary and executive officer of a limited partnership association contracted in writing on behalf of said association to purchase certain land. The contract was signed only by the vendor. It was never signed by at least two managers of said association as required by the statute. Defendant made payments under the contract, surveyed, platted, and paid the taxes on the premises. Complainant vendor filed a bill to foreclose the contract. Defendant by cross-bill sought to recover back the payments already made, on the ground that the contract was not lawfully entered into. Held, the contract not being ultra vires, defendant could not recover back what he had paid, the doctrine of estoppel in pais applying to prevent said recovery.—Geel v. Goulden, 168 Mich. 413.

¶ 40. A contract by a limited partnership association to employ plaintiff for two years at a salary of $2,000 per year is void under Comp. L. 1898, § 6083, where not reduced to writing and signed by at least two managers, and therefore not binding upon the partnership.—Rhoades v. Malta Vita Pure Food Co., 149 Mich. 235.

¶ 40a. Where a contract of hiring is made by an officer of defendant limited association, it is not competent in a suit on such contract for the defendant to introduce evidence to show that certain of the terms claimed by plaintiff employee to be included in said agreement were never submitted to defendant's board of managers.—Richards v. Church Balance-Gear Co., 166 Mich. 464.

¶ 40b. Evidence that one of the managers of a partnership association, limited, had expressed his personal intention of readjusting the account of an employee for overdrafts in excess of his salary, held not binding upon the association.—Berry Bros., Ltd. v. Hooper's Estate, 179 Mich. 67.

¶ 40c. Comp. L. 1897, § 6081, does not require the full name of a limited partnership association to be used in a promissory note when it is the payee.—Shaw, Kendall & Co. v. Brown, 128 Mich. 573.

§ 9. Authority and powers of officers.

Contracts of employment, see ante § 8.
Ratification and estoppel, see post § 10.
Dealings between association and members, see post § 11.
Personal liability of officers and representative or personal nature of contracts, see post § 12.
Notice imputed to taker of paper, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.
Authorities and power of corporate officers, see Corporation, XVII.
Mode of exercising authority to contract, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7954.

¶ 41. A delegation of authority to employ plaintiff for a partnership association and fix his salary does not authorize making a contract by which the corporation becomes liable to pay him for services previously rendered for the corporation's predecessor in business.—Rhoades v. Malta Vita Pure Food Co., 149 Mich. 235.

¶ 42. Under section 6083, Comp. L. 1897, it is the law of Michigan that a single manager of a partnership association, limited, has not the authority to make a contract that creates a liability for an amount exceeding five hundred dollars.—Hoyt v. Paw Paw Grape Juice Co., 158 Mich. 619.

¶ 43. Section 6083, Comp. L. 1897, relating to limited partnerships, provides that no obligation in excess of five hundred dollars may be contracted against such a partnership unless the contract be in writing signed by two of the managers. A manager of such a partnership engaged in the publishing business hired plaintiff at a salary of $2,000 a year. Held, the contract was void.—Beach v. Business Man's Pub. Co., 163 Mich. 226.

¶ 44. Under section 6083, Comp. L. 1897, the manager of a limited partnership, even though that partnership be engaged in buying and selling merchandise, cannot without the signature to the contract of two managers make a contract for over five hundred dollars unless the contract so made be a merchandising contract.—Beach v. Business Man's Pub. Co., 163 Mich. 226.

¶ 45. Every one dealing with a limited partnership association is affected with notice of the provisions of How. St. § 2369, providing that no liability for an amount exceeding $500, except against the person incurring the same, shall bind the association, unless reduced to writing and signed by at least two managers.—Dietsinson v. Matheson Motor Car Co., 161 Fed. 874.

¶ 46. The statute governing partnership associations (How. St. § 2369) provides as follows: "No debts shall be contracted nor liability incurred for said association except by one or more of said managers, and no liability for an amount exceeding $500, except against the person incurring it, shall bind the said association, unless reduced to writing, and signed by at least two managers." Held, not to warrant the construction that a contract by one officer only, for an amount exceeding $500, is good for that sum, and void for the excess, but that the invalidity attaches to every such contract in its entirety.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Vaughan, 115 Mich. 156.

¶ 47. Complainant vendor's broker negotiated a sale of land with one Moak, the secretary and executive officer of defendant association, who was acting in behalf of said association. The contract was signed by the vendor only, but was kept in his possession by said Moak. Payments were made by defendant on said contract. The land was surveyed, platted and taxes paid thereon by it. The purchase price was in excess of five hundred dollars. Held, complainant vendor's bill to foreclose said contract would not lie, since under the statute the contract was not signed by at least two managers of defendant association.—Geel v. Goulden, 168 Mich. 413.

¶ 48. Under a provision in the articles of association of a partnership limited, organized for the purpose of buying, selling, etc., and dealing in real and personal property, empowering its elected board of managers to make such rules for the government and management of the business concerns of the association as they might think expedient, and authorizing its chairman and secretary to sign notes, deeds, mortgages, etc.; the inference was that such board had power to authorize the execution of mortgages and deeds, and that they obtained such power from a member who with his associates, signed the articles of association.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 49. Authority to the secretary and treasurer of a corporation to contract to pay for services rendered to another, the predecessor of the corporation, for which the defendant was in no way liable, does not authorize the officers to delegate the authority to another.—Rhoades v. Malta Vita Pure Food Co., 149 Mich. 235.

§ 10. ——Ratification and estoppel.

¶ 50. The articles of a joint stock mercantile association prohibited the officers intrusted with the conduct of its business from making purchases on credit. They, notwithstanding, made a purchase on credit, first giving the seller a copy of the articles. Held, that the association was not liable for the purchase, unless subsequently ratified by it.—Hotchin v. Kent, 8 Mich. 526.

¶ 51. The receipt of the goods by a joint stock mercantile association, or even the sale of them in the course of their business, would not alone amount to a ratification of a purchase on credit, since the members could not be supposed to know that the purchase was made in violation of their articles. —Hotchin v. Kent, 8 Mich. 526.

¶ 52. Section 6083, Comp. L. 1897, provided that the consent of at least two managers in writing should be required to contract debts over five hundred dollars, except in the case of merchandising associations, where a majority in interest might authorize in writing one manager to incur such debts. One of the managers of the merchandising association in question for a period of years, to favor a customer, gave association notes without written authority. The other managers and some stockholders knew of the practice, and acquiesced in it, and the notes were paid from time to time as they came due. Held, that the association was estopped to deny its liability to bona fide holders of the notes.—Armstrong v. Stearns, 156 Mich. 597.

¶ 53. Section 6083, Comp. L. 1897, relating to limited partnerships, provides that no obligation in excess of five hundred dollars may be contracted against such a partnership unless the contract be in writing, signed by two of the managers. The statute excepts associations for the purpose of buying and selling merchandise. The manager of a limited partnership engaged in the publishing business employed plaintiff for a year at a salary of $2,000. The position was filled by him for several years on this basis. Held, the contract was void, and defendant partnership was not liable on any principle of estoppel for breach of the contract in discharging plaintiff.—Beach v. Business Man's Pub. Co., 163 Mich. 226.

§ 11. ——Dealings with association or members.

See also post ¶ 62 et seq.

Lending credit to members, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7956.

¶ 54. A director of a joint stock corporation occupies a fiduciary relation; and his dealings with the subject-matter of his trust or agency, and with the beneficiary or party whose interest is confided to his care, are viewed with jealousy and distrust by the courts and may be set aside on slight grounds.—Washburn v. Green, 133 U. S. 30, 33 L. ed. 516, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280.

¶ 55. The validity of a conveyance was not affected by the fact that one of the managers of the association grantor, was a member of the partnership whose indebtedness was paid by the transaction; the rights of the creditor in question being superior to those of the complaining members of the association.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 56. A member of a partnership association and former chairman of its board does not commit fraud on it in buying in its lands on foreclosure, though for less than they are worth, where at the time he has nothing of the association in his hands and the sale is public and he is personally liable for the debts secured by the mortgages.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 57. Where an assignment was made by a partnership association, limited, to its manager, of a large number of mortgages securing payment of the purchase money of lands sold by it, for the purpose of repaying indebtedness owed to such manager and to avoid the payment of taxes; the latter motive, although not to be approved, did not constitute a fraud upon the members of the association for whose benefit it was done.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 58. Where several pieces of property of a partnership association were purchased before the organization, in the name of one who executed purchase money mortgages and whom the association agreed to indemnify for his personal liability upon such mortgages, and where upon a deficiency resulting at a foreclosure sale, such deficiency was secured by a mortgage upon other property of said association, a subsequent conveyance of the equity of redemption because the association had no other means of paying the mortgage, afforded no evidence of fraud, where there was no such disparity between the value of the property and the indebtedness, as to evidence fraud.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 59. The chairman of a limited association, who was also a stockholder, was not as against one not a creditor, precluded by reason of his relation to the association, from purchasing claims against the association at a discount, after such association had gone into liquidation and trustees had been appointed to manufacture the necessary stock on hand, and had employed such chairman to prosecute such work for the trustees. —Morris v. Imperial Cap Co., 135 Mich. 476.

§ 12. Personal obligations and liabilities of officers.

¶ 60. The treasurer of a limited partnership association does not become liable as vendee on a land contract running to said association as vendee, which was assigned by the vendor but not by said association by reason of the fact that said treasurer at the request of the vendor, who has full knowledge of the fact that said contract is unsigned, assigns said contract to said association.—Geel v. Goulden, 168 Mich. 413.

¶ 61. The by-laws of defendant partnership association organized under Act No. 191, Pub. Acts of 1877, provided that all members should be subject to such rules and regulations as should be adopted by the association. Defendant adopted a rule that all money due to members for work and labor should be used in furthering the business of the association and that six per cent interest should be paid on the money thus held back. Held, the regulation was void as being unreasonable, and plaintiff member might recover for work and labor performed. —McCarty v. Caledonia Coal Co., 164 Mich. 692.

¶ 61a. A member of a limited partnership may make a profit on lumber sold to the same where he acts in good faith and charges only the market price.—Mack v. Engel, 165 Mich. 540.

¶ 61b. A member of a partnership association, limited, is in the same position as to interest upon advances made by him as a member of any ordinary partnership.—Mack v. Engel, 165 Mich. 540.

¶ 61c. A partner who makes advances for partnership purposes beyond the amount of his agreed contribution is entitled to collect interest thereon at the customary legal rate, even in the absence of an express agreement therefor with his copartners.—Mack v. Engel, 165 Mich. 540.

¶ 61d. Where a limited partnership sells its plant to a third person, a member actively procuring the sale and securing an interlocutory order confirming the same is estopped to contest the validity of said sale under a bill brought by other members of the partnership for an accounting.—Mack v. Engel, 165 Mich. 540.

¶ 61e. Under a bill for accounting brought by a member of a limited partnership against another member, complainant cannot recover for loss sustained by the partnership in sawing lumber for defendant where he has acquiesced for a long time in the price charged.—Mack v. Engel, 165 Mich. 540.

§ 14. ——Fraud on members.

Withdrawal and cancellation of subscription or purchase of stock from treasury, see ante § 3.

General law of fraud in fiduciary relations, see Fraud, II; and references there collated.

¶ 62. It was not fraud for a partnership association to make a mortgage to one of its members for a debt for which it was liable to him, and then to convey to him the equity of redemption when it was afterwards unable to pay such debt.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 63. Taking an advance of money to pay mortgages and then in pursuance of the agreement to secure the advancing party assigning to him the mortgages, under which the land passed by subsequent foreclosure, does not amount to the same as paying the mortgages and then transferring them so as to suffer a foreclosure in fraud of the members of the debtor, a partnership association. —Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 64. In a bill to set aside conveyances and for an accounting, brought by a member of a limited partnership enterprise the fact that at foreclosure sales of purchase money mortgages, the land was obtained at less than cost and at less than it was worth, by a defendant who was personally responsible for the debt and had been chairman of the board of managers of the association, and who at the time of the sales had nothing in his hands belonging to the association, afforded no convincing evidence of fraud.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 65. In a bill to set aside conveyances and for an accounting, brought by a member of a limited land partnership enterprise, in which 50 per cent of the stock was placed in trust as treasury stock to be sold to pay off mortgages and indebtedness of the company, fraud was not inferred because the proceeds of the sale of such stock went to the benefit of a water power canal in which complainant and his associates were interested, and where the success of the partnership association depended upon the success of the canal.—Stradley v. Cargill Elevator Co., 135 Mich. 367.

¶ 66. The action of all but one of the stockholders of a limited partnership association in transferring certain notes belonging to the association to one of themselves, in payment of an alleged indebtedness, which transfer was made by resolution, is not binding upon a nonparticipating stockholder where in fact there was no indebtedness.—Jacobs v. Morgenthaler, 149 Mich. 1.

¶ 67. In an action of trover by the receiver of a limited partnership association against a stockholder to recover certain notes given in part payment, for the property of the association, and distributed to the stockholders in payment of their claims against it, the defendant may show that a sum sufficient to pay all outstanding debts, except such as were due the consenting stockholders, was set aside, and placed in the hands of the secretary for that purpose. —Jacobs v. Morgenthaler, 149 Mich. 1.

§ 15. ——Remedies and procedure to protect interests.

Remedies to enforce liability for debts, see also post § 16.

Proceeding to appraise dissenter's interests, see post § 17.

General remedies of corporate stockholders to protect themselves and their corporations from misdoing, see Corporations, XXIV, F.

¶ 68. Stockholders in an association organized under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 160, not strictly a corporation, nor yet a partnership, have the right to bring an action in equity, where machinery of the company, claimed by a purchaser at a void tax sale, is about to be moved away and sold, and the officers and directors of the company refuse, or by inertia equivalent to refusal, neglect to act on behalf of the company to protect its rights. —Starr v. Shepard, 145 Mich. 302.

¶ 69. Stockholders of a limited partnership association organized under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 160, have no relief at law, either by actions of replevin or trover, and may therefore have relief in an action in equity, where, such stockholders seek an injunction and a receiver of the company to prevent a purchaser of property of the company at a void tax sale from removing the same.—Starr v. Shepard, 145 Mich. 302.

§ 16. ——Liability for association debts.

Statutory liability, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7951 et seq.

¶ 70. One who enters into a contract with an association organized under the statute (How. St., chap. 79) relative to partnership associations, limited, relying entirely on an associate liability, does not acquire the right to maintain an action of assumpsit thereon against the individual stockholders by the discovery of some irregularity or defect in the original organization or subsequent management of the association; especially if the persons whose liability is sought to be enforced were not interested in the association at its organization, and were not aware of any irregularities.—Staver & Abbott Mfg. Co. v. Blake, 111 Mich. 282.

¶ 71. The omission in a single instance of the word "limited" in the use of the associate name does not give a right of action under section 3 of the Act of 1887 (How. St., chap. 79), authorizing the formation of such associations, providing that such omission shall render each member liable for any indebtedness, damage, or liability arising therefrom, where no indebtedness, damage, or liability is shown to have resulted in consequence of the omission in the particular instance.—Staver & Abbott Mfg. Co. v. Blake, 111 Mich. 282.

¶ 72. A creditor of a limited partnership association of which a receiver has been appointed is not thereafter entitled to issue execution on his judgment against subscribers to stock of the association whose subscriptions are not paid up.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Detroit Cycle Co., 111 Mich. 251.

¶ 73. The good faith of a transaction whereby the stockholders of a limited partnership association, which had become insolvent, gave their promissory notes for the unpaid parts of their subscriptions to the capital stock, and whereby the notes were immediately turned over to the principal creditor, who advanced money to pay certain outstanding indebtedness and arranged to continue the business, is a question for the jury.—Rouse, Hazard & Co. v. Detroit Cycle Co., 111 Mich. 251.

¶ 74. Where the promoters of a limited partnership association placed a fictitious valuation upon a formula for breakfast food, in order to sell at a nominal price stock represented to be full paid, the transaction falls within the intent of Comp. L. 1897, § 6080, providing that under certain contingencies members of a partnership association may be liable to its creditors to the extent of the portions of their subscriptions in the capital of the association not then paid.—Wood v. Sloman, 150 Mich. 177. (Carpenter and Grant, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 75. Where defendants attempted to form a limited partnership association, but failed to record the articles of association which were signed by them, they were copartners, and liable for the damages resulting from the fraud of one of them in furtherance of their common enterprise.—Nichols v. Buell, 157 Mich. 609.

¶ 76. In an action on a partnership note against the members of a limited partnership, formed under How. St., § 2342 et seq., in which an individual partner defended on the ground that he was not liable because he was a special partner and had actually contributed the amount of his stock in cash before the filing of an affidavit by one of the general partners as to the amount of money contributed by him, entries in the partnership books, which were open to his inspection under section 2364, were at least prima facie evidence against him of the transactions of the firm, where such entries showed that one payment was credited before the date of filing of the affidavit and two other credits were given after the filing of such affidavit.—Chick v. Robinson, 95 Fed. 619.

¶ 77. Plaintiff bought treasury stock in a limited partnership falsely represented by the original stockholders to be paid up; rescinded the purchase on the ground of fraud, and tendered back the stock; and sued the association at law to recover the purchase money. Held, a judgment in her favor was binding on the defendants, the original stockholders in a proceeding under the statute to enforce their liability.—Macomber v. Endion Grape Juice Co., 160 Mich. 54.

§ 17. Appraisal of shareholder's interest to retire it.

Due process in proceedings to ascertain member's share value, see Constitutional Law § 165.

¶ 78. A circuit court has jurisdiction to act under Comp. L. 1915, § 7953, relating to the appointment of an appraiser to fix the price of stock and interest in a limited partnership association acquired by a transferee who is not elected to the association after such transfer, where due notice is given by the service of a copy of the petition for the appointment of an appraiser with notice of hearing on the association, and it is represented at the hearing when the appointment of an appraiser is determined.—Goodspeed v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 199 Mich. 273.

¶ 78a. Under a by-law of a limited partnership association, providing that any person who is an employee or officer of the association and shall become the owner of one or more shares of stock, shall become a member thereof, provided that in case of a transfer such person shall become a member only when he shall be duly elected and shall become an employee or officer, and when such transfer shall have been made on the books of the association, and when "any stockholder shall cease to be an officer or employee, his stock shall automatically revert to the association, to be paid for at the true cash value thereof, and he shall thereupon cease to be a member thereof," a transferee of stock is the holder of an interest in the association so as to be authorized to maintain proceedings for the appointment of an appraiser under Comp. L. 1915, § 7953, where the transferor who has ceased to be an officer or employee of the company has not received payment of the true cash value of his stock.—Goodspeed v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 199 Mich. 273.

§ 18. Actions by and against association.

Action on contract of subscription, see also ante § 2.
Actions to recover assets and properties, see also ante § 7.
Remedies and procedure to enforce members' liability, see ante § 16.
Remedies to protect stockholders' interests, see ante § 15.
Dissolution and winding up proceedings, see post § 20.
Presumption as to regularity of meetings, see ante ¶ 28.
Amenability of joint stock company to mandamus as in cases of private corporations, see Mandamus, IV.
Citizenship for purposes of Federal jurisdiction, see Courts ¶ 330.
Nonestoppel of stockholders who appear specially in mandamus to object to jurisdiction, see Former Adjudication § 56.
Statutory provisions as to suing and being sued and as to process and appearances, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7959.

¶ 78a. A declaration by members of a joint stock association, one of whom holds by assignment from one of the original associates, need not mention the assignment in suing one who holds money for the association, but may count as upon an original promise to all the plaintiffs.—Willson v. Owen, 30 Mich. 474.

¶ 79. Defendants in a creditors' suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances, brought by a partnership association, formed in the state, but shown by the signature and jurat to the bill, to be in liquidation in the hands of a trustee, have no interest in objecting that it is not alleged or proved that the complainant is in liquidation, as there is no danger of such defendants being subjected to another suit since in either event the association is complainant.—Manhard Hardware Co. v. Rothschild, 121 Mich. 657.

¶ 80. The fact that a partnership association, organized under Comp. L. 1897, ch. 160, is in liquidation, sufficiently appears, in a suit by such association, as creditor, to set aside fraudulent conveyances by a debtor, where the bill is signed by a "Trustee in Liquidation," and where the jurat states that the person signing is such a trustee, that he makes oath as trustee, and is authorized to sign the bill, as such description is as effectual in the jurat and signature as elsewhere in the bill, and the statute provides for such trustees without intervention of the courts (Comp. L. 1897, § 6087).—Manhard Hardware Co. v. Rothschild, 121 Mich. 657.

¶ 81. A question as to the existence of plaintiff, in a suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances, brought by a partnership association, incorporated in the state, but shown by the signature and jurat, to the bill, to be in liquidation, should be raised by a plea in abatement (Comp. L. 1897, § 10471).—Manhard Hardware Co. v. Rothschild, 121 Mich. 657.

¶ 82. The death of a trustee in liquidation who signed and swore to a bill in behalf of the plaintiff, in a suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances, brought by a partnership association, incorporated in the state, but shown by the signature and jurat, to the bill, to be in liquidation, need not be suggested of record and another person appointed in his place since under the statutes such trustee is not a party to the suit, which is brought by the association, and the death of an officer of a party does not affect the status of a suit.—Manhard Hardware Co. v. Rothschild, 121 Mich. 657.

§ 19. Consolidation, reorganization and succession.

General law of consolidation and succession of corporations, see Corporations, XXII.
Provisions as to reorganization, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7965.

¶ 83. A limited partnership association, which succeeds to the business of a corporation, and carries on business with an agent according to the terms of a contract of agency entered into by such corporation, does not thereby become liable for any transactions between such agent and such predecessor.—Stone v. Fox Machine Co., 145 Mich. 689.

§ 20. Dissolution and winding up.

Effect of appointment of receiver, see also ante ¶ 72.
Suits by association in liquidation, see also ante § 18.
General law of corporate dissolution and winding up, see Corporations, XXIII.
Provisions for dissolution and distribution of property, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 7957, 7958.

¶ 84. Equity takes jurisdiction of a controversy relating to the distribution among members of an unincorporated joint stock association of the common fund arising from a final disposition of the company's assets.—Butterfield v. Beardsley, 28 Mich. 412.

¶ 85. Where a joint stock company is embarked in a common undertaking for its common profit, and the undertaking is sustained by money advanced by each member, though it have no corporate character, a court of equity may treat them as partners in order to settle their disputes respecting the distribution of a common fund arising from a final disposition of the entire assets of the company.—Butterfield v. Beardsley, 28 Mich. 412.

¶ 86. Under articles of association providing that the ownership of a certificate should carry with it an undivided interest in all company property, the fact that a subsequent purchaser of a certificate had never subscribed the articles is of no consequence as affecting his right to a ratable share of the proceeds of a sale of the company's property.—Butterfield v. Beardsley, 28 Mich. 412.

¶ 87. Where the entire beneficial interest of a joint stock company is transferred so as to leave nothing which certificates of stock can represent beyond the fund received, in which fund the purchaser is to have no interest, the transaction is not a sale of stock, but a final cession of the ultimate fund or property of the company.—Butterfield v. Beardsley, 28 Mich. 412.

¶ 88. Where the members of an association have each an undivided interest in the whole of its property, belonging in equity to the association, it is of no consequence in a controversy over the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the property that the legal title stood in a third person.—Butterfield v. Beardsley, 28 Mich. 412.

¶ 89. Where a company's property has been disposed of on the basis of the payment, by or through the holder of a portion of the company's shares, of a certain sum on account of the entire interest of all the other shareholders, in such a manner as to extinguish all claim on his part upon the sum so paid, his former interest in the company will have no bearing on the result in a suit between the rest of the shareholders for an equal distribution of the proceeds of the sale.—Butterfield v. Beardsley, 28 Mich. 412.

¶ 90. The trustee in bankruptcy of a limited partnership association may enforce payment of the difference between the par value of the stock and the sums paid the association for the stock, if this difference is an asset of the association.—Wood v. Sloman, 150 Mich. 177.

¶ 91. Where there are no creditors, a division of the assets of a limited partnership association among the stockholders in proportion to the amounts paid in by them is valid, even though there may have been an understanding that they should take treasury stock for the payments.—Jacobs v. Morgenthaler, 149 Mich. 1.

¶ 92. Comp. L. 1897, § 6087, governing the voluntary winding up of the affairs of a partnership association, is not complied with by calling a meeting and passing a resolution to exchange the partnership assets for stock in a railroad corporation and dividing such stock among the members, and a partner not agreeing thereto is not bound by such arrangement.—Emery v. Kalamazoo & Hastings Construction Co., 132 Mich. 560.

¶ 93. Where a partnership association's term expired September 21st, and a meeting was called July 12th for the settlement of the partnership affairs and the distribution of its assets, it constituted a voluntary winding up rather than a termination of the term and hence such winding up is governed by Comp. L. 1897, § 6087.—Emery v. Kalamazoo & Hastings Construction Co., 132 Mich. 560.

¶ 94. The majority shareholders of a partnership association have no power to wind up the affairs of the partnership by exchanging its assets for stock in a railroad corporation and compelling partners not agreeing to the transaction to become stockholders in the corporation and accept its stock for their interest in the partnership.—Emery v. Kalamazoo & Hastings Construction Co., 132 Mich. 560.

¶ 95. The fact that all the stock of a railroad corporation is owned by a partnership association does not prevent a member of the latter from objecting to an arrangement, made without her consent, by which the partnership assets were exchanged for stock in the corporation, where the partnership and the railroad corporation were separate and distinct organizations.—Emery v. Kalamazoo & Hastings Construction Co., 132 Mich. 560.

¶ 96. A member of a partnership association is not estopped from objecting to an arrangement to which he has not agreed, by which the partnership assets in winding up its affairs were exchanged for stock in a railroad corporation, by the fact that she had accepted payment from the corporation of partnership notes, payment of which the corporation had assumed under an earlier agreement.—Emery v. Kalamazoo & Hastings Construction Co., 132 Mich. 560.

I. THE OFFICE; ELECTION, TERM AND COMPENSATION.

General law of public officers, see Officers.
General law of courts and jurisdiction as distinguished from law relative to judges as such, see Courts.
Judicial notice of persons, incumbencies and signatures, see Evidence § 20.

§ 1. Eligibility and election and term.

Times and manner of calling elections, see Elections, I.
Primary elections to nominate candidates, see Elections, IV.
Jurisdiction of contest on election of circuit judge, see Elections § 57.
Constitutional term of judges, see Const. art. XVI, § 1.
Constitutional power to remove judges, see Const. art. IX, § 6.

¶ 1. Residence within the circuit is not a condition to eligibility to, or tenure of, the office of circuit judge, unless a judge actually residing within his circuit removes from it, in which case he vacates his office. People ex rel. Royce v. Goodwin, 22 Mich. 496.

¶ 2. Since a judge of the Recorder's Court of the City of Detroit is a state officer, § 7 of art. V of the Constitution renders a member of the legislature ineligible to such office.—Murtha v. Lindsay, 187 Mich. 79

§ 2. Vacancies and vacancy appointments.

General rules as to vacancies in office, see Officers, II, V.

¶ 3. A judge of probate was re-elected, but died before the commencement of his term, and an appointment was made by the governor to fill the vacancy. January 1st (when the new term would commence) the governor, on the supposition that there was now a new vacancy, made a new appointment. It was held that the second appointment was void, and that under the constitution the person first appointed would hold until a successor was elected and qualified.

—People ex rel. Andrews v. Lord, 9 Mich. 227.

¶ 4. Comp. L. 1857, § 491, How. St. § 667, which provides that, when a vacancy in a county office shall have been filled by appointment of the governor, the appointee shall hold for the unexpired portion of the regular term, cannot constitutionally apply to the office of judge of probate, or be regarded as repealing the statutes providing for special elections to keep that office filled. —People ex rel. Andrews v. Lord, 9 Mich. 227.

¶ 5. Since the Constitution vests it in the governor, sections 35 and 36, Act No. 593, Local Acts 1905, do not permit council to fill vacancy in office of judge of superior court.—Attorney General ex rel. Danhof v. Renihan, 184 Mich. 272.

§ 3. Compensation.

Statutory provisions and prohibitions, see Jud. Act, chap. XLIX, § 8 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 13730 et seq.

Statutory prohibition of taking of fees for services to clients or litigants, see Jud. Act, chap. IV, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 12258.

¶ 6. Under Const. art. VI, section 6, providing that circuit judges of Kent and other named counties shall receive in addition to the salary provided by the Constitution, such additional salary as may from time to time be fixed by the board of supervisors, the board has power to take away all additional salary previously voted by it.—Adsit v. Smith, 129 Mich. 4.

¶ 7. Under Const. art. VI, § 6, providing that circuit judges of Kent and other named counties shall receive, in addition to the salary provided by the Constitution, such additional salary as may from time to time be fixed by the board of supervisors, a resolution adopted by the board "that the report of the committee be amended by fixing salaries of county officers as follows * * * for each of the circuit judges a salary of $2,500 as provided by statute instead of $3,500 as heretofore ordered by this board" is adequate to rescind the former action of the board and reduce the salary to $2,500. —Adsit v. Smith, 129 Mich. 4.

¶ 8. The constitutional provision (art. VI, § 6) that the circuit judges may receive such additional salary as may from time to time be fixed and determined by the boards of supervisors, limits the power of the boards to fixing from time to time, if they see fit, an additional salary for the office of circuit judge; the salary must be fixed and determined for the office and not for the particular incumbent.—Beach v. Kent, 142 Mich. 347.

¶ 10. A circuit judge is not disqualified from rehearing a motion or cause which has been passed upon by another judge sitting in the same court.—Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Gratiot Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 241.

¶ 11. Where upon a decree of divorce the matter of alimony is left open for future determination, a later petition asking that alimony be decreed should be brought before the judge who heard the suit.—Mincer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 163 Mich. 628.

¶ 12. Relator obtained a decree of divorce from her husband, by which the matter of alimony was left for future determination. One year later she filed a petition before respondent circuit judge to have alimony decreed. Respondent dismissed the petition without prejudice, on the ground that the case was heard by one of his colleagues on the circuit and respondent was unfamiliar with the facts. Held, respondent's order was proper, and mandamus would not lie to compel him to vacate it.—Mincer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 163 Mich. 628.

¶ 13. While the issue in a proceeding as for a criminal contempt for the criticism of a judge is to be tried by the court and not a jury, it does not follow that it must be before the judge who is criticized; and where the offense is committed in the presence of the judge he should deal with the offender, but when committed elsewhere, the better practice is to call in another judge to hear the matter.—In re Dingley, 182 Mich. 44.

¶ 14. A motion to amend the plea by adding an affidavit denying the execution of an instrument sued upon, upon the ground that the question of such execution was fairly raised by the evidence, can properly be heard and decided only by the trial judge to whom the case has been submitted for decision.—Portsmouth Savings Bank v. Hart, 83 Mich. 646.

¶ 14a. None but the judge who tried an appeal from a justice can pass on and award costs.—Steinhauser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 463.

¶ 15. As to the right of a circuit judge of an adjoining circuit to take part in the prosecution of a criminal case, quære.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367.

¶ 16. The trial judge may hear and decide the motion to amend a plea after trial to meet proof though when entered the county in which suit was tried has been made a part of another judicial circuit.—Portsmouth Savings Bank v. Hart Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 646.

¶ 16a. After an order has been made giving plaintiff until the first day of the next term to move for a new trial, if the county is placed in a new circuit, the judge thereof has jurisdiction to grant a new trial.—Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Gratiot Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 241.

¶ 17. Application to have a proper judgment entry made which the clerk has failed to do may be entertained by the successor of the judge who rendered the decision and filed the findings and conclusions.—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

¶ 18. A finding of facts made and filed after the judge who tried the cause has resigned is a nullity.—Ellis v. Rector, 32 Mich. 379.

¶ 19. A judge whose term of office has expired has no authority to make amendments to findings of fact made while in office.—Northern Assur. Co. v. Houghton Circuit Judge, 169 Mich. 238.

§ 8. Disability to practice law.

See also ante ¶ 15.

Disqualification by reason of having been counsel, see post § 10.

Statutory prohibition of practicing or association with partner in practice, see Jud. Act, chap. IV, §§ 9, 10; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12256, 12257.

¶ 20. Under How. St. § 7247, which provides that no judge can practice as an attorney in the circuit in which he has been elected judge, a judge may practice in another circuit than his own, though he may have presided as judge there.—Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 81 Mich. 423.

¶ 21. A circuit judge who has called another judge to take his place and preside at a criminal trial cannot assist in the prosecution, though he has already sent in his resignation as judge to take effect in five days.—Bashford v. People, 24 Mich. 244.

¶ 22. The statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 5679, How. St. §§ 7247, 7248) prohibiting any judge from practicing himself or from having a partner who practices in the court of which he is a judge, is peremptory; and it applies to arbitration proceedings as well as to others.—Gallagher v. Kern, 31 Mich. 138.

III. DISQUALIFICATION TO SIT IN CASE.

§ 9. In general; effect of disqualification.

¶ 23. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 1109, no judge in any court can sit as such in any case in which he is a party, or in which he would be excluded from being a juror by reason of consanguinity or affinity to either of the parties, and where he does inadvertently sit in a case where he is thus disqualified, the order or decree made is void.—Davis Colliery Co. v. Charlevoix Sugar Co., 155 Mich. 228.

¶ 24. Probate judge named legatee may make orders preliminary to proving will.—McFarlane v. Clark, 39 Mich. 44.

¶ 25. That probate judge when he appointed a trust company guardian of an incompetent person was a stockholder of such company does not render prior proceedings void or destroy jurisdiction of the circuit court on appeal.—In re Leonard's Estate, 95 Mich. 295.

¶ 26. Although the rule as to disqualification of judges must yield to the demand of necessity, such necessity does not exist under the statute (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 264, 276) providing that the settlement of exceptions shall be made by the judge before whom the trial was had, where such statute recognizes the possibility of the absence of the judges, from illness or other causes.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 149 Mich. 601.

§ 10. Interest or bias in general.

Power of other judge to hear contempt proceedings, see ante ¶ 13.
Effect of disqualification, see ante § 9.
Statutory disqualifications, see Jud. Act, chap. IV, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 12254.
Provision disqualifying for having been of counsel in case, see Jud. Act, chap. I, § 76; Comp. L. 1915, § 12081.

¶ 27. The principle that no one can be judge in his own cause applies wherever judicial powers are employed by a body appointed by law.—Stockwell v. White Lake Township Board, 22 Mich. 341.

¶ 28. A judge cannot try a cause in which a corporation of which he is a member is a party; nor can he try a cause in which he has been consulted or employed as counsel.—People ex rel. Whipple v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 26 Mich. 342.

¶ 29. A judge who, without ever having been employed as counsel for pay in respect to a certain matter, has from time to time advised a party concerned, merely in a friendly way, is disqualified to sit in a cause having reference to that matter.—Curtis v. Wilcox, 74 Mich. 69.

¶ 30. Where an appeal has been taken to the circuit court from an order of the circuit judge made on the hearing of an application to dissolve an attachment, the judge who made the order is not disqualified from passing upon the motion to dismiss the appeal.—Harvey v. Pealer, 63 Mich. 572.

¶ 31. A circuit court judge who had allowed a fraudulent claim by a coroner for an inquest upon the dead body of an alleged stranger, is not disqualified from acting in contempt proceedings against the coroner based on the presentation of the claim.—In re Toepel, 139 Mich. 85.

¶ 32. The interest of a trial judge in a prosecution of some particular offender does not disqualify him from ordering a grand jury for the purpose of inquiring into offenses generally.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 476.

¶ 33. Continuances to show cause why an action should not be dismissed, under § 2, chap. XVIII of the Judicature Act, Comp. L. 1915, § 12574, for want of prosecution, granted by a judge who before ascending the bench was plaintiff's attorney, are void.—Sayre v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 199 Mich. 414.

§ 11. Relationship.

Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. IV, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 12254.

¶ 34. How. St. § 7245, disqualifies a circuit judge, who is by marriage a nephew of one of three complainants and a cousin of the other two, from sitting in the cause or signing a decree therein, and a decree so signed is void.—Horton v. Howard, 79 Mich. 642.

¶ 35. A widow who is beneficially interested in the estate of her husband as a preferred and as a residuary legatee, is not a mere nominal party, but is such a party as would render the rule of disqualification of judges applicable where she is related to the trial judge.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 149 Mich. 601.

¶ 36. A judge is disqualified to act in a case where one of the parties is a second cousin to his wife, being related to such party by affinity.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 149 Mich. 601.

¶ 37. The fact that two men, unrelated, marry wives who are second cousins does not establish between them a relation by affinity within the rule that affinity is the relation existing in consequence of marriage between each of the married persons and the blood relatives of the other, the degrees of affinity being computed in the same way as those of consanguinity or kindred.—Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 149 Mich. 601.

¶ 38. A judge who is related to a stockholder in defendant corporation is disqualified from sitting in the case, although the relative holds the stock only as administratrix of her husband's estate, especially where it appears that she will receive one-half of her husband's personal property when the estate is settled.—Davis Colliery Co. v. Charlevoix Sugar Co., 155 Mich. 228.

¶ 39. A judge is not disqualified under the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, chap. IV, § 7, providing that no judge shall sit as a court in any case in which he is related within the third degree of consanguinity to either of the attorneys of either party to the cause, from sitting in a case to pass upon the question of the advisability of granting an order compelling a state's attorney to file with the circuit court clerk papers and documents belonging to the city treasurer's office which the state's attorney had obtained for purposes of a criminal prosecution from auditors examining the books of the city treasurer, by reason of his son and nephew being attorneys of record for the deputy city treasurer in one other case in which he was being prosecuted alone and in another case in which he was being prosecuted jointly with the city treasurer.—Barnard v. Grand Rapids Superior Judge, 191 Mich. 567.

¶ 40. The relationship of one of the justices of the supreme court to an attorney in the case is not a ground for rehearing.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

§ 12. Objections, waiver and cure of disqualification.

Pleas in abatement to indictment for disqualification of judge, see Indictment § 109.
Matter affecting member of supreme court as ground for rehearing, see Appeal § 543.
Waiver of objections to disqualification by going to trial, see Indictment ¶ 590.
Assignment of error that judge was disqualified, see Appeal § 202.

¶ 41. A circuit judge who is a brother-in-law of the plaintiff's counsel is not disqualified from hearing the cause under Comp. L. 1897, § 1109, where an agreement whereby the plaintiff's counsel is to receive a contingent fee and expenses is abrogated upon objection raised and is also originally void as against public policy.—Knickerbocker v. Worthing, 138 Mich. 224.

IV. SPECIAL, ASSISTANT AND SUBSTITUTE JUDGES.

Designation and assumption of office, see post § 14.
Objections to substitute or assistant, see post § 15.
Disability to call in substitute and appear as counsel before him, see ante ¶ 21.
Substitute or special commissioners, see Courts § 4.
Validity of statute empowering circuit judge to sit in recorder's court, see Constitutional Law § 60.
Power of legislature to provide for additional judges, or judges of new courts, see Constitutional Law § 51 et seq.

¶ 42. Article VI, section 11 of the State Constitution provides that "judges of the circuit court may hold court for each other, and shall do so when required by law"; therefore a judge who is disqualified from hearing a case may lawfully secure a judge of some other circuit to sit in his place.—Campbell v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 326.

§ 14. Designation and assumption of office.

Validity of law for designation of assistant judge by governor, see Constitutional Law § 60.

¶ 43. A simple request by the recorder is all that is necessary to give a judge of the Wayne circuit court authority to act as judge of the recorder's court of the city of Detroit under the statute, and in the absence of a contrary showing the right of a judge so assuming to act will be presumed.—People v. Gallagher, 75 Mich. 512.

¶ 44. No acceptance is necessary where the judge of one circuit is designated by the governor to fill a vacancy in another.—Howerter v. Kelly, 23 Mich. 337.

§ 15. Objections to substitute or assistant.

¶ 45. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it must be presumed that the necessary facts authorizing a circuit judge to act, under the statute, as probate judge existed; and where objection was made, and the judge acted thereupon by ignoring it, such decision that he had power to act cannot be attacked collaterally.—Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

TREATS of decision and disposal of actions and suits by courts of record, including decrees in chancery in so far as they are subject to principles general to all judgments. It excludes judgments and decrees of probate courts (see Probate Courts, III; Estates of Decedents; Guardianship; Wills, V), municipal courts except as to matters of general law (see Municipal Courts, III), and judgments of justices of the peace (see Justices of the Peace, IV, F). It also excludes matters peculiar to judgments in special and summary statutory proceedings (see Eminent Domain, V, E; Highways, II, B; Forcible Entry; and like topics). Foreign judgments are treated in Foreign Judgments. As to other and further matters excluded see cross-references throughout the body of the topic.

Provisions as to summary judgments, Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, §§ 9-15; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12581-12587.

¶ 1. A judgment is the final consideration and determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon the matters submitted to it.—Whitwell v. Emory, 3 Mich. 84.

¶ 1a. A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

§ 2. Interlocutory judgments.

On overruling demurrer, see post ¶ 9.

¶ 2. The only object of an interlocutory judgment is to direct the ascertainment of damages for the purposes of a final judgment; and its form is immaterial if the method of assessment is correct.—Wilcox v. Sweet, 24 Mich. 355.

§ 3. By default or pro confesso.

Amendment nunc pro tunc to correct error in entering judgment as if taken on default, see post ¶ 144.
Amendment nunc pro tunc of default order in action on judgment, see post ¶ 145.
Grounds for vacating judgment, see post § 51 et seq.

General law as to defaults, see Defaults.
Sufficiency of default proceedings to admit of judgment, see Defaults.
Grounds for opening defaults, see Defaults §§ 28-31.
Nature of order taking bill as confessed, see Defaults ¶ 46.

¶ 3. A judgment by default in the technical sense cannot be said to be entered, where an issue of fact was joined, and the case was set and regularly called; since in that situation it is incumbent on plaintiff to make proof of his case.—Leahy v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 304.

¶ 4. A decree of the court of chancery reciting a hearing on bill, answer and stipulations and arguments of counsel for complainants "no person appearing to argue" for defendants was held not to show such a default by defendant at the hearing as would deprive him of the right of appeal. As to the limitations, if any, on that right, where default was made below, see Stevens v. Townsend, 1 D. 77.

¶ 5. While an order pro confesso permits taking of a decree without proofs it is only such decree as the court thinks just and only in conformity with the material allegations.—Messenger v. Peter, 129 Mich. 93.

§ 4. On demurrer.

General law as to demurrers, see Pleading, IV.

¶ 6. On overruling a demurrer, judgment goes for plaintiff, unless defendant is given leave to plead; such leave may be conditioned as the case requires.—Tefft v. McNoah, 9 Mich. 201.

¶ 7. A court cannot render final judgment on the whole record upon demurrer to certain counts in the declaration while an issue of fact is pending on other counts.—Bosman v. Akeley, 39 Mich. 710.

¶ 8. Judgment on demurrer goes against the pleader committing the first error in substance, not in form merely.—Wales v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 276; People ex rel. Speed v. Hartwell, 12 Mich. 508; People ex rel. Benoit v. Miller, 16 Mich. 56.

¶ 9. On overruling a demurrer a court can do no more than award an interlocutory judgment.—Mason v. Reynolds, 33 Mich. 60.

§ 5. Nonsuit or dismissal.

General law as to nonsuit and dismissal, see Discontinuance.
Judgment upon joint obligations after discontinuance or dismissal as to some defendants, see post § 21.
Amendment of judgment of dismissal, see post § 58.
Provisions prohibiting judgment of nonsuit after verdict, see Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12791.

¶ 10. Judgment as in case of nonsuit is rendered against a plaintiff who fails to appear on trial before a referee.—Abbott v. Mathews, 26 Mich. 176.

¶ 11. The county judge, in his return to a certiorari, set forth that he rendered judgment of "no cause of action, nonsuit, I think"; but as the judgment was rendered upon proofs and a submission on the merits, it was held to be in law a judgment for defendant, and not a nonsuit.—Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 Mich. 77.

§ 6. On confession.

Modification of consent judgment, see post § 43.
Collateral attack of judgments on confession, see post § 113.

Confession of judgment without action, see Confession of Judgment.
Provisions as to judgments upon confession, Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 12793.

¶ 12. Powers of attorney to confess judgment are to be construed strictly against the holders of such instruments.—In re Raymor's Estate, 165 Mich. 259; Raymor v. Michigan Trust Co., Id.

§ 7. Upon stipulation or stipulated facts.

Judgments on confession, see ante § 6.
Power to modify consent judgments, see post § 43.
General law as to stipulations, see Stipulations.

¶ 13. Judgment for plaintiff cannot be rendered upon a stipulation of facts that does not unequivocally show a liability.—Gillett v. Detroit Board of Trade, 46 Mich. 309.

¶ 14. Pursuant to a statement in the record made by one counsel that the testimony in the case on trial and the one following was identical and that it could be agreed that the testimony in the one would be the testimony in the other, followed by a statement by the court that the judgment would be the same in both cases, and a statement by the other counsel that the bonds filed covered both cases; the same judgment was entered in both cases.—Brown v. Smedley, 136 Mich. 70.

§ 8. Certification or allowance of claim or fee bill as judgment.

Nature of judgment, see ante § 1.

¶ 15. The allowance of a bill of inquest by a circuit judge does not amount to a judgment.—Edwards v. Auditor General, 161 Mich. 639.

¶ 16. The action of the circuit judge in auditing and certifying a coroner's bill for expenses of an inquest to the end that it may be presented for allowance is not a judgment conclusive of the facts so certified, and it does not conclude the auditor general in the exercise of his ministerial function of determining whether the claim shall be allowed.—People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531.

II. REQUISITES, AND TERMS OR SUBSTANCE GENERALLY.

Requisites of decrees, and propriety and sufficiency of the relief, see Equity §§ 204-222.
Finality essential to review, see Appeal, III; Certiorari § 22.
Form and terms of appellate judgment in general, see Appeal, XIII.
Form of appellate judgment on abatement or for want of jurisdiction, see Appeal § 492.
Requisites of judgment to operate as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication, II.

Grounds for vacating judgment on motion, see post § 51.
Grounds for equitable relief from judgment, see post § 75.
Grounds for collateral attack of judgment, see post § 93.
Precedents as rules for decision, see Courts, IV.

¶ 17. A judgment for possession and also for a money debt following a declaration in which it was sought to combine in one count a declaration in replevin with one in assumpsit for the balance due on a promissory note is void for such a declaration confers no jurisdiction to render the judgment.—E. S. Knowles & Son v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260.

§ 10. Jurisdiction requisite to personal judgment.

Necessity that record show jurisdictional facts, see post § 40.
Vacating judgment for want of notice or process, see post § 52.
Want of jurisdiction as ground for equitable relief from judgment, see post § 76.
Collateral attack for want of jurisdiction, see post § 94.
Personal judgment or judgment in rem in log lien proceedings, see Forestry § 27.
Effect of foreign judgment on partnership note on service of only one partner, see Foreign Judgments § 10.

¶ 18. Where a nonresident has not appeared, a decree for the payment of a sum of money by him is void. And where another defendant in the case appealed, and the decree against him was reversed, the void decree against the nonresident defendant was also set aside.—Outhwite v. Porter, 13 Mich. 533.

¶ 19. A personal decree against one who has never been served with process nor appeared in the case is a mere nullity and cannot be made the basis of any equitable remedy.—Tyler v. Peatt, 30 Mich. 63.

¶ 20. A personal decree cannot lawfully be rendered against a defendant who has been brought in by publication but has not been served with process or appeared in the case.—Innes v. Stewart, 36 Mich. 285.

¶ 21. A personal decree cannot be made in one jurisdiction against parties living in another and not personally served or not voluntarily appearing.—Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 299.

¶ 22. A judgment for a joint conversion cannot include a defendant who was not served with process and who did not appear. —McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129.

¶ 23. In the case of substituted service a judgment is void if the statutory requirements are not followed.—Peninsular Sav. Bank v. Ward, 118 Mich. 87.

¶ 24. A judgment in a suit against an insurance company by declaration and rule under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10444, 10445, is void on its face for want of jurisdiction where no rule to plead was filed with the declaration, and where the declaration fails to show that the plaintiff was a resident of the county in which the suit was brought and that the defendant is a corporation subject to the provisions of such statute.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 145 Mich. 683.

§ 11. Names and designation of parties.

Judgments as to joint parties and rights, see post II, C.

Amending judgment as to parties, see post § 57.

Error in names as affecting right to enforce the judgment, see post ¶¶ 436, 437.

Sufficiency of showing in record as to party dying without service or appearance, see also Equity ¶ 809.

Rules of court as to names of parties in judgments, see 1916 C. C. Rule 8.

¶ 25. Where the correct name of a defendant is given in the summons, and in the judgment rendered on default, after personal service, the judgment cannot be reversed, impaired or in any way affected by reason of defendant's name having been incorrectly stated in the declaration; How. St. § 7635.—Bole v. Sands & Maxwell Lumber Co., 77 Mich. 239.

¶ 26. A man sued by actual service of process, under a name by which he is called and known, may be held upon a judgment under that name.—Field v. Plummer, 75 Mich. 437.

¶ 27. A judgment entry is not invalid because it designates the defendants only by reference to the title of the cause whereby they may be identified.—First Nat. Bank v. Garland, 109 Mich. 515.

¶ 28. The practice of the courts of this state authorizing the files and journal entries to be used in place of a record does not dispense with any of the essential requisites and evidences of a judgment. An order for final judgment must not only ascertain the determination of the court upon the matters submitted, but the parties in favor of and against whom it operates.—Whitwell v. Emory, 3 Mich. 84.

§ 12. Judgment against sureties and secondary parties.

Entering judgment on error or appeal against sureties on appellant's bond, see Appeal § 573.

Entering judgment for costs against sureties for costs, see Security for Costs, III.

¶ 29. The power to render judgments against sureties on bonds in legal proceedings, without a separate action, is statutory, and cannot be extended by implication to cases outside the statutes.—Willard v. Fralick, 31 Mich. 431.

B. RESPONSIVENESS AND CONFORMITY.

§ 13. To pleadings and issues.

Conformity of decree pro confesso, see ante ¶ 5.

Judgment on demurrer where part of issues undetermined, see ante § 4.

Judgment non obstante where plaintiff's pleadings insufficient, see post § 27.

Conformity of decrees to bills, see Equity § 208.

¶ 30. Where the judgment entered upon special findings of fact was one appropriate to assumpsit, not, as it should have been, to trespass, the imperfection being cured by the statute of amendments is not available on appeal; and, moreover, a proper judgment could be entered in the supreme court on the findings.—Ferton v. Feller, 33 Mich. 199.

¶ 31. A recital in an order has no force as an adjudication if it relates to a matter not alleged in the pleadings and not put in issue. —Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448.

¶ 31a. The question of the boundary line between two cities will not be determined where it is not necessarily raised upon the record, and where neither city is impleaded in the proceeding.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Hatch, 60 Mich. 229.

§ 14. In respect to amount or items of recovery.

Amendment nunc pro tunc of judgment in excess of damages claimed, see post ¶ 143.

¶ 32. A judgment in excess of the damages claimed in the declaration is erroneous.—Kenyon v. Woodward, 16 Mich. 326.

¶ 33. A party on a note has always a right to suppose that judgment will not be taken upon it for a larger sum than appears upon its face to be due, and he is under no obligation to watch the proceedings to see that a judgment in excess is not taken.—Mitchell v. Shuert, 16 Mich. 444.

§ 15. To evidence and proof.

Necessity of proofs to support default judgment or pro confesso decree, see ante § 3.
Judgments of nonsuit or dismissal, see ante § 5.
Sufficiency of stipulated facts to support judgment, see ante § 7.
Conformity in assumpsit to the contract as proved, see Assumpsit ¶ 244.
Conformity of decree pro confesso to bill as confessed, see also Defaults § 24.

¶ 34. Where no basis is shown for a judgment for plaintiff, if there has been no mistrial defendant must have judgment; and it is immaterial whether the reason assigned for it is correct or not.—Seeley v. Albrecht, 41 Mich. 525.

§ 16. To verdict and findings.

Incorporating findings and conclusions in judgment, see post § 31.
Entry of judgment on findings filed in vacation, see post § 37.

Set-off of joint and several judgments against each other, see post ¶ 431.
Several judgment on retrial after joint judgment appealed, see Appeal § 562.

¶ 36. A judgment against several defendants may only be had where all of them are jointly liable upon the cause of action.—Anderson v. Fruitvale Transp. Co., 195 Mich. 734.

¶ 37. Under Circuit Court Rule No. 27, when an action is brought against several persons the plaintiff may proceed against the several defendants and obtain a joint judgment against all, or a judgment against one or more of them, in accordance with the facts as the jury may find them.—Rimmele v. Huebner, 190 Mich. 247.

¶ 38. Where a plaintiff sues several defendants he cannot be required under Circuit Court Rule No. 27 to elect at the beginning of the trial, or during its progress, whether he will ask for a joint judgment or for a several judgment.—Rimmele v. Huebner, 190 Mich. 247.

¶ 39. Where a wife approves and ratifies an agreement, which is part of a joint transaction for the purchase of real estate in which both are interested, and which is the basis of a suit by both, a joint judgment is proper.—Cutler v. Spens, 191 Mich. 603.

¶ 40. In an action upon a joint obligation, plaintiff cannot have judgment against less than all the defendants.—Ballou v. Hill, 23 Mich. 60; Anderson v. White, 39 Mich. 130; City of Detroit v. Houghton, 42 Mich. 459; Munn v. Haynes, 46 Mich. 140; Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85; Seligman v. Gray, 66 Mich. 341.

¶ 42. On a joint debt there can be no suit or recovery against part of the obligors except where one debtor has been legally discharged, or where, in fact, there was never any joint obligation.—Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

¶ 43. Where two defendants against whom there had been a joint award were sued thereon, a judgment against one was held erroneous.—Ballou v. Hill, 23 Mich. 60.

¶ 44. Where one of three joint debtors was proceeded against by garnishee process, and a judgment recovered, it was held that the judgment was void, and no bar to a subsequent suit against all three on the joint demand.—Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555.

¶ 45. Suit cannot be brought against an individual party to a joint contract, and judgment taken upon it, without giving defendant an opportunity to plead nonjoinder in abatement.—Munn v. Haynes, 46 Mich. 140.

¶ 46. In an action brought upon a joint obligation of husband and wife, a judgment against the husband alone is erroneous unless it is affirmatively shown that the obligation was one she could not legally make.—Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

¶ 47. Where a joint judgment is recovered on a joint demand and one defendant dies, pending appeal, judgment cannot be taken against the other in the circuit court.—Anderson v. Robinson, 38 Mich. 407.

¶ 48. A separate verdict against one of several joint parties will not authorize a judgment against all where there has been no assessment against the rest.—People ex rel. Ellison v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 222.

¶ 49. Where in an action against several defendants one of them has not pleaded to the action, and no default against such defendant has been taken, and, under the proofs, the judgment must be joint, no judgment at all can properly be rendered.—Rimmele v. Huebner, 190 Mich. 247.

¶ 50. A judgment under the Civil Damage Act cannot be in one sum against the bondsmen, to wit, the amount of the bond, and against the saloonkeeper for a larger sum, all of them being joint defendants and the action being one sounding in tort.—Merrinane v. Miller, 157 Mich. 279.

§ 19. ——Nonjoinder of some joint parties.

¶ 51. Where one of two persons who have jointly entered into an undertaking is sued alone, he may, in the absence of a plea in abatement, be proceeded against to judgment and execution.—Purvis v. Butler, 87 Mich. 248.

§ 20. ——Want of service on part of defendants.

¶ 52. The Joint Debtor Act authorizing judgment, etc., in form against joint debtors though only one has been served with process, held valid.—Brooks v. McIntyre, 4 Mich. 316.

¶ 53. The proceedings for joint judgments when part only of joint debtors are served are special and statutory, and cannot be extended.—Hamilton v. Rogers, 67 Mich. 135.

¶ 54. An action on a joint claim cannot be put in judgment where service has been had on one defendant only, without a strict compliance with the rules of law on the subject.—Landsberg v. Bullock, 79 Mich. 278.

¶ 55. Joint judgment cannot be entered against several defendants when service of process against a portion of them has neither been made nor attempted.—Proctor v. Lewis, 50 Mich. 329.

¶ 56. Plaintiff in an action against joint defendants is allowed to proceed on service against only one defendant. But process must issue against all, and the intentional omission to serve either defendant, if seasonably found within the jurisdiction, would be an abuse of the writ. And the judgment, though joint in form, preserves all rights which defendants would have at common law.—Ralston v. Chapin, 49 Mich. 274.

¶ 57. Joint judgment may be entered on a joint obligation against parties, one of whom is outside of the jurisdiction and cannot therefore be lawfully served.—Gunzberg v. Miller, 39 Mich. 80.

¶ 58. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 840, when alleged partners are sued before a justice and all are not served with process, a judgment against all is not void for want of service.—Hirsh v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 95.

§ 21. ——Discontinuance, dismissal or personal defense as to some defendants.

Effect of discontinuance generally, see Discontinuance § 6.

¶ 59. In an action of assumpsit against joint defendants on a joint agreement, plaintiff cannot discontinue as to a part of the defendants, and recover against the remaining one alone.—Strohschein v. Kranich, 157 Mich. 335.

¶ 60. Where an exception is admitted in consequence of some defense that is purely personal, like infancy, good practice requires that, as a preliminary to judgment against the others, there should be a discontinuance as to the exempt party and an amendment of the record. In a particular case a severance on the record before judgment, and the entry of separate judgments, were held to have accomplished substantial justice without circuity, and such action was sustained.—Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123.

¶ 61. Comp. L. 1871, § 7162, How. St. § 8727, which in an action on a joint contract, allows judgment to be given against such defendants as remain liable while others are released by the statute of limitations, does not allow a separate judgment in a case where the party against whom the statute would otherwise have run was never legally bound; as where it appears that such party entered into the contract as a surety for her husband.—Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123.

§ 22. Judgments upon joint and several obligations or demands.

¶ 62. Comp. L. 1871, § 6146, How. St., § 7730, concerning joint debtors, applies to all joint undertakings or liabilities, and covers obligations that are joint and several as well as those that are joint.—Goebel v. Stevenson, 35 Mich. 172.

¶ 62a. A party cannot, upon a joint and several demand, take a joint judgment against less than all the debtors; the demand must be treated as joint as to all, or several as to all.—Winslow v. Herrick, 9 Mich. 380.

D. AMOUNT, TERMS AND CERTAINTY; NECESSITY OF VERDICT OR FINDINGS.

§ 23. Verdict, findings or conclusions to support.

Incorporating findings and conclusions in judgment, see post § 31.

Opening or vacating for absence of findings, see post § 55.

Collateral attack of judgment filed before filing of findings, see post ¶ 356.

General law as to verdicts and findings, see Verdicts.

Sufficiency of findings on which to base final judgment on appeal or error, see Appeal §§ 505-507.

Assessment of damages by clerk as basis for judgment, see Defaults § 22.

Judgment or decree on findings of referee, see Reference.

¶ 63. There must be either a general or special verdict in a jury trial to support a judgment, or the pleadings must authorize its entry.—Plunkett v. Detroit Elec. Ry. Co., 140 Mich. 299.

¶ 64. There must be a verdict on which to base a judgment, and hence the form of a directed verdict entered without trial on granting a motion for new trial and setting aside a contrary verdict will not suffice.—Prowell v. Neuendorf, 141 Mich. 272.

¶ 65. When the cause is tried by the judge alone, and a finding of facts is seasonably demanded, there is nothing, until such finding is made, upon which to found a judgment.—Stansell v. Corning, 21 Mich. 242.

¶ 66. Judgment cannot be rendered on an alleged state of facts which has not been found, nor be given for damages if there is no finding of damages set forth in the record.—Wiley v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 83.

¶ 67. Under the provision of Comp. L. 1897, § 10260, for the giving of decisions in vacation or at next term, a judgment may be rendered upon findings "of law" made by a trial judge as well as upon "findings of fact," the last clause thereof increasing the time within which filing of conclusions of law should be made over that specified in the cases of trial of questions of fact.—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

¶ 68. A judgment cannot be based upon a judge's special finding which consists merely of an informal statement made up of facts, items of evidence, offers of proof, rulings on objections and an opinion on the result.—Steele v. Matteson, 50 Mich. 313.

¶ 69. A special finding that is immaterial in itself and is based on an erroneous instruction does not preclude the right to a judgment on other findings.—Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Hayt, 55 Mich. 347.

¶ 70. A finding of facts will not support a judgment for plaintiff if it does not contain all that is essential to the plaintiff's recovery.—Burdick v. Chamberlain, 38 Mich. 610; Peck v. City Nat. Bank of Grand Rapids, 51 Mich. 353.

§ 24. ——Conclusions of law and reasons therefor.

Effect of opinions and recitals as conclusion on parties, see Former Adjudication §§ 23, 24.

¶ 71. If the findings of fact support the judgment rendered, it is unimportant whether or not the conclusions of law, apart from the judgment, are correct.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 72. Where, upon a trial by the court without a jury, judgment has passed for defendant, and the facts found show the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment, the reasons stated by the court for its conclusions are immaterial.—Botsford v. Simmons, 32 Mich. 352.

§ 25. ——Statements and findings of referee.

General law as to reference, see Reference.

¶ 73. A judgment for plaintiff cannot be based upon a mere statement by a referee as to what sums he should allow.—Weirich v. Cook, 39 Mich. 134.

§ 26. ——To support judgment for costs.

General law as to costs, see Costs.

¶ 74. No final judgment as to costs can be given until the amount of damages is found. —Hemingway v. Peter, 25 Mich. 202.

§ 27. ——Judgment non obstante veredicto.

Statutory provision for judgment notwithstanding verdict, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14568, 14569.

¶ 75. A judgment non obstante veredicto is proper in case of a special verdict inconsistent with the general verdict.—Central Savings Bank v. O'Connor, 132 Mich. 578.

¶ 76. The defendant in an action for personal injuries was entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto, where the pleadings were not sufficient to support a judgment in his favor, and where it appeared on the record that the verdict could not be supported as a matter of law.—Plunkett v. Detroit Elec. Ry. Co., 140 Mich. 299.

¶ 77. The defendant in an action for personal injuries was not entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto, on the ground merely that, under the evidence, a verdict should have been directed in its favor, and in such case the proper practice is to move for a new trial, or review the case on writ of error and exceptions.—Plunkett v. Detroit Elec. Ry. Co., 140 Mich. 299.

¶ 78. A declaration for injuries inflicted by defendant's dogs contained two counts upon the common-law liability and one upon Comp. L. 1857, § 1645, How. St., § 2119, allowing double damages. Held, that a verdict for defendant upon the common-law counts was not inconsistent with one for plaintiff on the other, as the counts could not, as matter of law, be said to be for the same cause of action, and that the court did not err in refusing to give judgment for defendant on the whole record with costs on the issues found in his favor.—Swift v. Applebone, 23 Mich. 252.

¶ 78a. In an action by an elevator operator for damages for injuries received as a result of the falling of an automatic gate while the operator was closing the iron shutters in front of the gates for the day, such falling being due to some unknown cause, held that the court properly directed a judgment non obstante veredicto because of failure to prove negligence.—Guido v. Detroit Stove Works, 188 Mich. 359.

¶ 79. Neither the trial court nor the supreme court can render a judgment non obstante veredicto for the full amount claimed in a case where there had been a verdict rendered for less than the amount claimed and for less than the sum which the evidence clearly showed plaintiff was entitled to; the proper procedure being the granting of a new trial by the trial court, or reversal by this court on denial of such new trial.—County of Montmorency v. Putnam, 144 Mich. 185.

¶ 79a. Where a judgment has already been entered upon a verdict, a motion to enter judgment for plaintiff notwithstanding the verdict is unavailable.—Yerkes v. Antrim Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 443.

¶ 80. Where the performance of certain work sued for and its value are undisputed, and the controversy is whether defendant originally agreed to pay for the labor in order to have it go forward, or agreed orally to become security up to a certain lesser sum for third parties, at whose mill it was performed, plaintiff, if entitled to a verdict, should recover the full amount of his claim, since on defendant's version nothing could be recovered on an oral contract.—Mitchell v. Beck, 88 Mich. 342.

¶ 81. Under an agreement made in the probate court, the two children of the deceased agreed that his widow should have a certain sum of money, in the settlement of the estate. The plaintiff sued on the common counts only the defendant, one of the children, who in fact had received and used up only half the sum. Defendant did not plead the nonjoinder of the other child. Held, that in the absence of this plea, plaintiff might recover the whole sum from the defendant, though she had received only a portion of it.—Garvin v. Stone, 152 Mich. 594.

¶ 82. Where the jury in an action against two joint tort feasors renders a verdict for the plaintiff for a certain sum and improperly apportions such amount between the defendants a judgment which is rendered for the entire sum is erroneous.—Rathbone v. Detroit United Ry., 187 Mich. 586. (Bird, J., dissenting.)

¶ 83. Judgment in covenant on the covenant in a replevin bond may be for damages instead of for the penalty.—Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 D. 84.

§ 29. ——Recovery of interest.
Judgment in excess of verdict for certain sum "and interest," see ante ¶ 35.
General law of interest, see Interest.
Right to interest on judgments, see Interest §§ 11, 12.
Provisions as to interest on judgment or decree, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 12835.

¶ 84. A judgment for interest, where there are no data showing how much was due, amounts to a mistrial.—Bell v. Ardis, 38 Mich. 609.

¶ 85. An insignificant excess of interest allowed in a judgment will be overlooked.—Bowen v. Rutland School Dist. No. 9, 36 Mich. 149.

¶ 85a. A verdict having been returned for a certain sum "and interest," judgment entered for such sum and for an amount of interest largely exceeding what is allowed by How. St., §§ 1597, 1598, providing for interest upon verdicts from rendition thereof until entry of judgment, is erroneous where the record gave no data for fixing the time or rate of interest.—Wright v. Seeley, 96 Mich. 491.

¶ 85b. In case of affirmance of a justice's judgment on certiorari interest may be reckoned on the costs given below.—Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25.

¶ 86. A description of lands in a decree is sufficiently definite if they can be located from the data given.—Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109.

¶ 87. The judgment for purchase price of chattels need not recite that the recovery is for purchase money in order to defeat exemption.—Lillibridge v. Walsh, 97 Mich. 459.

¶ 88. Where, in entering judgment for plaintiff in an action for work and labor in which a lien on defendant's personal property only is claimed under How. St., § 4063, a lien on realty as well as on personalty is given, the recital in the judgment as to a lien on realty is to be treated as surplusage, and does not affect the validity of the judgment or the lien upon the personalty.—Conlin v. Lamont Iron Co., 116 Mich. 626.

§ 31. Incorporating findings and conclusions.
Necessity of findings to support judgment, see ante § 23.
Responsiveness of judgment to findings, see ante § 16.

¶ 89. The statute does not require a finding of facts and conclusions of law to be incorporated into the judgment on a trial by the court without a jury.—Lorman v. Benson, 9 Mich. 237.

¶ 90. After a trial without a jury and judgment for plaintiff in the ordinary form, defendant moved for a new trial, and the court set aside the order for judgment and immediately entered judgment again for the same amount, embodying therein a finding of the facts and law by the judge. Defendant brought error, contending that the court could not wholly set aside and vacate a judgment without granting a new trial. Held, that the action of the court amounted substantially to an amendment of the judgment, and was not erroneous. But the amendment was unnecessary, as the statute does not require the judge's finding to be embraced in the judgment.—Lorman v. Benson, 9 Mich. 237.

¶ 91. A cause having been removed to the supreme court by certiorari, an order made by the supreme court dismissing a case of the same title must be presumed to relate to the same case.—Howard v. Rockwell, 1 D. 315.

¶ 92. Pleas of abatement to the jurisdiction were filed by several defendants, one of whom was a railway company. Both were tried, but in giving judgment the court, while reciting only that the railway company had pleaded in abatement, ordered that the declaration of "said plaintiffs be quashed, and that the said defendants go thereof without day; and that said defendants do recover of and from the plaintiffs its costs and charges by it in its defence in this behalf expended." Held, that the word "defendants" in this judgment referred only to the railway company.—Barnes v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 54 Mich. 243.

¶ 93. A judgment does not exist until put in due form by the court.—Green v. McCutcheon, 40 Mich. 244.

¶ 94. A decree setting aside a deed is not void for want of jurisdiction, though the circuit judge, after the proof had been closed and the case submitted, filed an opinion stating that the testimony was conflicting and not very clear and that the decree would remain open and subject to further hearing as to matters to happen in the future, and later without any further hearing, rendered the decree since such delay amounted in effect to no more than taking the case under advisement.—Krebs v. Senig, 132 Mich. 346.

§ 34. Functions and powers of clerk.

Powers and duties of clerks generally, see Courts § 2.
Control of court over officers having files and record, see Courts § 5.

¶ 95. A judgment entered by the clerk of the circuit court upon a reference to him to assess plaintiff's damages, after the court has adjourned, and in the absence of the presiding judge and without his authority, is absolutely void.—Upham v. Caldwell, 100 Mich. 264.

§ 35. Entry or enrollment in general.

Condition and enrollment necessary to proceed to judicial sale, see also Judicial Sales ¶ 1.

¶ 96. To constitute an enrollment of the decree and proceedings in a cause, under How. St. §§ 6648-49, the papers must be attached together, with the register's certificate annexed under the seal of the court, and filed in his office.—Low v. Mills, 61 Mich. 35.

¶ 97. The enrollment of chancery proceedings is not invalidated by omitting bills of costs not theretofore taxed; such bills can be afterwards included among the enrolled papers.—Mickle v. Maxfield, 42 Mich. 304.

¶ 98. Decrees of the supreme court are made complete by entry on the journal, no separate signing or enrollment being needed. —Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490.

§ 36. Time for entry or enrollment.

Sufficiency when collaterally attacked of judgment filed before filing of findings, see post ¶ 356.
Rendition of judgment at subsequent term under form of amendment, see post ¶ 138.
Time for entry of divorce decrees, see Divorce § 98.
Entry of order discontinuing action, see Discontinuance § 5.
Enrollment of decree as prerequisite of execution, see Executions § 3.

¶ 99. The time of entering judgment after verdict is a matter of practice within the discretion of the court.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

¶ 100. The entry of a judgment fifteen days after verdict, though a stay of proceedings granted for the purpose of giving time to make a motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial has not yet expired, is not error; the judgment is only provisional, and does not deprive a party of the right to move for a new trial.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

¶ 101. "It has been customary for judges to hear in open court and take under advisement questions of fact and of law, and to file decisions in writing during vacation, or in term without oral announcement, with the clerks of their respective courts, and it has been a common practice for the clerks to enter judgment in the journal in accordance with such findings or determinations. * * * In some circuits the practice has prevailed of deferring the entry until a formal motion for judgment should be made and granted in open court, but that practice has generally given way to the custom, on the part of the clerks, of entering judgment immediately, or after a limited time within which a motion to set aside a verdict might be made."—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

§ 37. ——On findings filed in vacation.

¶ 102. Judgment on a special finding filed in vacation in a civil case must, under Comp. L. 1871, § 4966, be entered as of the last day of the preceding term or it will be irregular.—Steele v. Matteson, 50 Mich. 313.

§ 38. ——Entry nunc pro tunc.

Inserting omitted bills of costs, see ante ¶ 97.
Amendment of judgment nunc pro tunc, see post § 49.

Nunc pro tunc entry of discontinuance, see Discontinuance ¶ 17.
Nunc pro tunc entry of divorce decree, see Divorce § 99.
Sufficiency of nunc pro tunc judgment to be a termination of prosecution, see Malicious Prosecution ¶ 59.
Provisions as to enrollment nunc pro tunc, see Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 12811.

¶ 103. Where a defendant in a chancery proceeding has died after the submission of the case, the decree may be entered nunc pro tunc as of the day when the case was heard.—Gunderman v. Gunnison, 39 Mich. 313.

¶ 104. Decree cannot be entered in a divorce suit so as to relate back to a period before the death of a party.—Wilson v. Wilson, 73 Mich. 620.

¶ 105. A rule to plead in the principal cause may be entered nunc pro tunc as of the time of filing the declaration, under How. St., § 7635, in order to support a judgment against a garnishee, where a copy of the rule to plead served was indorsed on the copy of the declaration returned.—Coe v. Hinkley, 109 Mich. 608.

¶ 106. A judgment against a principal defendant was rendered and the clerk entered on his blotter or "short book" the following: "Judgment for plaintiff entered. Fee paid $2.00." By a mistake of the clerk the judgment was not entered on the docket. A suit was proceeding against the garnishee defendant when this mistake was discovered. Held, the court might then correct the record by entering a nunc pro tunc judgment. —Taber v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 652.

¶ 107. A judgment against a principal defendant was rendered, and the clerk entered on his blotter or "short book" the following: "Judgment for plaintiff entered. Fee paid $2.00." By a mistake of the clerk the judgment was not entered on the docket. A suit was proceeding against the garnishee defendant when this mistake was discovered. Held, the garnishee defendant could not object to a correction of the record by a nunc pro tunc judgment on the ground that he had no notice of the entry of such judgment. —Taber v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 652.

¶ 108. A clerk cannot render void the proceedings disbarring an attorney by omitting to enter the judgment of disbarment; and it is competent for the judge to cause a record to be made of his judgment nunc pro tunc, when its omission is discovered.—In re Shepard, 109 Mich. 631.

¶ 109. Entry of judgment nunc pro tunc will not cure an antecedent levy and sale as against persons who have bought the premises in good faith, and after the levy and sale were set aside, reasonably supposing the judicial proceedings to be abandoned. So held where judgment was not entered on a verdict for sixteen years and the premises were bought in eight.—Ninde v. Clark, 62 Mich. 124.

§ 39. Judgment roll or record.

¶ 110. The enrollment of the decree and proceedings constitute collectively the record in a chancery cause.—Thayer v. McGee, 20 Mich. 205.

¶ 111. No formal judgment record need be made up in the circuit court except when required by one of the parties.—Emery v. Whitwell, 6 Mich. 474.

¶ 112. A decree of a court of record, reciting that both parties were present, duly enrolled with the petition and presumably other papers, constitute the record which is sufficient.—Gage v. City of Saginaw, 128 Mich. 682.

¶ 113. Under our practice the files and journal entries of the circuit court are a substitute for the judgment record.—Norvell v. McHenry, 1 Mich. 227; Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56; Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 Mich. 372; Whitwell v. Emory, 3 Mich. 84; Emery v. Whitwell, 6 Mich. 474; Kenyon v. Baker, 16 Mich. 373; Hovey v. Smith, 22 Mich. 170.

¶ 114. In an auxiliary proceeding in garnishment the judgment against the principal debtor may be proved by the judgment entry merely.—Strong v. Hollon, 39 Mich. 411.

Necessary record showing to sustain jurisdiction over foreign corporation, see also Foreign Corporations ¶ 83.

¶ 115. In special proceedings in chancery to acquire jurisdiction over nonresidents without actual notice, no presumption can be indulged, and all the necessary facts to confer jurisdiction must appear upon the record. —Platt v. Stewart, 10 Mich. 260.

¶ 116. Where the clerk fails to record the impaneling of the jury and proceeding to trial, but enough appears to show that they took place, the omission is to be disregarded. —Kenyon v. Woodward, 16 Mich. 326.

¶ 117. A clerical misnomer in the style and name of a court, appearing in the record of its judicial proceedings, can only be amended or rendered harmless by construction when the evidence of mistake is clear and comes under circumstances such as to leave no doubt.—Richards v. Morton, 18 Mich. 255.

¶ 118. A judgment was taken against P. and F. on their joint covenant that P. should pay all costs and damages that should be awarded against him in a certain cause. The entry did not show that it was shown to the court, nor did the record show it to be certified by the clerk, which of the defendants was principal, and which surety or bail (R. S. 1838, p. 451, § 9). Held no ground for reversing the judgment.—Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 D. 84.

Provisions as to amendments of judgments, Jud. Act, chap. XVI, § 3, Comp. L. 1915, § 12480.

Disability of commissioner to vacate orders made by court or judge, see 1916 C. C. Rule 54, § 1.

¶ 120. The court of chancery has the power to direct the alteration or correction of a decree after it has been entered, either upon motion or petition, where there is evidently a mistake or clerical error.—Bates v. Garrison, H. 221.

¶ 121. Where the files and records in the case clearly show that the court intended to render a certain judgment, to which the party was entitled, but the entry actually made was defective, the court may amend the record to what it should have been at any time thereafter.—Emery v. Whitwell, 6 Mich. 474.

¶ 122. An entry of judgment in the journal of the court may properly be corrected by order of the judge if nobody has been misled by the error, and the party against whom the judgment was rendered knew what it actually was and took action accordingly.—Souvais v. Leavitt, 53 Mich. 577.

¶ 123. Where there has been no unnecessary delay, and where the rights of third persons will not be prejudiced, the circuit court has power to vacate, on motion, a judgment erroneously entered, and to enter the proper judgment.—Frederick v. Mecosta Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 529.

¶ 124. A court in chancery has inherent power to open its decrees to correct errors, and such power is also conferred by statute. —Cole v. Auditor General, 132 Mich. 262.

¶ 125. Redress as to a cause of action in relation to household articles which arose before the rendition of a decree in divorce proceedings and was therefore merged therein, or which arose simply from the performance of the decree, should be sought from the court which gave the decree.—Jackson v. Jackson, 135 Mich. 549.

¶ 126. The trial court only can grant relief from a decree because of changes subsequently arising which unbalances or destroys the equities on which the decree was based. —Slote v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 182 Mich. 260.

§ 43. ——Consent judgments or decrees.

Judgments on confession or upon stipulation, see ante §§ 6, 7.

¶ 127. Relator was the defendant in a suit in which the complainant asked to have him declared trustee of certain lands. An agreement to compromise the suit was reached, and a consent decree entered by which the complainant was to pay the defendant $6,000 for his interest in the land by a named date or give up all claim in the matter. The respondent circuit judge upon application of the complainant extended the time of payment sixty days to enable the complainant to procure the money. Held, the respondent had no power to so modify the consent decree.—Horning v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 413.

¶ 128. Where it appears that the judgment was entered by consent of the plaintiff and one of two defendants without costs, in the absence of and without the consent of the other party, it is within the discretion of the court to deny a motion to tax costs, but to set aside and vacate the judgment of nonsuit, sua sponte.—Alspaugh v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 126 Mich. 67.

§ 44. ——Judgments of courts of concurrent jurisdiction.

Concurrent and conflicting jurisdiction of courts, see Courts § 68.

¶ 129. The superior court of Grand Rapids has no jurisdiction to set aside or modify the decrees of the circuit court of Kent county, which is a court of concurrent jurisdiction.—Dodge v. Northrop, 85 Mich. 243.

§ 45. Discretion of court.

See also ante ¶ 128, post ¶ 154.

Grounds for opening or modifying, see post § 51 et seq.

Grounds for denying relief, see post § 60.

Review of discretion as to vacation, see Appeal § 415.

Power and discretion of court to open defaults, see Defaults § 32.

¶ 130. Each application to open a decree regularly obtained by default must depend upon its own circumstances and the sound discretion of the court.—Russell v. Waite, W. 31.

¶ 131. Refusal to open a judgment that an affidavit of nonexecution may be supplied is discretionary.—Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 40 Mich. 168.

¶ 132. The allowance of a motion to set aside a judgment against a garnishee is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court.—Nichol v. Nevers, 196 Mich. 203.

§ 46. After appeal or error or decision thereon.

Power of trial court to amend judgment after appeal and remand, see Appeal § 564.

Modification or correction on review, see Appeal, XIII, C.

Amendments of or relief from appellate judgments, see Appeal, XIII, F.

Reversal opening cause as to parties other than appellant, see Appeal § 558.

¶ 133. The clerk's entries may, even after error brought, be amended in affirmance of the judgment.—The Milwaukie v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

¶ 134. After a reversal of a joint judgment against husband and wife upon an appeal by the wife only, a motion cannot be entertained in the trial court to vacate the judgment as to the wife and affirm it as to the husband.—Hall v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 123 Mich. 555.

§ 47. Pending equitable proceedings for like relief.

Existence of other remedy as ground for refusing equitable relief from judgment, see post § 85.

Equitable proceedings to obtain relief from judgment, see post VI.

¶ 135. Where it is claimed that a judgment has been obtained by fraud the proper remedy, after a lapse of five or six years, is not a motion based on ex parte affidavits to set it aside, but resort should be had to an original suit, where a distinct issue may be made by pleadings, and tried upon oral examination of witnesses. An order setting aside judgment on such a motion after such a lapse of time, and while a suit in equity in which considerable progress had been made, and in which like relief was sought, was still pending, was held erroneous.—Jennison v. Haire, 29 Mich. 207.

¶ 136. A judgment against a principal defendant was rendered, but the clerk, by mistake, failed to enter it on the docket, and defendant executed a cognovit and took a stay. During the course of a suit against a garnishee on this judgment, the principal defendant filed a petition to vacate the judgment and set aside the cognovit. Proceedings were being taken in another court in equity, at that time, to determine the effect of said judgment, since it had been rendered after the said principal defendant had been adjudged a bankrupt and before his discharge. Held, the court on the petition had no right to vacate the judgment and cognovit while the same questions were pending in the equity court.—Taber v Wayne Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 652.

§ 48. At subsequent term.

Neglect of attorney as ground for vacating judgment at subsequent term, see post ¶ 157.

¶ 137. Even after the lapse of a term the court, in the exercise of its discretion, may set aside its judgment.—Loree v. Reeves, 2 Mich. 133; Hurlburt v. Reed, 5 Mich. 30.

¶ 138. Although under our statute courts may amend clerical errors at any time, yet, after the term, that which enters into the consideration of the court, and forms a part of the judgment, cannot be changed; nor can courts at a subsequent term, under the form of an amendment, render a judgment.—Whitwell v. Emory, 3 Mich. 84.

¶ 139. A judgment rendered by the late supreme court when but two of the judges were present who had heard the argument of the case is irregular, and will be vacated on motion, though more than a term has elapsed since its entry.—Jagger v. Coon, 5 Mich. 31.

¶ 140. The circuit court may set aside a judgment at a term subsequent to its rendition.—Van Renselaer v. Whiting, 12 Mich. 449; Campau v. Coates, 17 Mich. 235.

¶ 141. The right to an amendment of a judgment in replevin held to have been waived by delay for several terms and by proceeding on execution.—Gray v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 628.

¶ 142. It is within the power of the court, after the expiration of the term in which an order has been made, to modify such order, even though the motion upon which the modifying order is based was not made nor entered until after the opening of the next term; where, it appears that the motion papers were served upon the opposing counsel and the matter was before the court, during the term in which such order was made; and that the hearing upon the motion was continued by consent of the parties in open court to the next term of court, and that without such consent the party objecting would have been in default under the unmodified order.—Hews v. Hews, 145 Mich. 247.

§ 49. Amendments nunc pro tunc.

Entry of judgment nunc pro tunc, see ante § 38.

Power of judge's successor to supply omitted signature in decree or record, Jud. Act, chap. XXII, §§ 20, 21, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12809, 12810.

¶ 143. Error in rendering judgment in excess of the damages claimed in the declaration cannot be cured by amendment nunc pro tunc of the ad damnum clause.—Kenyon v. Woodward, 16 Mich. 326.

¶ 144. A mistake of the clerk in entering a judgment as if taken on default, where issue had been duly joined, and no defense was interposed, defendant consenting to judgment, may be corrected by an amendment nunc pro tunc, under How. St. §§ 7633, 7635.—Grand Rapids Sav. Bank v. Widdicomb, 114 Mich. 639.

¶ 145. Where a default was entered in an action upon a justice's judgment, without reference for an assessment of damages, and some months later judgment was entered as for an amount assessed upon the hearing for that purpose by the circuit judge, the court may, at a later date, after overruling a motion to vacate the judgment and default, amend the original default order nunc pro tunc so as to provide for an assessment of damages by the court.—Goebel Brewing Co. v. Medbury, 153 Mich. 49.

B. GROUNDS AND OBJECTIONS; LACHES OR WANT OF EQUITY.

§ 50. Right to relief and persons entitled.

Discretion of court as to granting relief, see ante § 45.

Right to relief at subsequent term, see ante § 48.

Considerations warranting denial of relief, see post § 60.

Procedure to obtain relief, see post § 62.

Effect of modifying or vacating, see post § 68.

Persons entitled to equitable relief from judgment, see post § 73.

¶ 146. A judgment in an attachment suit cannot be set aside for irregularity, on the motion of a person to whom the property attached had been conveyed by the defendant, after service of the attachment, but who is a stranger to the record.—People ex rel. Hyde v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

¶ 147. An attachment defendant, being in contempt and a fugitive, will not be heard on a bondsman's motion to set aside a judgment of forfeiture of the bond based on defective publication.—Peterson v. Swenningston, 178 Mich. 294.

¶ 148. Parties cannot claim under a decree of partition and at the same time seek to avoid or open it.—Walsh v. Varney, 38 Mich. 73.

§ 51. Grounds for opening or vacating.

Discretion of court as to opening judgment, see ante § 45.

Affidavits showing grounds for relief, see post § 64.

Presumption on appeal as to reason for vacating default decree, see Appeal § 392.
Vacation of judgment to enforce payment of costs imposed as condition, see Costs § 150.
Grounds for opening defaults, see Defaults §§ 28-31.

¶ 149. To open a decree regularly entered a stronger case must be made than to vacate an order pro confesso before decree.—Hart v. Lindsay, W. 72.

¶ 150. Purely technical irregularities not affecting the merits are not ground for setting aside a decree unless complained of at the first opportunity.—Johnson v. Johnson, W. 309; Long v. Long, 59 Mich. 296.

¶ 151. After judgment by default in attachment a petition praying for the default to be set aside and that the petitioner might be permitted to appear and defend is properly granted, where the petition expressly states that the petitioner has acquired title to the attached lands through a mortgage sale, that the owner is a foreign corporation and under present conditions cannot appear or defend a suit, and that there is a just and meritorious defense to the action.—Meads v. Belt Copper Mines, 125 Mich. 456.

¶ 152. A decree may be opened so as to permit the court to pass upon a demurrer inadvertently overlooked.—Antoszewski v. City Plumbing Co., 185 Mich. 215.

§ 52. ——Want of notice or process.
See also ante ¶ 147.
As ground for equitable relief, see post § 76.
As ground for collateral attack, see post § 94.

¶ 153. A judgment on issue joined, which is rendered without notice of trial or appearance at the trial, though not void is irregular, and should be set aside.—People ex rel. Barrett v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247.

¶ 154. In a suit against a nonresident the circuit court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, set aside the judgment and permit defendant to plead, where he has had no notice of the proceedings and has been guilty of no laches. And this though a term has elapsed.—Hurlburt v. Reed, 5 Mich. 30.

¶ 155. Omission to give notice of hearing to a defendant who has appeared is an irregularity which entitles him to have the decree set aside.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

§ 53. ——Fraud or collusion.
As ground for equitable relief from judgment, see post § 77.
As ground for collateral attack, see post § 97.
General law as to fraud, see Fraud.

¶ 156. A motion to vacate and set aside a decree, or for leave to file a bill for that purpose, on the ground of fraud practiced upon the court by complainant's solicitor, will be denied, where such decree was based upon the fact that a long form warranty deed on paper folding like legal cap, upon examination was found to have been severed at the line of folding, and the two sheets attached by paper and mucilage, and the edges of the half sheet were smooth and had no appearance of having been worn like the other folded edges, and the further fact that one of the halves was wider than the other, and the marginal red lines failed to correspond with each other; where the affidavits upon which such motion was based failed to show that complainant's solicitor practiced or attempted to practice a fraud upon the court with reference to the appearance or condition of such deed.—Crawford v. Hoeft, 58 Mich. 1.

§ 54. ——Neglect or default of attorney.
Duties and powers of attorneys, see Attorneys.

¶ 157. A client whose attorney has neglected his case and suffered judgment to pass against him, but who has himself been guilty of no laches, is not confined to his remedy against the attorney, but the court in the exercise of its discretion may set aside the judgment and allow him to defend though a term has elapsed.—Loree v. Reeves, 2 Mich. 133.

§ 55. ——Absence of findings.
Responsiveness and conformity of judgment to findings, see ante § 16.
Necessity for findings and conclusions, see ante § 23.

¶ 158. Where a written request is made seasonably for a finding of facts, and judgment is entered without such finding, it is not error to set aside the judgment and enter a new one after the finding is filed.—Hunt v. Patterson, 38 Mich. 95.

¶ 159. Where in a suit before a court without a jury plaintiff files a request before judgment for findings of law and fact, and defendant, believing the court will make findings, fails to prefer a like request, after the court has entered judgment without making such findings, defendant is not entitled to have the judgment vacated in order to protect his rights.—Silfver v. Daenzer, 167 Mich. 362.

¶ 160. Some injury must be shown before a judgment which is inadvertently entered before filing of findings of fact and law by trial court will be vacated.—Wisconsin Chair Co. v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 189 Mich. 548.

§ 56. Errors, mistakes and omissions warranting amendments.

¶ 161. Where by mistake a decree directed a sale of mortgaged premises in two years and three months, when complainant was entitled to take his decree for a sale in one year and three months from the filing of the bill, a correction was directed.—Bates v. Garrison, H. 221.

See also ante § 42.

Requisites and terms of judgments, see ante II.
Time when amendment takes effect, see post § 68.
Effect of amending judgment, see post § 69 et seq.
Amendment to incorporate direction for execution, see also Executions ¶ 8.

¶ 162. The court has power to amend the record to show a directed verdict for one of the alleged tort feasors after the jury has disagreed and been discharged on the question of the liability of the other, who was the active agent in the wrong.—Johnston v. Cornelius, 193 Mich. 115.

¶ 163. In ejectment for recovery of dower, a provision in the judgment for the recovery of rent is no ground for reversal, where it is conceded by plaintiff's counsel that such provision is surplusage, and the judgment may be opened in the supplemental proceedings, and an amendment in accordance with such concession may be made if deemed necessary. Killackey v. Killackey, 156 Mich. 127.

¶ 164. A decree cannot be amended by adding a reference to take proofs as to a matter to which nothing in the pleadings or decree is germane.—Jordan v. Jordan, 53 Mich. 550.

¶ 165. An ex parte order of the court allowing a receiver $200 per month instead of $125, may be modified on the final accounting by reducing it back to $125 where such final order is made while the receiver is still an officer of the court and the circuit judge stated in the order that he was not advised of the facts or he would not have made the extra allowance.—In re Angell, 131 Mich. 345.

§ 57. ——Amendments as to parties.

Names and designation of parties in judgment, see ante § 11.
Vacation of premature decree for want of parties, see also Equity ¶ 800.

¶ 166. A court of record, in which judgment has been rendered against two persons, may on motion amend the judgment record by striking out the name of one defendant who appears to have been sued as indorser of the note declared on, but who was not served.—Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

¶ 167. When John R. Wyllie and John Wyllie were by mistake named as plaintiffs, instead of John R. Wyllie and Hannah Wyllie, an amendment was properly allowed on the trial inserting the right name wherever necessary, and the judgment was admissible in evidence although the entry thereof showed the same mistake.—Barmon v. Clippert, 58 Mich. 377.

§ 58. ——Terms and conditions of dismissal.

Judgment of nonsuit or dismissal, see ante § 5.

¶ 168. Where leave had been granted complainant to dismiss his bill on payment of costs, and the order was entered generally without mentioning costs, on application of the defendant it was ordered to be amended so as to correspond with the terms on which leave was granted.—Jerome v. Seymour, W. 359.

¶ 169. Where a bill making out a strong case of fraud was dismissed as improperly framed for specific performance the decree below was so modified as to make such dismissal without prejudice.—Wilson v. Eggleston, 27 Mich. 257.

¶ 170. A decree which, on bill, answer and evidence, and in the absence of any cross bill, not only dismisses a bill to set aside a cloud on title, but affirmatively declares defendant's title, should be so modified, on affirmance, as to confine it to a mere dismissal.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

¶ 171. The circuit court, sitting in chancery may, after its oral decree, dismissing a bill without prejudice, has been drawn, signed and enrolled in form simply dismissing the bill, make an order to the effect that "without prejudice" be added.—Township of Hiawatha v. Schoolcraft Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 270.

§ 59. ——Amount or items of recovery.

Amendment of ad damnum clause nunc pro tunc, see ante ¶ 143.

¶ 172. Where in a summary proceeding for the possession of land under an executory contract the court directed the jury to find a verdict, but there was no amount found due, the complainant, it was proper for the court to amend the judgment by inserting the proper amount due as shown by the evidence.—Gould v. Young, 143 Mich. 572.

¶ 173. A foreclosure decree was upon rehearing modified so as to exclude a lot that was occupied as a homestead, the mortgage not having been signed by the mortgagor's wife.—Hammon v. Rathbone, 113 Mich. 501.

¶ 174. A record in an action of replevin, which shows the replevin of the property from the defendant, a verdict fixing the value of the property and no lien or special property in either party, is sufficient to entitle the defendant to an amendment of the verdict and judgment so as to allow the recovery of the property or its value.—Salter v. Sutherland, 125 Mich. 662.

§ 60. Grounds for denying relief.

Discretion of court in passing on application, see ante § 45.

Voluntary payment of judgment as waiver of objections to it, see post ¶ 424.

Right to relief and grounds, see ante § 50 et seq.

Denial of relief to party in contempt, see Contempt § 43.

¶ 175. Reopening of a foreclosure decree was denied where defendants had not complied with the conditions of a rehearing previously granted them which were that defendants answer within 10 days, pay the taxed costs, and deposit the amount reported due with the register, to abide the event of the suit.—Bope v. Ferris, 77 Mich. 299.

§ 61. ——Laches of applicant.

Laches in seeking equitable relief from judgment, see post § 74.

¶ 176. A motion to set aside a judgment for irregularity comes too late when made two years after its rendition, the delay being unexplained.—Hyde v. Judge, 1 Doug. 217.

¶ 177. A defendant wishing to have a judgment vacated should use due diligence in the matter and one who has failed to appear is entitled to no more indulgence than one who has.—Johnson v. Johnson, W. 309.

¶ 178. Dismissal of an appeal from the probate of a will is a final judgment which remands the proceedings to the probate court, and which cannot be set aside if not complained of within the two years allowed for removing proceedings to the supreme court on error or certiorari.—Ellair v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 496.

¶ 179. The nonenrollment of a decree will not help a defendant, applying to open and vacate it, who has been guilty of gross laches in objecting to an irregularity in entering an order pro confesso.—Long v. Long, 59 Mich. 296.

¶ 180. An application for leave to amend defective proceedings comes too late when not made until seventeen years have passed; and though the defect remained for a long time undetected, a delay of three years or more after its detection is not excused by the mere fact that the circuit judge had been of counsel and was incompetent to hear the application. The utmost promptness is required in moving to correct mistakes in the record.—Montgomery v. Merrill, 36 Mich. 97.

¶ 181. A formal judgment was prepared and approved by counsel on both sides, which did not provide for the recovery of costs. The judgment was entered and satisfaction thereof was filed. The judgment was not entered through any mistake, carelessness or fraud on the part of the clerk or on the part of the attorneys for plaintiff or defendant. Held, a motion made after the expiration of the term, to amend the judgment by a clause allowing costs, to set aside the satisfaction of judgment and to credit the amount paid upon the judgment as amended, was properly denied.—Ostrowski v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 170 Mich. 563.

Nature of motion to set aside judgment by default against garnishee, see Defaults ¶ 125.

Proceedings under statutes for opening of or relief from tax decrees, see Taxes, XI, XII.

¶ 182. A decree is not to be set aside on a mere motion, and if so set aside mandamus lies to vacate the action, but without prejudice to the right which any party may have had to proceed in a regular way.—York v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 57 Mich. 421.

§ 63. Notice of application.

¶ 183. Where the files and records in the case clearly show a certain judgment to which the party was entitled, but the entry actually made was defective, notice of the application to amend the record is not necessary because the effect of the record is not changed by it, and no one's rights are affected.—Emery v. Whitwell, 6 Mich. 474.

¶ 184. The amendment of a decree without notice is irregular; and though the amendment be one that could not injure the defendant, yet if the decree is in some particulars not warranted by the case made, the defendant can take advantage of the error.—Berry v. Innes, 35 Mich. 189.

¶ 185. The right to amend ought not to be confined any further than safety requires, and should be liberally recognized wherever the record itself furnishes the data for the amendment. But where it is based on an outside showing, all practicable precautions should be taken to see that no one is wronged, and the party adversely interested ought always to be notified, where possible, especially if the proceedings are ancient.—Montgomery v. Merrill, 36 Mich. 97.

¶ 186. A judgment cannot be materially changed, if at all, without giving notice to the party injured by such action.—Green v. McCutchen, 40 Mich. 244.

¶ 187. The fact that a decree quieting title was irregularly obtained does not justify the court in granting an order setting it aside without notice to a purchaser of the premises involved.—Vincent v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 90.

§ 64. Affidavits in support of application.

Grounds for vacating judgment, see ante § 51 et seq.

Grounds for modifying judgment, see ante § 56.

¶ 188. On motion to set aside a decree for irregularity the affidavits should show that the party is injured by the irregularity.—Mich. Ins. Co. v. Whittemore, 12 Mich. 427.

¶ 189. On a judgment against several defendants an affidavit merely reciting that an affidavit of one defendant's infancy had been filed in another court and cause does not conclude his codefendants and authorize the setting aside of the judgment so as to allow a discontinuance as to him, thus enlarging the liability of the codefendants.—Watson v. Hinchman, 41 Mich. 716.

§ 65. Conditions upon opening, vacating or amending.

¶ 190. Where a new trial is granted on conditions the judgment remains in force subject to the conditions, and is not absolutely vacated until they are performed.—People ex rel. Mabley v. Detroit Superior Judge, 41 Mich. 31.

¶ 191. On application for leave to move the circuit court to modify a judgment after appeal and affirmance, a condition may be imposed that applicant consent to the hearing of an application for a new trial as of the proper term, where there has been delay for which the adverse party was not responsible.—Salter v. Sutherland, 125 Mich. 662.

¶ 192. A stipulation between the parties that a judgment should be set aside without costs upon the reversal, on writ of error, of another judgment, upon certain specified conditions, has no binding force without compliance with the conditions, and the court should not act upon it.—People ex rel. Roche v. Branch Circuit Judge, 26 Mich. 370.

§ 66. Mode and manner of amendment.

Incorporation of findings as constituting an amendment, see ante ¶ 90.

¶ 193. A judgment in excess of the amount of the bond against a saloonkeeper and his bondsmen for illegal sale of liquor, being erroneous against the bondsmen, cannot be corrected by remitting it to the amount of the bond as against the bondsmen and letting it stand for the amount found as against the principal; for being a joint judgment it should have been reduced as to all of them to the amount of the bond.—Merrinane v. Miller, 157 Mich. 279.

§ 67. Necessity of actual amendment.

Treating amendment as made in order to set aside default nunc pro tunc, see also Equity ¶ 578.

¶ 194. No actual amendment need be made where the entry of the judgment is defective in not conforming to the judgment which the files and records show the court intended to render. The whole record shall be read, when brought up collaterally, precisely as if the amendments due as a matter of right had actually been made.—Emery v. Whitwell, 6 Mich. 474.

D. EFFECT OF OPENING, AMENDING OR VACATION.

§ 68. In general; time when effectual.

Mandamus to vacate order setting aside decree on mere motion, see ante ¶ 182.

Collateral attack of orders amending judgments, see post § 114.

Recovery of money paid on the judgment, see post § 133.

Effect of moving to vacate as enlarging time for error, see Appeal § 75.

Effect of order opening default, vacation of original decree, see also Divorce ¶ 362.

Modification of order opening default in divorce, see Divorce ¶ 365.

Amended decree as carrying direction for execution contained in original decree, see Executions ¶ 2.

Rights under pending executions on reversal or modification of judgment, see Executions, XIII.

Vacation of judgment in ejectment and grant of new trial as abating procedure to award rents and profits as an incident of the judgment, see Ejectment, VI.

Abatement of suggestion for damages in ejectment on setting aside of main judgment, see Ejectment ¶ 255.

Effect of vacating or setting aside on conclusiveness of the judgment, see Former Adjudication § 30.

¶ 195. The incorporation by amendment into a judgment of matter that is mere surplusage does not vitiate.—Lorman v. Benson, 9 Mich. 237.

¶ 196. A judgment, the entry of which was corrected by mandamus, was ordered to take effect from the date of the correction, so that full opportunity to ask for a review thereof might be saved.—Frederick v. Mecosta Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 529.

§ 69. Defenses available upon opening decree.

Opening defaults and admitting pleas or answers, see Defaults, VI.

¶ 197. A party let in on the opening of a decree to defend by answer is entitled, where no restrictions have been imposed, to make any defense which can be made under that pleading.—Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

§ 70. Effect of vacation as to one joint party.

Vacating default judgment as to one joint defendant as vacation entire, see Defaults § 39.

¶ 198. Where the court makes an order vacating a judgment as to one of two joint debtors, the effect is to vacate it as to both.—Van Renselaer v. Whiting, 12 Mich. 449.

¶ 199. Where a judgment against two is set aside as to one, but all concerned treat it as set aside as to both, it may be so considered and as neither relied upon such judgment as a bar to subsequent proceedings, error could not be assigned on the assumption that it remained in force against either.—McArthur v. Oliver, 53 Mich. 299.

§ 71. Effect on rights of purchasers.

Setting aside execution sales and effect thereof, see Executions §§ 102-104.

Effect of vacation on rights under execution sale, see Executions § 124.

¶ 200. A purchaser under a decree must ascertain at his peril whether the decree was warranted or not; and though the time for appealing from the decree had expired when he purchased, he cannot claim immunity, as a bona fide purchaser, from the effects of a subsequent order without notice to him, setting the decree aside as unwarrantably entered.—Ritson v. Dodge, 33 Mich. 463.

¶ 201. One who buys land relying upon a decree in his grantor's favor cannot claim immunity from the effect of a subsequent order vacating such decree.—Cook v. French, 96 Mich. 525.

VI. SUIT TO SET ASIDE, FOR INJUNCTION OR OTHER RELIEF.

A. IN GENERAL; GROUNDS AND DEFENSES.

§ 72. In general; equitable considerations.

Setting aside judgment on motion pending equitable proceedings for like relief, see ante § 47.

Modifying and vacating judgments on motion, see ante § 42 et seq.

Grounds for equitable relief, see post § 75 et seq.

Existence of other remedy, see post § 85.

Grounds for enjoining enforcement of judgment, see post § 86.

Pleading and procedure, see post § 87 et seq.

Collateral impeachment of judgments, see post § 90 et seq.

General considerations controlling equitable relief, see Equity.

Bills of review in equity, see Equity, XI.

Bills of supplement after decree, see also Equity §§ 237-239.

Matters precluded by the judgment, see Former Adjudication.

Decree as bar to suit to set it aside, see Former Adjudication ¶ 162.

Injunction against proceedings at law, see also Injunctions, II, B.

Jurisdiction of equity to set aside law judgment for tort suffered by infant, see Infants ¶ 140.

Proceedings under statutes for opening of or relief from tax decrees, see Taxes, XI, XII.

¶ 202. Generally, courts of equity will not assume jurisdiction to retry cases which have already been disposed of in the courts of law upon the very point made by the bill.—Miller v. Morse, 23 Mich. 365.

¶ 203. A bill in equity will not lie to retry matters already adjudicated in proceedings at law, in the absence of any showing that such proceedings were void or fraudulent, or that they could not have fully disposed of all the equities in the case made by the bill.—Spoon v. Baxter, 31 Mich. 279.

¶ 204. The exercise of jurisdiction in equity to vacate a judgment in law is proper but very rare and exercisable only in cases of injustice done.—Finn v. Adams, 138 Mich. 258.

¶ 205. A judgment obtained in a court of law should stand unless manifestly against conscience.—Cleveland Iron Mining Co. v. Husby, 72 Mich. 61.

¶ 206. Chancery will not interfere with a judgment at law until it is made to appear very clearly that injustice has been done.—Mueller v. Marsh, 116 Mich. 375.

¶ 207. Relief against a void partition decree in probate will not be denied to an infant because of any supposed tendency to invalidate other titles to real property.—Prince v. Clark, 81 Mich. 167.

¶ 208. The jurisdiction of courts of equity to stay proceedings at law after judgment though recognized in exceptional cases is very limited, and as a rule the remedy is not allowed against a sale of realty or of personal property, on execution where relief was available in a proceeding at law.—City Bank & Trust Co. v. Hurd, 179 Mich. 454.

¶ 209. A judgment at law was had in the Circuit Court of Saginaw County upon which execution was issued upon land located in Gladwin County. Defendant filed a bill in Gladwin County to restrain the execution of said judgment. Held, the Gladwin Circuit Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the process issued from the Saginaw Circuit Court.—Steele v. Bliss, 170 Mich. 175.

¶ 210. Relief in equity on a void transcript of judgment based on notes agreed to be canceled in consideration of a transfer of a patent right, will not be denied because of an agreement thereafter made between one of the judgment debtors and the judgment plaintiff for the reconveyance of a half-interest in the patent which agreement, if made, has not been performed; since it is an agreement distinct from that by which the notes were discharged.—Child v. Emerson, 99 Mich. 38.

§ 73. Persons entitled to seek relief.

Persons entitled to have judgment modified or vacated, see ante § 50.
Waiver of objections by payment of judgment, see post ¶ 424.

¶ 211. Infants cannot sue to set aside on the ground of collusion a divorce granted to one of their parents against the other.—Baugh v. Baugh, 37 Mich. 59.

§ 74. Diligence and laches.

Setting aside or modifying judgment upon motion at subsequent term, see ante § 48.
Laches in seeking to vacate or amend judgment on motion, see ante § 61.
Laches as ground for refusing leave to file bill, see post § 87.
Necessity that bill show diligence on part of petitioner, see post § 88.
General law as to laches, see Equity, IV.
Want of notice or knowledge as excuse for delay in suing to annul or have relief, see Equity § 55.
Laches as bar to relief from appellate decree, see Appeal § 535.

¶ 212. Where a decree establishing a title to real estate is sought to be impeached for fraud and collusion, the bill must be brought within a reasonable time, having reference to the nature and all the circumstances of the particular case.—Campau v. Van Dyke, 15 Mich. 371.

¶ 213. A party to a judgment or decree cannot, after any considerable delay, impeach its validity without showing a proper cause or reasonable justification for the delay, but a bill seeking relief must be brought within a reasonable time, considerng the nature and all the circumstances of the particular case. Such party should act promptly where a city is growing up on land he claims, built by those who are relying in good faith on an adverse title acquired with his apparent consent.—McVickar v. Filer, 31 Mich. 304.

¶ 214. An unexcused delay of nine years and until complainant's death in attacking a decree of divorce is fatal to a proceeding to set it aside for the purpose of obtaining an interest in decedent's estate.—Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511.

¶ 215. When defendants claimed that a case was not called for hearing at the term for which it was noticed, but that a decree was nevertheless entered against them, and it appeared that they were served with notice of an application to amend the decree at a subsequent term, but did not appear, held, that if they intended to object to the decree as irregularly entered they were chargeable with laches in not moving when the applicatin to amend was made.—Lyon v. Brunson, 48 Mich. 194.

§ 75. Grounds for relief in general.

Invalidity of judgment entered by clerk without authority, see ante ¶ 95.
For opening or vacating, see ante § 51.
Equitable considerations controlling relief, see ante § 72.
Want of jurisdiction, see post § 76.
Fraud, collusion, mistake or accident, see post § 77.
Failure or inability to interpose defense, see post § 80.
Grounds for collateral attack, see post § 93.

¶ 216. Equity will not set aside a law judgment against a copartnership by reason of the insanity of one of the partners, where it does not appear that injustice has been done.—Johnson v. Cook, 179 Mich. 117.

¶ 217. Equity will not relieve against the enforcement of a justice's judgment from which no appeal was taken unless defendant, without his own or his agent's negligence, has been hindered by fraud or accident from availing himself of his defense.—Kelleher v. Boden, 55 Mich. 295.

¶ 218. Equity will not relieve a party against a judgment at law on the ground of its being contrary to justice, unless the defendant was ignorant of his defense pending the suit, or facts could not be received as a defense at law, or unless, without any neglect or default on his part, he was prevented by fraud or accident, or the act of the opposite party, from availing himself of his defense.—Gray v. Barton, 62 Mich. 186.

¶ 219. Equity will not relieve a party against a judgment at law on the ground of its being contrary to justice, unless the defendant was ignorant of his defense pending the suit, or facts could not be received as a defense at law, or unless, without any neglect or default on his part, he was prevented by fraud or accident, or the act of the opposite party, from availing himself of his defense.—Lafayette Benev. Society v. Richardson, 188 Mich. 57.

¶ 220. A court of equity will not assume jurisdiction to set aside a judgment of a court of law of competent jurisdiction on the ground that it is contrary to equity, unless the defendant in the judgment was ignorant of the fact in question pending the suit, or it could not be received as a defense at law, or unless, without any neglect or default on his part, he was prevented by fraud or accident or the act of the opposite party from availing himself of the defense.—Valley City Desk Co. v. Travelers Ins. Co. of Hartford, 143 Mich. 468.

¶ 221. Equity will not set aside a judgment against a garnishee, rendered in the justice court and a sale on an execution issued out of the circuit court upon a transcript of the judgment where the garnishee was not denied opportunity to present his defense, and the proceedings before the justice were maintained by the creditor in good faith, the case having been adjourned several times by consent, and judgment having been rendered at the date the case was last continued to by consent in the absence of the garnishee.—Lafayette Benev. Society v. Richardson, 188 Mich. 57.

¶ 222. The fact that the plaintiff company suing to enjoin collection of a judgment on a fire policy was not allowed in the action at law to put in all of its proof, because of the condition of its pleadings, cannot be urged in support of the equitable remedy, where it does not appear that it asked leave to amend its pleadings so as to render such proof admissible.—Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 113 Mich. 426.

¶ 223. Where a default judgment had been entered against an insane person for whom a guardian had been appointed, upon the service of the summons on the defendant personally at an insane asylum, and no guardian ad litem had been appointed, and no notice of the action or judgment had been given his guardian or heirs until after his death, such judgment may be vacated in equity where it appears that the defendant had a complete defense in the statute of limitations.—Godde v. Marvin, 142 Mich. 518.

§ 76. Want of jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction requisite to personal judgment, see ante § 10.

As ground for collateral attack, see post § 94.

¶ 223a. Where through error on the part of the officer serving process the summons in a justice's court case was served upon a daughter of the same name instead of upon the true defendant, and she informed the defendant thereof immediately, and she consulted an attorney, who advised her to pay no attention thereto, but she was kept advised of the progress of the suit by the attorney, although she took no steps to guard her interests but knew that judgment had been rendered, no jurisdiction was obtained and the judgment was void, and as such could be vacated in chancery.—Wilcke v. Duross, 144 Mich. 243.

¶ 224. The charge in a bill to vacate a decree in a mortgage foreclosure of one of notice of the pendency of the foreclosure proceeding is disproved where there was personal service of a subpoena upon both the mortgage defendants and notice of appearance for them was filed by a solicitor who was thereafter recognized as such and copies of all papers and notice of all proceedings were served upon him and the case proceeded in the usual and regular manner.—Gaines v. Simons, 124 Mich. 477.

§ 77. Fraud, collusion, accident or mistake.

Vacating judgment on motion for fraud and collusion, see ante § 53.

Laches in seeking relief, see ante § 74.

Fraud preventing defense, see post § 81.

Pleading fraud or collusion, see post § 88.

Collateral attack for fraud or collusion, see post § 97.

General law as to fraud, see Fraud.

¶ 225. A bill will lie to set aside a judgment for having been obtained by fraud between the judgment debtor and defendant, even though it has already been made the foundation in another state of a suit in which defendant has attached the judgment debtor's property there. And complainant need not himself have obtained a judgment against the debtor as a foundation for the suit to set the judgment aside.—Edson v. Cumings, 52 Mich. 52.

¶ 226. A manufacturer and patentee may be restrained from using a decree fraudulently obtained to the injury of complainant, who was engaged in the manufacture of goods like those made by defendant, and from claiming that the decree was an adjudication upon the merits as to the validity of the patent; where on the case stated defendant is unfairly intimidating trade by it.—Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. Haney School Furniture Co., 92 Mich. 558.

¶ 227. A court of equity has a right to purge its records of an order, obtained by fraud upon it, for the vacation of its decree, and to require notice to an innocent third party who has acquired rights in reliance upon the decree sought to be set aside.—Carlisle v. Carlisle, 96 Mich. 128.

¶ 228. Equity may assume jurisdiction to set aside a judgment procured by fraud, and this is especially true where the court which rendered the judgment is powerless to give relief.—Ewing v. Lamphere, 147 Mich. 659.

¶ 229. A decision of the probate court procured by fraud and collusion is not within the rule that a court of chancery cannot review a decision of the probate court, especially where it is being enforced against one not a party to the probate proceedings. —Babcock v. Babcock, 150 Mich. 558.

¶ 230. The assignee of the rights of other persons to property involved in the probate court cannot rely on fraud committed against his assignor in said probate court, for the purpose of maintaining a bill in equity to set aside the orders and decrees made by said court.—Davis v. McCamman, 168 Mich. 587.

¶ 231. Complainant alleged that after his injuries in defendant's factory he was treated by defendant's physician, who informed him that his injuries were not serious and would not be permanent, and that he would be entirely well in a few months; that defendant's agent represented four hundred dollars to be an adequate sum for his injuries; that relying on these statements he accepted four hundred dollars in settlement of the claim and allowed judgment to be entered for that sum; that instead of recovering he became worse and unable to do any work; that defendant knew he was a minor at the time of the injury and settlement; and that he repudiated the settlement. Held, the bill presented a case entitling the complainant to relief against the judgment.—Barr v. Packard Motor Car Co., 172 Mich. 299.

¶ 232. A court of equity may relieve against fraud, even to the extent of setting aside its own decrees, when founded thereon.—Raniak v. Pokorney, 198 Mich. 567. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 233. Where, after the judgment, statements that it was a mere form to be ignored were made, under such circumstances as to justify the indorser in believing and acting upon them, and in supposing he was not liable, and he was thereby induced to abstain from securing himself when he might easily have done so, until the maker became insolvent, and an execution was then levied upon his property, it was held that he was entitled to a perpetual injunction.—Roberts v. Miles, 12 Mich. 297.

§ 78. Perjury or false testimony.

¶ 234. Equity cannot relieve against a judgment at law on the mere allegation that the successful party committed perjury upon the trial.—Gray v. Barton, 62 Mich. 186.

¶ 235. A court of equity should not grant a new trial because a witness in the suit at law has committed perjury, except where the perjury has been fully established by judicial determination or by written documents.—Cleveland Iron Mining Co. v. Husby, 72 Mich. 61.

¶ 236. Equity will not relieve a party against a judgment at law, and grant a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was obtained by perjury on the part of the prevailing party, after a motion for a new trial has been denied by the court which rendered the judgment, and such denial has been affirmed on appeal.—Codde v. Mahiat, 109 Mich. 186.

¶ 237. Equity will not interfere to restrain the collection of a judgment in an action at law, on the ground that it was obtained by perjury.—Steele v. Culver, 157 Mich. 344.

§ 79. Judgment on premature default.

Judgment by default, see ante § 8.

¶ 238. Both the judgment and the default on which it was based were ordered set aside on mandamus, where the default was entered for want of a plea on the same day that plaintiff filed security for costs in obedience to an order on defendant's motion, such default being premature.—Rankans v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 623.

§ 80. Defenses prevented or not interposed.

See also ante § 75.

¶ 239. A party who has a defense at law, of which he is advised, and neglects to make it, or to apply to equity for a discovery in aid thereof where necessary, comes too late into the supreme court to ask to be relieved against the judgment.—Barrows v. Doty, H. 1; Wright v. King, H. 12.

¶ 240. If a party's ignorance of his defense at law is connected with negligence, and might have been avoided by the use of ordinary means to obtain the necessary information, equity will not relieve.—Wixom v. Davis, W. 15.

¶ 241. Where a defendant was ignorant of the facts which constituted his defense at law pending the suit, or the defense was not available at law, the case forms an exception to the general rule that equity will not interfere to relieve against a judgment at law.—Wales v. Bank of Michigan, H. 308.

¶ 242. Complainants were sureties for another party, for whom defendant had from time to time extended the payment, without their consent, until the principal had become insolvent. Suits being brought against complainants, they appeared and pleaded, and the suits were discontinued; but the witness by whom the defense could be made out having died, suits were again brought and judgments recovered. It was held that complainants were entitled to relief against the judgments.—Mack v. Doty, H. 366.

¶ 243. Where one is induced to become indorser of a note by the statements of the payee that it is mere matter of form, and he will not be troubled about it, and afterwards suit is brought upon the note, and he makes no defense, and judgment is obtained, he is thereafter precluded from claiming that the judgment is not binding upon him.—Roberts v. Miles, 12 Mich. 297.

¶ 244. The jurisdiction to grant new trials in actions at law is exercised by courts of equity only when the judgment recovered is against conscience, and when the applicant had no opportunity to make defense or was prevented from doing so by accident or by the fraud or improper conduct of the opposite party and without fault on his own part. Equity will never interfere where a party under no disability has neglected to make his defense at law.—Miller v. Morse, 23 Mich. 365.

¶ 245. A married woman was sued upon a promissory note which she had signed with her husband, and though personal service was made on her she did not appear, but suffered judgment by default, on which execution was levied. Held, that as she neglected to make her defense at law, and allowed the judgment to stand, she could not maintain a bill in equity to set aside the execution on the ground that she had signed as surety for her husband, and the judgment was void as against her.—Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112.

§ 81. ——Defenses prevented by act or fraud of adversary.

Fraud and collusion as ground for vacating judgment on motion, see ante § 53.

Fraud and collusion as ground for relief, see ante § 77.

Newly discovered evidence as ground, see post § 84.

Fraud and collusion as ground for collateral attack, see post § 97.

¶ 246. Where complainants were prevented from making their defense at law by the act of the plaintiff, until the only witness by whom the defense could be proved was dead, it was held that they were entitled to relief in equity, and that it was not necessary to entitle them to this relief that they should appeal from the judgment at law.—Mack v. Doty, H. 366.

¶ 247. Equity will relieve against a judgment at law where complainant, without neglect or default on his part, was prevented from making his defense at law by defendant's fraudulent conduct.—Burpee v. Smith, W. 327.

§ 82. Neglect, failure or inability to prosecute appeal or error.

Right to have judgment reviewed, see Appeals, I.

¶ 248. A bill to set aside a judgment of restitution alleged that complainants purchased certain land from defendants, paying a part of the purchase price at the time; that upon complainants' failure to make some of the deferred payments, defendants obtained a judgment of restitution; that on the last day allowed for an appeal from said judgment, defendants agreed to take the balance of the purchase money and convey the land to some person to be designated by complainants; that except for this arrangement, complainants would have appealed; that defendants now refuse to proceed further with the matter; that complainant has expended a certain sum of money in making repairs, and that defendants owe complainant a certain sum as rent for a part of a barn on the premises, which defendants have used, and prayed that a decree be entered in favor of complainants for the amount expended on repairs, for rent of the barn, and for rent which complainant has been compelled to pay since the judgment of restitution. Held, that complainants are not entitled to the relief sought.—Anglewicz v. Freda, 150 Mich. 634.

¶ 249. An allegation that the complainant and his attorney were arrested on criminal charges and hence could not take an appeal, is not sufficient ground for a bill of review where the attorney was detained in prison but a few days and the complainant was allowed full freedom of correspondence and leave of absence for business purposes.—Murphy v. Schoder, 126 Mich. 607.

¶ 250. A petition for a bill of review cannot be granted as a substitute for an appeal and an allegation as a ground that the petitioner has lost his right of appeal is not sufficient reason for granting the relief.—Simmons v. Conklin, 129 Mich. 190.

§ 83. Satisfaction or discharge without proper record.

Satisfaction and discharge of judgments, see post XI.

¶ 251. Equity may decree that a judgment has been paid and enforce the rights of parties by injunction against its enforcement or assertion, the fact being that a check given for that purpose and good when given was by collusion caused to be dishonored by nonpresentment until another previously dishonored check was presented and the account exhausted.—Kallander v. Neidhold, 98 Mich. 517.

¶ 252. In a suit by the indorser of a promissory note to restrain the enforcement of a judgment thereon, it appeared that the maker of the note had given a check to the attorney for the judgment creditor for the amount of the judgment, against a fund deposited for that express purpose, and had received from him the note upon which the judgment was rendered, with the indorsement, "Paid by check"; that the check was dishonored upon presentation, because a third person, whom the attorney had informed of the deposit, had presented a check theretofore disallowed, and had obtained the fund. It further appeared that the person obtaining the money was the real party in interest in the original suit, and that the attorney was of his selection. Held, that collection and assignment of the judgment should be restrained.—Kallander v. Neidhold, 112 Mich. 329.

§ 84. Newly discovered evidence.

Defenses prevented or not interposed, see ante § 80.

¶ 253. Chancery will not award a new trial in a suit at law on the ground of newly discovered evidence when the proposed evidence only goes to contradict the evidence given on the former trial in an immaterial point.—Morris v. Hadley, 9 Mich. 278.

¶ 254. Equity will not relieve on the ground of newly discovered evidence, nor will it decree a new trial to enable a defendant to make a defense wholly different from that which he made and failed in on the first bill.—Morris v. Hadley, 9 Mich. 278.

¶ 255. A judgment against an estate will not be set aside in equity merely because of the discovery, subsequent to its rendition, of a receipt from claimant to decedent, where claimant, who took judgment merely for the balance of an account, admitted certain moneys had been paid, and where it was not clear but that the receipt referred to the admitted payment.—Mueller v. Marsh, 116 Mich. 375.

¶ 256. A court of chancery will take jurisdiction of a bill to set aside a judgment at law on the ground of newly discovered evidence only on allegation of new facts, and will not undertake to determine questions which the record of the action at law shows were discussed and adjudicated on the law side of the court.—American Fidelity Co. v. R. L. Ginsburg Sons' Co., 192 Mich. 693.

¶ 257. An equitable remedy against a judgment is not lost by moving for a new trial at law.—Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525.

¶ 258. Complainant, as defendant in a suit at law, handed the summons in that suit to his attorney, who arranged by telephone with the plaintiff's attorney to postpone the return day one week. The clerk of the plaintiff's attorney was not informed of this, and appeared on the return day and took judgment. The defendant's attorney paid no further attention to the suit, and did not appear on the day postponed to. Held, in a bill to set aside the judgment and execution, that complainant's bill did not lie, since he should have appeared on the day postponed to, and have had the judgment set aside.—Weisman v. Newton Beef Co., 154 Mich. 511.

¶ 259. Complainant having filed his bill for relief against judgment at law, and having subsequently sued out a writ of error upon the judgment, he was required to make election in which court he would proceed.—Webb v. Williams, W. 452.

§ 86. Grounds for enjoining enforcement of judgment.

Provisions as to enjoining enforcement of judgment, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 10 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12864 et seq.

¶ 260. In sustaining a bill to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment against a garnishee defendant, it is not necessary to interfere with the judgment against the principal defendant, since the jurisdiction of the equity court may be predicated upon its power and right to act upon the person who wrongfully obtains the judgment.—Steele v. Bliss, 170 Mich. 175.

¶ 261. Where the plaintiff in a garnishment suit assures defendant garnishee that the suit will not be pressed and that defendant need pay no attention to it, and thereafter takes a judgment by default for defendant's failure to file his disclosure, a case for equitable relief against the judgment is presented.—Steele v. Bliss, 170 Mich. 175.

¶ 262. A judgment debtor sought to enjoin the collection of the judgment to the amount of a draft which he had given as collateral security, but which the creditor had failed to collect. It had been accepted merely for accommodation and without funds to pay it, and the drawee had afterward failed. The suit for injunction was brought more than seven years after it had gone to protest, and it was decreed that complainant pay the amount found due on the judgment. Held, that the objection that defendant should have been required to surrender the draft, or, if it were lost, give an indemnifying bond, had no force, especially if raised for the first time in the supreme court.—Compton v. Blair, 46 Mich. 1.

¶ 263. Where the maker of a note, upon which a judgment has been rendered, deposits the amount of the judgment in a bank, and the attorney for the judgment creditors accepts the maker's check on the bank for the amount of the deposit in satisfaction and payment of the judgment, and surrenders the note, and then notifies the original payee, who is the real owner of the judgment, and who holds a dishonored check given by the maker on the same bank for nearly the amount of the deposit, and he presents said check, and it is paid from the deposit, the sureties on the note, against whom the judgment was also rendered, may file a bill to enjoin its assignment or enforcement in advance of any attempt in that direction.—Kallander v. Neidhold, 98 Mich. 517.

¶ 264. Sale of land on execution issued upon an irregular and void transcript of a justice's judgment rendered in a suit wherein summons, it is claimed, had not been served, will be enjoined where the note upon which the judgment was rendered had been surrendered and canceled in consideration of the transfer of a patent right.—Child v. Emerson, 99 Mich. 38.

¶ 265. A decree on mortgage foreclosure for the face of a bond with interest, when the bond is in double the sum owed, is a fraud on defendant's rights and entitles him to an injunction against a sale under such decree.—Scriven v. Hursh, 39 Mich. 98.

¶ 266. Where a law court has entered a judgment pursuant to the settlement of a personal injury suit, a court of chancery has jurisdiction, on the ground that such judgment was fraudulently obtained, to restrain the defendant in the law suit from setting up such judgment as a defense to any action brought by the plaintiff for damages.—Barr v. Packard Motor Car Co., 172 Mich. 299.

Joint maker of note as party to suit to enjoin enforcement of judgment on note, see Injunctions ¶ 356.

¶ 267. To some extent considerations of public policy will govern a chancellor in allowing or disallowing leave to file bills of review.—Pomeroy v. Noud, 145 Mich. 37.

¶ 268. An application for leave to file a bill of review made more than four years after a writ of assistance was awarded will be denied with costs where it appears that the applicant had the defense he wishes to interpose within his knowledge all the time, and that he had never offered to make his adversaries whole by tendering even their disbursements, while he has put them to much expense in defending litigation involving his title and wherein he had been unsuccessful.—Brown v. Napper, 143 Mich. 636.

¶ 269. The court should be slow in granting a petition for leave to file a bill of review where the time for appeal has been allowed to pass.—Simmons v. Conklin, 129 Mich. 190.

§ 88. Bill or complaint.

Petition or bill of review as proper practice to open or amend decree, see also Equity § 225.

Parties complainant and defendant on bill of review, see Equity § 248.

Propriety of bill praying setting aside partition and also order appointing commissioners, see Equity ¶ 290.

Proper bills to obtain relief from decree whose subject-matter has been destroyed pending appeal, see Equity ¶ 944.

¶ 270. If fraud is the ground upon which the aid of equity is asked in relieving against a judgment, it is not sufficient to incorporate in the bill general allegations of fraud, deceit, or misconduct; the specific facts constituting the alleged fraud must be set forth.—Andrews v. Osborn, 159 Mich. 77.

¶ 271. The allegations of a bill of complaint in equity to obtain an injunction against a judgment at law must be positive, explicit, and certain.—Andrews v. Osborn, 159 Mich. 77.

¶ 272. He who invokes equity to set aside a judgment rendered against him in a court of law must show by his bill that he has been diligent in prosecuting his remedy at law, and if he had the opportunity to interpose his defense at law, and failed to avail himself of it, equity will not aid him.—Weisman v. Newton Beef Co., 154 Mich. 511.

¶ 272a. Where, in a bill to restrain the collection of a judgment obtained in a justice's court, the complainant states that the judgment was secured by default, and upon his information and belief the default was due to a mistake of his attorney as to the day the justice suit was adjourned to, no grounds for equitable relief are shown, and a demurrer will be sustained.—Kramer v. Schulte, 154 Mich. 632.

¶ 273. A magistrate before whom a judgment was rendered is not a proper party to a bill to restrain proceedings upon it. But an officer having an execution in his hands still in force is.—Burpee v. Smith, W. 327.

§ 89. Dismissal or relief.

General law as to dismissal of equitable suits, see Equity, X, A.

¶ 274. Where, under a complaint in equity to set aside certain orders and decrees of the probate court with respect to an estate on the ground of fraud, complainant takes no issue with the plea filed by defendant which states the details of the proceeding had before the probate court, shows that each and every matter complained of was before that court, and was heard, tried and determined by it, and the complainants had due notice and knowledge thereof and were represented by counsel in every step of said proceedings, the bill must be dismissed.—Davis v. McCamman, 168 Mich. 587.

¶ 275. A bill in equity to set aside a judgment and sale in attachment is properly dismissed upon evidence that the defendant who was plaintiff in the attachment paid out money to the support of complainant's abandoned children notwithstanding he received the money by an unlawful but bona fide conversion of defendant's property in the first instance but restored the property prior to the attachment.—Finn v. Adams, 138 Mich. 258.

¶ 276. A bill of review of a foreclosure decree is improperly dismissed though nothing is offered which might not have been produced on the foreclosure suit, where it appears that complainant in that suit was a mortgage trustee operating mills and trade enterprises under a mortgage to secure him as indorser, that it was necessary to carry this through some years and to supply money, that he eventually foreclosed and made and rendered accurate reports from which the making of charges now disputed might have been ascertained, but where he did not account as trustee in the foreclosure suit or by any separate suit, and where the legality of his charges was never submitted or passed on by any one learned in the law, and where petitioner is an administrator of the mortgagor and cestui que trust and also his widow suing individually.—Pomeroy v. Noud, 145 Mich. 37.

¶ 277. After granting leave to file a bill of review chancery has power to dismiss it at the hearing thereof, if it then appears contrary to the averments of the bill that there is in fact no new matter or no matter which might not have been produced on hearing of the original bill; and it need not inquire whether the alleged omitted matter would or could have varied the decree rendered.—Pomeroy v. Noud, 145 Mich. 37.

¶ 278. The judge before whom a bill to enjoin the execution of a judgment at law is tried, upon dismissing the bill of complaint and dissolving the injunction, may grant an order for the execution of the judgment in the suit at law; and, if such order is conditional, the appellant must comply with it, or rely upon such protection as is afforded by the statutory appeal bond, which does not continue the protection afforded by the injunction previous to its dissolution.—Hulan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 159 Mich. 605.

¶ 279. On a bill to review a foreclosure decree, where an accounting of his doings under the decree was ordered of the defendant, a trustee under the mortgage and also the person secured thereby, it was ordered that the foreclosure decree be set aside and held void, he having bid in the property, if on the accounting it be found that nothing was due, or being due should be paid to him within a time limited, or alternatively that the decree stand in force.—Pomeroy v. Noud, 145 Mich. 37.

¶ 280. On a bill in the nature of a bill of review by a city which had been omitted as a party from a decree setting aside assessments for local improvements, it is error to dismiss the original bill in addition to vacating the decree to let the city in to defend.—Maxwell v. Auditor General, 125 Mich. 621.

¶ 280a. A judgment in an action of assumpsit was rendered in favor of plaintiffs on December 24, 1910, by a justice of the peace. The docket entry showed that the case was heard and the judgment rendered on December 26, 1910, which latter date was a holiday upon which said justice of the peace was forbidden to hold court. Defendant in said suit moved in the circuit court to vacate the transcript and recall the execution. Pending said hearing plaintiffs filed their bill in equity setting up said facts, alleging that said judgment was rendered December 24, 1910, and was inadvertently entered up as being rendered December 26th, and asked for a decree correcting the docket and transcript accordingly. Held, said bill was properly dismissed, since the docket showing a void judgment, plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law by beginning a new suit.—Orban v. Northwestern Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 169 Mich. 404.

¶ 284. Where the record of a case is questioned collaterally only such objections can be noticed as affect the jurisdiction to dispose of it.—Pettiford v. Zoellner, 45 Mich. 358.

¶ 285. In mandamus proceedings against a supervisor to compel the assessment of taxes to pay a judgment rendered against the commissioner of highways, properly certified to him, and which has been appealed from, vacated or discharged, the only inquiry open was whether the court had jurisdiction.—Commissioner of Highways of Township of Garfield v. Supervisor of Township of Springfield, 77 Mich. 228.

¶ 286. In an action upon a bond given by a party intervening in a log lien suit, which bond is conditioned for the payment of any judgment that might be rendered against the property, neither he nor his sureties can question the validity of the judgment so rendered, unless it is void in whole or in part upon its face.—Gill v. Backus, 108 Mich. 417.

¶ 289. Under 1897 Chancery Rule 27 which provides that no bill of review, "or other bill in the nature of a bill of review" shall be filed without special leave of the court first obtained, a decree cannot be collaterally attacked by an answer in the nature of a cross bill or otherwise impeached collaterally.—Salliotte v. Williams, 130 Mich. 36.

¶ 290. Objections to the validity of the judgment in question in a bill in aid of the execution, constituting a collateral attack upon such judgment, will not be considered.—Morley Bros. v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 690.

¶ 291. The validity of a judgment in attachment, in favor of sureties on a bond who had paid a judgment against their principal, was not subject to attack in a proceeding in aid of execution, where the record showed jurisdiction under the attachment writ and levy, and the declaration contained counts upon which the court had jurisdiction to render a judgment.—Archer v. Laidlaw, 135 Mich. 88.

¶ 292. A defense of bar by former adjudication cannot be avoided by collaterally assailing the former judgment, where the record shows no ground for such an attack.—Hatch v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 184.

§ 91. Persons concluded.

[Note. Collateral attack, so called by strangers to the judgment or decree, presents a question whether the attacking party is in such privity to the judgment as to be bound thereby (see Former Adjudication, V), for if not bound there is nothing to attack; and if bound then the attack is by a privy to the party and is permissible if otherwise within the rules permitting collateral attack. Disability of party to have divorce decree annulled because of his own collusion, see Divorce ¶ 387.

¶ 297. On a bill in aid of execution, and attacking the validity of a receivership on the ground of disqualification of the judge in the receivership proceeding, evidence that the complainant in its suit at law against the defendant acquiesced in the view of the court that a receiver should be appointed, does not show an estoppel or a waiver of the right to attack the receivership in the absence of any evidence that the complainant then knew of the existence of the disqualification.—Davis Colliery Co. v. Charlevoix Sugar Co., 155 Mich. 228.

§ 93. Grounds of attack; invalidity of judgment or decree in general.

Invalidity of judgment entered by clerk without authority, see ante ¶ 95.

Grounds for vacating or modifying judgment, see ante § 51 et seq.

Invalidity arising from fraud or collusion, see post § 97.

Invalidity arising from judge's disqualification, see post § 98.

Errors and irregularities of court possessing requisite jurisdiction, see post §§ 99-110.

Necessity that defect appear upon face of record, see post §§ 115-119.

Exclusion in contempt of questions as to regularity or effect of judgment disobeyed, see Contempt § 33.

Right to make collateral attack after objection made and overruled in court rendering judgment, see also Courts ¶ 302.

Irregularities and defects invalidating execution sales collaterally, see Executions §§ 90-93.

¶ 298. A decree of foreclosure rendered during the infancy of a feme covert who did not come of age until the time for appeal expired was held absolutely void as to her.—Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217.

¶ 299. It is immaterial how fair on its face may be any judgment, order, decree or license of a court when back of it lies an absolute legal impediment to making it.—Eberstein v. Oswalt, 47 Mich. 254.

¶ 300. A stockholder may show, even aliunde the record, as a defense to his liability as a stockholder, that a judgment against the corportion is wholly void.—McBryan v. Universal Elevator Co., 130 Mich. 111.

§ 94. Want of jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction obtained by fraud or collusion, see post § 97.
Nonjurisdictional defects in notice or process, see post § 108.
Evidence to supply jurisdictional defects, see post § 118.
Evidence to contradict record recitals of jurisdiction, see post § 119.
Presumptions as to jurisdiction, see post § 115.
Impeachment of jurisdictional recitals, see post § 117 et seq.
Requisites of jurisdiction, how acquired, scope and subjects, and loss or ouster, see Courts, V.
Jurisdiction as essential to bar or estoppel, see Former Adjudication § 5 et seq.
Right under full faith and credit clause to question jurisdiction of foreign judgments, see Foreign Judgments § 5.

¶ 301. Parties whose interests are prejudiced may always take advantage of want of jurisdiction in the court where the injury occurred.—Gillett v. Needham, 37 Mich. 143; Breen v. Pangborn, 51 Mich. 29; King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194.

¶ 302. Where the want of jurisdiction appears on the record of a court of general jurisdiction the record is a nullity.—Greenvault v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 498; Wilson v. Arnold, 5 Mich. 98.

¶ 303. If, in fact, the subject-matter of a suit was not within the jurisdiction of the state from which the court derives its authority, its judgment is a nullity, and may be so treated everywhere.—People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247.

¶ 304. A failure to comply with statutory requirements where the jurisdiction conferred is special by published notice, and no personal service is obtained, renders the judgment void, and the proceedings may be attacked collaterally.—Nugent v. Nugent, 70 Mich. 52.

¶ 305. A judgment rendered upon withdrawal of plea that was not filed by defendant or in his behalf, but was filed in a suit purporting to have been commenced by a declaration which was not served upon defendant, is void.—Hoffman v. Estate of Pope, 74 Mich. 235.

§ 95. ——Adjudication by court as to its own jurisdiction.

¶ 306. The decision of a circuit judge that he has jurisdiction to hold a probate court—and his ignoring a specific objection is equivalent to such decision—cannot be attacked collaterally, and is final unless appealed from.—Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

¶ 307. If a court act without authority its judgments will be regarded as nullities; and the jurisdiction of a court exercising authority over a subject-matter may be inquired into in every court where the proceedings of the former are relied upon by a party claiming the benefit of such proceedings.—Greenvault v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 498.

§ 96. ——Waiver of jurisdiction.

General rule as to waiving objections to jurisdiction and distinction between jurisdiction of person and jurisdiction in that respect, see Courts § 83.
Waiver of jurisdictional errors on appeal or error, see Appeal § 225 et seq.
Waiver of objections by failure to make same properly and seasonably in trial court for review, see Saving Questions.
Waiver of matter of abatement by pleas in bar, see Pleading, III, XI.

¶ 308. The jurisdiction of a court is admitted where the defendant answers without raising the question, goes to trial upon the merits, and finally compromises the decree rendered by the court which is one within its powers if rightly before it, and he cannot later question it.—Cole v. Cole, 144 Mich. 346.

§ 97. Fraud and collusion.

As ground for vacating judgment on motion, see ante § 53.
As ground for equitable relief from judgment, see ante § 77.
General law of fraud, see Fraud.

¶ 309. Parties and their privies can obtain relief from a fraudulent decree only in a direct proceeding for that purpose, and in the court where the original proceeding was had.—Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109.

¶ 310. The rule, that a plea to the merits waives irregularities in obtaining jurisdiction of the person, has no bearing when the method of obtaining jurisdiction constitutes a fraud upon the court as well as upon the party.—Watkins v. Plummer, 93 Mich. 215.

§ 98. Disqualification of judge.

Estoppel to urge disqualification, see ante ¶ 297.
Disqualification of judge generally, see Courts § 4.
Nullity of order or decree by interested judge, see also Judges ¶ 23.

¶ 311. A decree in a foreclosure suit by a judge who is disqualified for consanguinity or affinity to either of the parties is void, and may be attacked collaterally where the bill was taken as confessed for want of appearance.—Horton v. Howard, 79 Mich. 642.

¶ 312. A party against whom a judgment or decree has been rendered by a judge who was disqualified by reason of relationship to the adverse party, and who has not appeared or consented to such action, is not estopped from questioning its validity, nor need he make such contest by appealing from said decree.—Horton v. Howard, 79 Mich. 642.

¶ 313. The grantee of a purchaser at a foreclosure sale under a decree which was void by reason of the disqualification of the circuit judge who signed it, who does not rely upon such title, but secures deeds from purchasers at sales under subsequent mortgages, is not estopped from questioning the validity of the decree.—Horton v. Howard, 79 Mich. 642.

¶ 314. Judgments and orders made by a disqualified judge may be collaterally attacked, as they are not voidable merely, but void; and the objection as to such disqualification, if not taken before decision is rendered, is available in the appellate court. —Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 149 Mich. 601.

¶ 315. An order entered by a judge who was disqualified to sit in the case is absolutely void, and a subsequent order nunc pro tunc, affirming the first order, made by another judge, does not cure the jurisdictional defect.—Davis Colliery Co. v. Charlevoix Sugar Co., 155 Mich. 228.

¶ 316. A judgment or order rendered or made by a disqualified judge is void.—Sandusky Grain Co. v. Sanilac Circuit Judge, 184 Mich. 126.

¶ 317. The acts of a judge of the Court of Domestic Relations created under the unconstitutional act of 1913 held to be considered as those of a de facto judge, not open to question upon jurisdictional grounds. —Attorney General ex rel. Dingeman v. Lacy, 180 Mich. 329.

§ 99. Nonjurisdictional errors and irregularities.

Attack upon jurisdictional grounds, see ante § 93 et seq.
Fraud or collusion not going to jurisdiction of court, see ante § 97.
Presumptions as to regularity of proceedings, see post § 116.
Noncompliance with rule of court as mere irregularity, see also Courts ¶ 36.

¶ 318. Mere irregularities or errors will not justify the rejection of a collateral judgment offered in evidence; to warrant such rejection its defects must make the judgment jurisdictionally invalid.—Bigalow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

¶ 319. The validity of a decree of foreclosure cannot be attacked collaterally for mere irregularities that do not go to the jurisdiction.—Torrans v. Hicks, 32 Mich. 307.

¶ 320. Proceedings in another court, when introduced collaterally, cannot be questioned for error or irregularities where no jurisdictional defect is alleged against them. —Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 Mich. 150.

¶ 321. A court of law will not in a collateral case review irregularities in the procedure of a court of equity, if they were not jurisdictional.—Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192.

¶ 322. An irregularity is such a defect in legal proceedings as may be waived; a nullity is one that cannot.—Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 469.

¶ 323. Objections to the validity of proceedings involved in a suit cannot be raised in a later case if purposely withheld or reserved in the first one.—Clark v. Wiles, 54 Mich. 323.

¶ 324. Plaintiffs in replevin against whom judgment for return has been rendered are estopped from setting up in defense to suit on replevin bond any infirmity in the proceedings by which they obtained possession. —Jennison v. Haire, 29 Mich. 207.

¶ 325. The special statutory methods of obtaining jurisdiction, where actual notice is not given, stand entirely on their own regularity, and, if not regular, proceedings based on them are nullities. But where personal service has been had, further proceedings are not necessarily fatally defective for all purposes, especially if rights based on them are allowed to become established by lapse of time without resorting to common-law remedies to set such proceedings aside.—Granger v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 44 Mich. 384.

¶ 326. If, in a proceeding to condemn land for public use, the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person, irregularities that were not taken advantage of on appeal cannot be set up in an action of ejectment; the judgment is conclusive.—Tuller v. City of Detroit, 97 Mich. 597.

¶ 327. A judgment in another circuit court, in form on the merits in favor of the defendant, constitutes a complete bar to a subsequent suit on the same cause of action notwithstanding the claim that the plaintiff was not present and introduced no evidence, as such facts cannot be shown in a collateral attack.—Hatch v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 184.

§ 100. ——Sufficiency or validity of cause of action.

Failure to perform conditions precedent, see post § 101.
Merger of cause of action in judgment, see Former Adjudication, IV.

¶ 328. Where a judgment after due service against a married woman is not impeached on error or appeal, its conclusiveness cannot be questioned on account of the invalidity of the cause of action.—Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112.

¶ 329. The presumption of the validity of a judgment cannot be overcome by averments of an answer to a creditor's bill, to the effect that such judgment was obtained upon notes in the giving of which the defendant was grossly swindled, that the defendant was not aware of the trial of the case, and that the complainant and his agents, and attorneys were engaged in a conspiracy against the defendant.—Central Nat. Bank of Cleveland v. Graham, 118 Mich. 488.

¶ 330. A married woman who after being previously served with summons allows a judgment to be taken against her by default upon a note signed by herself and husband cannot, in a suit in equity brought to set aside a levy made under an execution issued on the judgment, attack the judgment as invalid on the ground that the consideration of the note was not for her individual benefit or for the benefit of her estate.—Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427.

¶ 331. A foreclosure decree and sale thereunder cannot be collaterally attacked because of an assignment by complainant not appearing of record and not brought to the court's notice in the former suit.—Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

§ 101. ——Failure to perform conditions precedent.

Sufficiency of cause of action, see ante § 100.

¶ 332. Irregularities anterior to the decree under which the state purchased land for taxes are not open to question in opposition to a petition for a writ of assistance by the purchaser; where no want of jurisdiction in the original proceeding is shown; and accordingly it cannot be urged that the township treasurer made no demand for payment of the tax and made no effort to collect from personal property of the owner as required by Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 46.—Hughes v. Jordan, 118 Mich. 27.

§ 102. ——Objections as to remedy.

¶ 333. The objection that one who holds city bonds cannot put his claim into judgment, but must resort to mandamus to compel an assessment to pay them as they become due, cannot, even if it were valid, be urged for the first time in a proceeding to enforce the judgment.—Hammond v. Place, 116 Mich. 628.

§ 103. ——Misjoinder of actions.

Defects in pleadings as ground for attack, see post § 107.

¶ 334. A judgment in assumpsit is not void because there was an ineffectual attempt in the same proceeding to enforce a mechanics' lien.—Allured v. Voller, 107 Mich. 476.

§ 104. ——Suit brought without leave of court.

¶ 335. A judgment given in a suit at law brought without leave pending foreclosure in chancery is not invalid.—Goodrich v. White, 39 Mich. 489.

§ 105. ——Unauthorized appearance by attorney.

General law as to appearance by attorney, see Appearance.

¶ 336. A judgment, in which an unauthorized attorney appeared for the defendant, can be set aside only by direct attack.—Corbitt v. Timmerman, 95 Mich. 581.

¶ 337. On the record of a federal court judgment showing answer for a defendant by an attorney of the court and consent to the judgment, the jurisdiction is supported by a presumption that the attorney had authority so to appear.—Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286.

¶ 338. The authority of an attorney who appeared for defendants in an action in the circuit court will be conclusively presumed where the judgment in such action is collaterally attacked.—Corbitt v. Timmerman, 95 Mich. 581.

¶ 339. Defendants to a creditor's bill and in aid of execution cannot collaterally attack the judgment at law on which the bill is based on the ground that the attorney filing the appearances for them and representing them at the trial had no authority to act, where defendants have made no motion nor taken steps to have the appearances vacated.—Rohrabacher v. Walsh, 170 Mich. 59.

¶ 340. A judgment of the circuit court cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the attorney who appeared for the defeated party was not authorized to do so; such authority is presumed so far as necessary to give jurisdiction.—Corbitt v. Timmerman, 95 Mich. 581.

§ 106. ——Objections as to parties.

Void foreclosure decree against infant, see ante ¶ 298.

General law as to parties, see Parties.
